And there is no evidence of any hostility to such laws nor indisposi-tion to make such laws in the States which have them not. I know not what States have the most trade-marks. From their affinity to patents and designs it is fair to presume that they are abundant when patents and designs abound. The South has few patents and designs; we are not manufacturers but farmers. Alabama has but 61, being 1 to every 16,344 of her population; Arkansas has but 28, being 1 to every 17,303; Florida has but 9, being 1 to every 20,916; Georgia has but 74, being 1 to every 16,002; Louisiana has but 59, being 1 to every 12,321; Mississippi has but 45, being 1 to every 18,398; South Carolina has but 36, being 1 to every 19,600; Texas has but 142, being 1 to every 5,769; and Virginia has but 107, being 1 to every 11,450.

On the other hand, look at some of the manufacturing States. New York has 2,556, being 1 to every 1,717; Connecticut has 504, being 1 to every 945; and Massachusetts has 1,134, being 1 to every 403. Count out of Massachusetts the women and children and add her proportion of trade-marks, and there will be about one patent or design or trade-mark for every man in her borders. what States have the most trade-marks. From their affinity to patents

Sign or trade-mark for every man in her borders.

But it is not in those States of the South only where there are no such statutes. Neither Colorado, nor Minnesota, nor New Hampshire, nor Rhode Island, nor Wisconsin, nor West Virginia has such laws.

I do not underrate the importance of the trade on non-patentable articles, in medicine, tobacco, or whisky. Nor will I stop to question the value of the trade-marks to their owners. I will not deny their value, to the public; but there is less in that than is claimed. The mass of purchasers trust more to smell and taste in selecting medicine, toof purchasers trust more to smell and taste in selecting medicine, to-bacco, and whisky, or the like, than to trade-marks, so often and so easily imitated that they know not which is genuine. And if they cannot test by their senses because of the goods being covered, &c., they trust to the responsibility of their merchant rather than to the manufacturers' pictures. Certain Turkish merchants "having paid at Lyons for golden fabrics (by order of the Grand Seignior) unwittingly delivered brass to him. He beheaded them." So says Browne in his Law of Trade-Marks (p. 50) and warningly adds: "Thus much for implicit faith in trade-marks."

I admit that an identical law throughout the country would be very convenient for these parties. Uniform modes of conveying and holding property during life and of disposing of it by will might be convenient. Some would like uniform rules for taking testimony uniform actions for debts and injuries, uniform punishment for crimes and the like. But the system of our government is different from

The report by the Committee on Manufactures in favor of this amendment declares:

It is the paramount interest of the Government to protect innocent purchasers of manufactured goods from deceptions, frands, and countless impositions.

That is not true. This Government has naught to do with the protection of purchasers of manufactured goods. It ought not to have; that work properly belongs to the several States.

That report adds:

The interest and safety of all demand that it. [power to protect trade-marks,] along with the power of making war, peace, and treaties; of taxation, regulating commerce, and coining money; of granting patents and copyrights, should be vested in the General Government.

Suffer me to call attention to this effort to give a dignity and importance to trade-marks to which they are not entitled. The proposed amendment is for "the promotion of trade and manufactures," posed amendment is for "the promotion of trade and manufactures," and the report claims that this trade-mark power should stand in the Constitution with patents and copyrights. The Supreme Court in the case first cited said they were entirely distinct, and all recognize the distinction. The author spends a life-time of seclusion and study that he may write a book. He is frequently not rich, but poor; not honored, but despised. A copyright but protects from piracy that which, while it may support him, blesses his race. The scientist or inventor constructs in his brain what no other mind can produce. To perfect his projects costs time and toil. To-day he is buoyant with hope, to-morrow in despair. Capital opposes his innovations; ignorance fights him. He may be driven from home, as was Fourdonier from France, for inventing the paper-making machine, or Jacdonier from France, for inventing the paper-making machine, or Jacquard from Lyons, for improving weaving machinery. It is right that genius should be protected and rewarded. And yet so opposed were our fathers to monopoly that to these benefactors of mankind they gave constitutional protection only for "a limited time," in considgave constitutional protection only for "a limited time," in consideration of public use of their inventions, &c., in all future time.

But what thought or study, what toil or risk, what care or expense to the capitalist was involved in such trade-marks as "the shirt," "exactly twelve yards," "Bismarck," (collars,) "genuine Yankee soap," or "Mrs. Winslow's soothing syrup?" Why should they be protected and forever? However, it may as well be forever, for there is no residuum of good to the public to be abandoned by their authors. Mark! I am discussing the names, not the things. If the things be worth protection they can have it under copyright or patent laws. Nor would I cast a slur upon trade-marks. I recognize their convenience and usefulness. But their friends make them painfully little by contrast when they class them in importance with the power of taxation by which governments live, with war power by which they defend life, and with the power of making peace by which that life is made useful and ennobled.

I have been thus tediously arguing this proposition, not because of any fear of the passage of this resolution. But so important is stability in our Constitution that I would not have public confidence bility in our Constitution that I would not have public confidence jostled by even a considerable following for this proposed amendment. I trespass on your patience with a few familiar facts. The Constitution was signed in September, 1787, ratified by eleven States by the middle of 1789, and later by North Carolina and Rhode Island. In 1789 twelve amendments were proposed. The two first were rejected—one to limit representatives of the people and the other to propose the proposed of the pr prevent an increase of salaries of members of Congress during their term of office. It is a pity this last one was not ratified. The resolution proposing these amendments declared by preamble the reasons for them in this language:

The conventions of a number of the States having at the time of the adoption of this Constitution expressed a desire, in order to prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers, that further declaratory and restrictive clauses shall be added, and as extending the ground of public confidence in the Government will best insure the beneficent ends of its institution.

And what were those amendments ratified? First, freedom of conscience, freedom of the press and of petition for redress of grievsecond, the right to keep and bear arms; third, no quartering ances; second, the right to keep and bear arms; third, no quartering of soldiers on citizens except by prescribed law; fourth, security of persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures; fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth, just compensation for property taken for public use, security of life, liberty, and property by jury trial, due process of law, moderate bail, aid of counsel, and speedy and open deliverance; ninth, "the enumeration of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people;" tenth, "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people." They were ratified by the several States within a year. the several States within a year.

The decision in Chisolm vs. Georgia showed that under the Constitution a sovereign State might be destroyed by the Supreme Court. To prevent such possibility this eleventh amendment placed the States above judicial jurisdiction. It was proposed in 1794 and ratified in 1796. The twelfth amendment fixed the mode of electing our President and Vice-President and of ascertaining the result. It was ratified in 1804. I leave the history of facts which called for these amendments untouched. You know it well. I speak not of their weight ments untouched. You know it well. I speak not of their weight and dignity. Such speaking would be wasted in this presence.

Remember that no one of these amendments enlarged the powers of the General Government; they were to "prevent misconstruction or abuse of its powers." They were "restrictive clauses" and their purpose was "to extend the ground of public confidence in the Government." And thus the fair column stood, based on States and having for its capital the recovered rights of the States and the states. ernment." And thus the fair column stood, based on states and having for its capital the reserved rights of the States and the people, till after our late war. The thunder of cannon did not shake it; fraternal blood did not stain its polish. There it stands to-day in all respects the same save that the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments gave to the slave freedom and elective franchise and to the world a pledge of fidelity to our public debt.

The difficulties thrown in the way of its amendment by the Consti-

The difficulties thrown in the way of its amendment by the Constitution itself and the caution heretofore observed in touching its limitations should make us pause. A start in that direction is feared by all who love our dual system. The United States is strong enough. Let us magnify the States by an honest trust and generous confidence. Let us repeat for each: "The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State, and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled."

These are brave words. Do you recognize the quotation? The Constitution which contains them contained every right guaranteed by the ten amendments just mentioned. Those words have stood un-by the ten amendments just mentioned. Those words have stood unchallenged for a century in the organic law of that grand old Common wealth, whose breast was first bared to British lead at Concord and Lexington, which flashed defiance to British tyranny by the bold signature of John Hancock to the Declaration of Independence, and proudly boasts of that sentiment of her immortal son, "Liberty and Union proposed incorposable proposed for the propo Union, one and inseparable, now and forever."

Let us guard the system of our fathers; the system of sovereign States combined into a Federal Union; the authority of each, absolute in its sphere, working together for the good of the people.

Two such silver currents when they join, Do glorify the banks that bind them in.

I would not detract one iota from the dignity or the power of the United States. In all the attributes of nationality, to it delegated by the Constitution, it is a nation, but with no powers or duties not therein nominated. As such nation, in its orbit, it moves like the sun, grand, majestic, glorious; but out of its orbit, whether by force, legislative or judicial, centripetal or centrifugal, it makes of our system chaos and blazes but to burn.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven o'clock and thirty minutes, Mr. Frost in the chair as Speaker pro tempore. ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. The evening session being fixed for the consideration of business from the District of Columbia Committee, I move the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Burrows in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columb DISTRICT MUNICIPAL CODE.

Mr. BARBER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill what his understanding is in regard to section 132—whether those leasehold estates are to be assessed as personal property or real estate?

Mr. NEAL. As real estate. The succeeding chapter, chapter 2, will give the necessary information.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 134. Real property shall be assessed and valued in the year 1882, and every fifth year thereafter, as herein provided.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a misprint in the second line of section 134. The word fifth ought to be third, so as to correspond with the subgroupent section. I move, therefore, to strike out fifth and insert third.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 138. Each assessor shall, in all cases, from actual view, and from the best sources of information in his reach, determine, as nearly as practicable, the true value of each separate tract or lot of real property in his district in lawful money, and he shall separately estimate the value of all improvements on any tract or lot, and shall note the same in his plat-book, which shall be carried out as part of the value of such tract or lot, and he shall also return the dimensions to each tract or ried out separately.

Mr. NEAL. The object of that is in case that the building should be destroyed the value of the lot could be ascertained from the tax-

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give notice that when the Clerk shall reach chapter 7 I shall offer as a substitute the creation of a board of assessors of taxation in the District of Columbia. The reason is that as we are on the chapter now relating to taxation, and which will be superseded if the amendment I propose is adopted, I desire to give this notice in order that we may reshut off from amending it.

Mr. ATKINS. I think if the gentleman intends to amend this section he should be allowed to come back at any time during the consideration of this portion of the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. I would suggest, in order to facilitate this matter and give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] the fairest opportunity with reference to his amendment, that he may offer this amendment at any part of the tax portion of the bill under consideration, and if the system of taxation which he shall propose as an amendment shall be adopted, then by consent we can go back and make the bill harmonious with the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that will be the understanding.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 130. Each assessor shall, on or before the first Monday of July, 1880, and every third year thereafter, make out and deliver to the commissioners a return in tabular form, contained in a book to be furnished him by said commissioners, of the ownership, amount, description, and value of the real property subject to be listed for taxation in his district. He shall also enter in a separate list a pertinent description of all property exempt from taxation under the provisions of this title, together with the ownership and use of the same, and shall estimate and return the true value thereof. All real property, the ownership of which is not known, shall be returned, as to ownership, "unknown."

²Mr. NEAL. In the second line of this section the year 1880 should be 1882, in order to harmonize with the other dates in this code. I move to amend by substituting "1882" for "1880." If, after we have finished the code, Congress sees fit to make an amendment fixing an earlier date, that would meet my approbation completely.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 142. The collector, treasurer, and three judicious freeholders, to be appointed by the commissioners, shall compose a board of equalization of the real property, and they shall convene at air office, to be provided by the commissioners, on the first Monday of September, 1880, and every third year thereafter. They shall each take an oath fairly and impartially to equalize the value of the real property according to law. Amy four of them shall constitute a quorum, and the treasurer shall act as clerk, and keep a full and accurate account of their proceedings and orders. They shall immediately proceed to equalize the valuation made as aforesaid by the assessors, so that each tract shall be entered upon the tax list at its true value in money; and for this purpose they may raise the valuations of such tracts or lots as, in their opinion, may have been returned below their true value, and reduce the valuation of such as they may believe to have been returned above their true value to such sum as, in their opinion, may be the true value thereof; but they shall not reduce the aggregate value of the real property below the aggregate value thereof as made and returned by said assessors.

Mr. HUNTON. In line 6 of the section instread I move to amend

Mr. HUNTON. In line 6 of the section just read I move to amend by striking out "1880" and inserting "1882." The amendment was agreed to. Mr. TALBOTT. I offer the following amendment:

In line 13, after the word "true," insert the word "cash;" so that it will read, "at its true cash value in money." And after the word "money" add "not looking to a forced sale."

Mr. NEAL. That does not add anything to the force of this provision. The true value in money means of course the true cash value in money.

Mr. TALBOTT. Why, then, not put the word in?

Mr. NEAL. It is not at all necessary. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The two terms are synonymous.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave to suggest to my friend from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] that money is always cash.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from Virginia will find that that is the language employed in nearly all acts assessing the value of property. It means the cash value of the property at the time of an assessment, not looking to a forced sale. If gentlemen all say that that is the meaning intended, why not let those words go in?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think the language here is plain enough to show that the cash value is intended. I do not recollect that in my own State any such phraseology is employed as the gentleman from Maryland desires to insert.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Let the two amendments be presented to the

Mr. PRESCOTT. Let the two amendments be presented to the ommittee separately.

Mr. TALBOTT. The difference is this: Property will sell for more at a credit sale than its true value. "True cash value" is the proper phraseology; and gentlemen will find when they investigate this matter and examine the different acts in all the States of this Union the term "cash value" is used because it puts a cash value and not a the term "cash value" is used because it puts a cash value and not a credit value upon the property.

Mr. BREWER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maryland that if we put in the word "cash" here it will be necessary to go back and put it in all through the chapter, because the term "true value" is used all through in place of "true cash value." If it is desired to define what true value is meant, perhaps that had better be done by a separate section to be inserted hereafter. I think it would not accomplish any good hyperse to not it in here. mot accomplish any good purpose to put it in here.

Mr. ATKINS. My friend from Illinois [Mr. Springer] suggests the term "hard cash." [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBOTT. I withdraw the latter portion of the amendment, which proposes to insert the words "looking to a forced sale," and only ask for the insertion of the word "cash."

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Whatever the idea of the gentleman from Maryland may be in proposing to change the word "money" to the word "cash," I would suggest that the word "cash" is simply a term used by common consent as applicable to a certain kind of transaction and a certain article. But when you speak of the legal money of the United States, you never hear used the term "legal cash" of the United States. In speaking of the legal engreency of the country the United States. In speaking of the legal currency of the country the word "money" is that which is always used.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE. I have an amendment to propose to this section;

but before offering it I would like to know from the gentlemen who have the bill in charge why it is that in the latter clause of the section they provide that in the equalization the aggregate value of the property shall not be returned.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer my friend from Indiana with pleasure. The whole property of the District is assessed at a certain percentage to bring a certain amount of taxation; and when this board of equalization meets, then if some property is assessed too low in proportion to other property, they elevate the one or depress the

Mr. BROWNE. I understand that.
Mr. HUNTON. And it does not matter at all how high the property is assessed if there is a proportionate assessment.

If you and I have to raise a hundred dollars in taxes, and you have ten thousand dollars' worth of property and I have five thousand dollars' worth, it does not matter whether yours is put at $10,000 or $20,000 in the assessment if mine is also put at $5,000 or $10,000, because the percentage will make it all right between us. That is the principle of this bill of assessments.

Mr. RORINSON Laight.

principle of this bill of assessments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I dislike very much to take up any of the time of this committee, because I know gentlemen desire to go forward with this bill as rapidly as possible. But I am troubled about that last clause, the same as is the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE,] and I spoke of it at the last session that we had on this bill.

My friend from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] says that you first determine upon a certain percentage of tax to be imposed. Then, if you get the valuation assessed too high upon any particular piece of property you may reduce it, but you shall not reduce the aggregate value of the property below the valuation fixed by the assessors. Now, unless I am all wrong about this matter of taxation and assessment, it is done something in this way: there is a certain sum of money to be is done something in this way: there is a certain sum of money to be raised by taxation; we will say that the sum of $200,000 is to be raised by taxation. There is the property of this District upon which you are to assess that amount of taxation, that sum of $200,000.

In the first place the assessors will fix a valuation upon my house, upon your house, upon the houses of my neighbors, upon all the stores, &c.; upon the real estate and then upon the personal property; and in that way they will make up the entire aggregate valuation of the District. And the proportion that the amount to be raised by taxation bears to the whole valuation determines the percentage.

by taxation bears to the whole valuation determines the percentage. That, I suppose, is a very familiar matter of practice.

Now I desire to ask the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] a minute to this. He says that if the assessors rate my house at too high a valuation they may reduce it, provided, however, that they shall not reduce it if by so doing it will tend to reduce the aggregate valuation which they have fixed upon the property of the entire District. Is that it?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is it.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is it.

Mr. NEAL. That is not it.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is it.
Mr. NEAL. That is not it.
Mr. ROBINSON. One gentleman says "that is it," and one says "that it is not it." Now, I want to find out what it is.
Mr. NEAL. I can tell the gentleman.
Mr. ROBINSON. I would be very glad if the gentleman would do so.
Mr. NEAL. The District of Columbia is divided into ten sub-dis-Mr. NEAL. The District of Columbia is divided into ten sub-districts, and each of the sub-districts has an assessor, who is sworn to appraise the property of his district at its true value in money. Now if these assessors should make a mistake and should appraise the property of the gentleman from Massachusetts a little too high and appraise my property a little too low, they will equalize it by taking it off him and putting it on me. If one of the assessors, in the opinion of this board of equalization, should appraise the property in his ion of this board of equalization, should appraise the property in his district at too low a rate of valuation, they will add to it, and take it off the other sub-districts. In that way they will equalize the valuation of the property all over the District of Columbia.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Suppose they do not find anything to add to.

Mr. NEAL. They will find it. They will take the whole property of the District and ascertain from all the information they can obtain what the valuation should be, and level it up and level it down as more becoming the second of the continued.

what the valuation should be, and level it up and level it down as may be required.

Mr. DUNNELL. Keeping the aggregate the same.

Mr. NEAL. If you should allow these gentlemen to reduce the aggregate valuation, the consequence would be that the property-owners all over the District would be appealing to them from day to day to reduce the valuation on their property.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is always a difficulty about taxation. People are unwilling to have taxes put on them, and I suppose the assessors will not have a welcome duty to perform.

Now, throwing out of view entirely any complaints or difficulties that may arise, you want to get at the cash value of the property; that is what you are after. How will you fix it?

There is the market value of the property, the cash value, the value in money of the houses and of the lands in this District. Let the assessors determine that value. If it is found that they have put my property $5,000 or $10,000 too high I have a right to have the valuation reduced to the proper amount. I am not to be deprived of that because they have fixed some other valuation in such a way that they cannot reduce mine without reducing the aggregate. That would be an absurdity. They can only tax me what is the true value in money of my property. They have no right to tax me on a valuation of $10,000 more than I am worth because they have made a blunder somewhere else. blunder somewhere else.

Again, it is said that they must equalize it by putting on the valuation of other property what they take off mine. Not at all. My neighbors Jones and Smith do not want the $5,000 or $10,000 taken from my valuation put on theirs. They would complain of that. Nobody wants the extra sum put on his valuation.

Mr. WILBER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.
Mr. WILBER. Suppose that in these districts where the assessors assess the valuation of the property—I suppose each one assesses in his own district—suppose that one assesses the property in his district at a much lower rate than the assessor of another district assesses the property in his district. If the one assesses at a much lower rate than the other we want it equalized so that each district will be assessed although the control of the will be assessed alike.

Mr. NEAL. That is it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot see the least difficulty even with the tendistrict system. If the valuation as made upon the property of any individual is too much or too little, let it be rectified by this board; that is, bring it up or carry it down to the true value. This is the common sense of the thing.

Mr. WILBER. Furthermore, suppose the assessments are not uniform in the same district, let the board of equalization correct that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, is there any amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. BROWNE. In order, then, that we may have a question properly before the committee, I move to amend by striking out all after the word "thereof," in the nineteenth line, to the end of the section. The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend by striking out at the end of the paragraph the following words:
But they shall not reduce the aggregate value of the real property below the aggregate value thereof as made and returned by said assessors.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. It is very evident that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] misapprehends the purpose and effect of this section. In the first place it applies to real estate only. If the assessment of any man's property is too high or too low, it is so only by comparison with the real estate of his neighbor. It makes no difference to a man if his property is assessed at twice It makes no difference to a man if his property is assessed at twice the amount it ought to be, provided every other man's property in the District is assessed in the same proportion.

Mr. ROBINSON. But suppose the personal property is also assessed

Mr. ROBINSON. But suppose the personal property is also assessed too high?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. This has nothing to do with personal property. This question relates solely to real estate; the question of personal property is not involved in any way. If the object of the Government is to raise a certain amount of taxation, say $1,500,000 upon a valuation of $100,000,000, it makes no difference to the tax-payer, so long as the assessment is equal, whether the real estate of the District be assessed at $100,000,000 or $150,000,000.

Mr. SIMONTON. But suppose the assessment of real estate is so high as to pay, at the rate of taxation fixed upon, the whole amount of taxas required?

of taxes required?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Then, let the rate of taxation be reduced. But that is not possible, because personal property is taxed also; and that is taken into consideration in making up the assessalso; and that is taken into consideration in making up the assessment. It is supposed that these assessors will come very near the actual value of all this property. They are to be selected for this purpose, sworn to perform their duty; and it is expected they will come very near to the proper value in all cases. But if one man's property should be assessed too high by comparison with the property of his neighbors, or one district should be assessed too high in comparison with other districts, the board of equalization will change the relative position of those persons or districts, leaving the aggregate inst the same

Mr. SAMFORD. Let me ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. Aldrich, of Rhode Island] a question which my other colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Neal.,] did not answer. I understand that under this system it is entirely possible to assess the real estate of the District far above its true value.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. It is not possible.

Mr. SAMFORD. What, then, is the force of the gentleman's argument when he says it makes no difference (provided the assessment be equalized) whether it is twice the value of the property or one-half

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I say it makes no difference in its effect upon the tax-payer; but it is not possible under this system, because we suppose that the assessors will use ordinary care and judgment in making their assessments.

Mr. SAMFORD. Yet, by a previous section the assessor is required under oath to return the property at its true value.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Certainly, that is the duty of the assessor pat of the board of equalization.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Certainly, that is the duty of the assessor, not of the board of equalization.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then the board of equalization must come along and reduce the assessment where it is too high. Now, the inconsistency of the system is right here: the intention is to require the people of this District to pay one-half of the money necessary to carry on the expenses of the Government. That is the object of the law. Furthermore it is unlawful for the authorities of the District to adopt a higher rate of taxation than 1½ per cent. Now, if the true value of the property in the District does not raise a million and a half of dollars, which is the amount the District authorities must raise to carry on the Government, then according to the gentleman's argument the valuation of the property must be raised so that the tax of 1½ per cent. will bring in a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I have made no such statement.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I have made no such statement. The gentleman takes an arbitrary sum which he assumes to be necessary to meet the expenses of the District.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is it not the estimate that the aggregate amount of money to be expended by the District authorities shall be $3,000,000, of which the General Government shall pay one million and a half, and the people of the District the other million and a half?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I will agree that the people of the District cannot be assessed at a higher rate than 1½ per cent. upon the valuation of their property. If that rate of taxation does not bring in the requisite sum of a million and a half of dollars, which the gentleman undertakes to say will be required for the expenses of the District, then those expenses must be reduced or—man undertakes to say will be required for the expenses of the District, then those expenses must be reduced or—

Mr. SAMFORD. Of course I say that.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The organic act must be changed to allow the rate to be raised.

Mr. SAMFORD. You stated my position correctly at first.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. Browne's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 143. The three freeholders appointed, as aforesaid, members of said board of equalization, shall receive as compensation for their services the sum of $5 per day.

Mr. TALBOTT. I wish to offer an amendment to that section. In the act there is no time prescribed when this board of equalization shall finish its duties, and, therefore, I move to add at the end of the section, "and shall complete said equalization within a period of six months from the date of their organization as a board of equalization."

My object in that, Mr. Chairman, is this: this act is silent as to when the labors of this board shall be completed. You create and appoint three officers, at $5 a day each, and do not say when they shall finish their labors. I do not care whether it is ninety days or six months, but I put in six months, and the House can name any other period it sees proper; but some time should be fixed within which the duties of this board should be completed. As I have said, you can make it ninety days if you choose. In my State we had a reassessment of property, and we had a board of review in our county, and when they could not complete their labors within ninety days the governor had to extend the time, but that was owing to the fact we had different assessors in each election district, having in all thirteen election districts. They came in there, for instance, and one set of assessors on one side of the road would assess property at $200 an acre, and the others directly opposite would assess if at $75 an acre; and so it was all over the county, and they could not possibly complete the labor of equalization within ninety days, and therefore the time had to be extended by the governor. My object in that, Mr. Chairman, is this: this act is silent as to when extended by the governor.

Now, while I do not approve this act, I do not propose to fight it.

If you appoint three competent men of the District of Columbia, who should take into consideration the assessment of all property and go should take into consideration the assessment of all property and go from one end to the other, and give them a year to do it in, you would have then a most perfect system of taxation, and it would be more nearly equalized than you ever could get it—than to have ten assessors and a board of review afterward. If you are going to have this board of review, it is no more than right and proper you should fix some limit of time when they should complete their duties.

Mr. NEAL. There is not the least probability, Mr. Chairman, this board of equalization will be in session at any one of these triennial periods for a longer time than thirty days. The work which is required of them can be done in that time easily. The committee did not think it worth while to put this limitation upon them, because they are required by the law forthwith to go to work to do it. There are three of them who are each to receive compensation at the rate of $5 a day, and the other two are to discharge their duties as part of of $5 a day, and the other two are to discharge their duties as part of of so a day, and the other two are to discharge their duties as part of the duties of the office for which they receive a salary. I have no objection if the committee think it best to put a limitation upon them as to the time, but let it be a great deal shorter time than six months. Sixty days is the longest time which should be allowed, and thirty days is ample for every practical purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Say not exceeding sixty days.

Mr. NEAL. I move to strike out "six months" and insert "not exceeding sixty days."

Mr. TALBOTT. That is acceptable to me. The only thing I wish to do is to prescribe some limit within which the work is to be done.

Mr. BROWNE. I guarantee, if you put the limit at sixty days, they will sit sixty days and draw pay for the whole time.

Mr. WILBER. Let the gentleman withdraw his amendment and make it thirty days.

Mr. NEAL. I will make it thirty days if that be acceptable to the

Mr. HUNTON. Do not put it below sixty days.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will not accept below sixty days, but I am satisfied they can do it before then.

Mr. NEAL. Very well, then, put it, not exceeding sixty days.

Mr. NEAL's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEAL's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. Talbott's amendment, as amended, was then adopted.
Mr. ATKINS. I do not wish to try to amend the bill, because I am satisfied it has been carefully examined by the committee, but I ask whether they do not think it better to amend, instead of "per day," by inserting the words, "for each day of actual service."
Mr. NEAL. That is all right.
Mr. ATKINS. Then I move, instead of the words "per day," that the words "for each day of actual service" be inserted.
Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the committee again if they do not think it takes quite as valuable and quite as competent a man to be an assessor as it takes to be a freeholder on this board of equalization, an assessor as it takes to be a freeholder on this board of equalization, and why it is, therefore, that they put the pay of one at $4 a day and the freeholder at $5 a day? I do not propose to offer an amendment to that effect; I only ask for information.

Mr. HUNTON. The committee thought, after mature consideration, that this arrangement was proper.

Mr. DUNNELL. I rose when the gentleman from Tennessee did to move an amendment by striking out "five" and inserting "four" in that section, and I have merely to say, what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has said, that the assessor should be as good a man as there is in the city, as good a man as the freeholder, and that he should be paid $5 if the freeholder is to be paid $5 who is to sit on this board of equalization. Four dollars a day is the average pay for like services elsewhere, and I think that is sufficient.

Mr. BROWNE. I understand that this board of equalization will meet once in every three years and to be engaged for a period of

Mr. BROWNE. I understand that this board of equalization will meet once in every three years and to be engaged for a period of about thirty days. The gentleman's amendment, therefore, is in the interest of economy, as it will save the District the sum of $30 a year.

Mr. SPRINGER. Oh, no; more than that.

Mr. HUNTON. It will be $30.

Mr. BROWNE. It will be $30 a year, for they only meet once in three years, unless my arithmetic is all wrong. I think if you can get persons competent for this duty at $5 a day it should be paid, and is low enough.

Mr. ATKINS. I am a great advocate of economy, as is well known.

Mr. ATKINS. I am a great advocate of economy, as is well known, but I did not make the motion in this case to reduce the amount. The gentleman from Minnesota, who made it, may defend his own amendment

Mr. DUNNELL. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I do not undertake to say that a man may not earn his $5 a day as one of the board of equalization, but I simply insist that there should be harmony and consistency in the bill. Four dollars a day for an assessor and $5 a day for an equalizer is proposed in this bill. Now, I cannot see why a better man should be required for the one service than the other. The assessors do the work but once in three years; I do not other. The assessors do the work but once in three years; I do not know how long a time it will take, but they make the valuation but once in that period of time. I think, too, that it is a very sad defect in the law that a man building, say, one year immediately after the assessment, his property should run for two years without being assessed at all

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. Provision is made in the bill for the valuation of all new structures every

Mr. DUNNELL. Very well; I accept the statement, and I will confine myself to the amendment. I think the assessor should be paid as much as the equalizer. That is my amendment.

Mr. HENKLE. Mr. Chairman, in reference to this subject—
The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HENKLE. Then I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HENKLE. Then I move to strike out the last word.

To my mind the reason why these gentlemen who are to supervise, readjust, and equalize the assessments should be paid more than the others is self-evident. The men who make the assessments of the property in the various sub-districts are required and expected to be familiar with the property in this particular district, and with its value and other circumstances connected with it. But those who are to equalize, to review, and readjust the whole system have to review the work in the whole District of Columbia, and they are necessarily required to be men of larger experience and greater executive ability, and their labors are more onerous, and it is evident to me, at least, that they should be paid a higher rate per day for that service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota to strike out "five" and insert "four."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I should like to hear that section read as it has been amended.

The section was again read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 144. The valuation of the real property made and equalized as aforesaid shall consitute the basis of taxation for the next succeeding period of five years, and until another valuation is made according to law.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, there is a misprint in this section. The word "five" in the third line of the section should be "three." I move to amend it by making it "three" instead of "five."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

CHAPTER III.

THE LISTING OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.

SEC. 145. Every person of full age and of sound mind shall, when required by the proper officer, list at its true value in money the personal property of which he is the owner, and all moneys in his possession, all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him as agent, attorney, or on account of any other person, company, or corporation whatsoever, and all moneys deposited subject to his order; and all credits, certificates, and other evidences of debt, due or owing from any person, body corporate or politic, whether in or out of the District, all money loaned on pledge or mortgage of real estate, although a deed or other instrument may have been given for the same, if between the parties the same is considered as surety merely. The property of every ward shall be listed by his grandian; of every minor child, idiot, or lunatic having no guardian, by his father, if living; if dead, by the person having the property in charge.

Mr. PRICE I would like to ask some gentlemen from the com-

Mr. PRICE. I would like to ask some gentleman from the committee what is meant by that? I see that that list embraces all the moneys and credits that a man has. Now, suppose he has $10,000 and moneys and credits that a man has. Now, suppose he has $10,000 and he owes $5,000, is there any provision made for that?

Mr. NEAL. Provision is made in this chapter further on for the deduction of his debts. I wish to say to the gentleman from Iowa and all other persons present that this code is perfect.

Mr. PRICE. Then I may be permitted to say to my friend from Ohio that it is the only perfect thing I have ever been able to find.

Ching that it is the only periest thing I have ever been able to find.

[Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. I am glad to be able to say to the gentleman then that he has at last been able to find one perfect thing.

Mr. PRICE. Notwithstanding that this is a "perfect" production, mortals like myself might think this provision ought to come in here.

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman will sit down and wait he will see that it comes in better where it is.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move to amend this section of this "perfect" document by striking out the word "surety" where it occurs in the thirteenth line, and inserting the word "security," so that it will read:

If between the parties the same is considered as security merely.

Mr. McMILLIN. "Security" is the proper word.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I think the word "security" is the proper one, and the amendment is correct.

one, and the amendment is correct.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to strike out the last word merely to say that according to the view suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Neal] we skould all hold our peace until we get through the bill, and not avail ourselves of any opportunity of making or offering an amendment. I submit that is not quite fair to us. We might as well go home and let the District Committee sit down and praise themselves for this "perfect" bill. If it is all right let us know it in advance that we may pass it and go home. If this is a perfect volume I do not know how we can offer amendments to it. [Laughter.] I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 146. The commissioners shall, on or before the first Monday of April of the

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 146. The commissioners shall, on or before the first Monday of April of the year 1880, and every year thereafter, divide the District into convenient sub-districts for the listing of personal property mentioned in the preceding section, so that the entire District may be assessed in a period of twenty days, and shall appoint a suitable person as assessor for each of said sub-districts. Each appointe shall, within five days after being duly notified of said appointment, give bond, with security to the acceptance of the commissioners, in the sum of $1,000, that he will well, faithfully, and impartially discharge all the duties devolved upon him by law, and shall moreover take an each of office. If any person so appointed shall fail to give the bond, or take the eath within the time aforesaid, his appointment shall be void, and the commissioners shall, without delay, appoint some other suitable person to assess such sub-district; and the person so appointed shall qualify as aforesaid.

Mr. NEAL. When this code were such sub-district of the second sub-district is an experience of the person so appointed shall without delay, appoint some other suitable person to assess such sub-district; and the person so appointed shall qualify as aforesaid.

Mr. NEAL. When this code was prepared it was supposed we could have it enacted into law before the first Monday of April. It will now be necessary to change the date in the second line of this section. We might either change the month or the year. I suggest that we pass this over informally until we find out what progress we

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I suggest this bill will not become law till the 1st of July anyway, and you might as well change the

Mr. NEAL. Then I move to amend by inserting "1881" in place of "1880."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to amend by striking out the latter part of the section, commencing at the beginning of line 13, namely, these words:

If any person so appointed shall fail to give the bond, or take the oath within the time aforesaid, his appointment shall be void, and the commissioners shall, without delay, appoint some other suitable person to assess such sub-district; and the person so appointed shall qualify as aforesaid.

This provides that the appointment shall be void if the party fails to give his bond. We have already, on pages 5 and 6, made a general provision as to all officers, and it is unnecessary to repeat it here.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill one question: Why have you two sets of assessors, one set for the assessment of real property and another for the assessment of personal property? Why could not one assessor, when he visits a property, attend to the whole matter of assessment at once?

Mr. BROWNE. I rise to a question of order. I want to know what is before the committee for discussion.

is before the committee for discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] to strike out the latter portion of the section.

Mr. NEAL. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] briefly. The assessment of real estate is made once in every three years. The assessment of personal property is made every year. These assessors will be appointed each year for the duties which are devolved upon them. One man may be a very competent person to assess real estate and not a competent person to assess real estate and not a competent person to assess real estate and not a competent person to assess personal property; and vice versa. It was thought best, therefore, that the commissioners should have the power if they saw fit not to appoint the same set of men, but to appoint different sets of men for the discharge of these separate and distinct duties. The question being taken on Mr. Hunton's amendment, it was not

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 149. Any person who is called upon to list property, and who may claim to have none, either on his own account or for others, subject to taxation, shall be required by the assessor to make oath to the truth of his claim in that behalf. The listing of the property of a corporation shall be made by the president, secretary, or other principal officer thereof. Any person who is called upon to list property, and who may claim that said property is exempt because of its being properly taxed in some State or Territory of the United States, shall, nevertheless, answer all and singular the interrogatories of said inventories, and shall attach to the affidavit the further statement that all of said property is not subject to taxation by reason of being taxed elsewhere, stating specifically the place where taxed.

Mr. BARBER. I offer the following amendment:

In line 3, strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may;" so that it will read:

"Any person who is called upon to list property and who may claim to have none, either on his own account or for others, subject to taxation, may be required," &c.

If this amendment is not made, the assessors would be required to put every man in the District on the roll.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly; that is what I want.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BARBER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. If this bill is so perfect as he represents it to be, why is it a protest against its passage has come in from the citizens of the Distinct purposed to increase the company of the Distinct purposed to the trict numerously signed?

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 153. The shares of capital stock of national banks shall be included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares at their real value in money. When the owner or holder is a non-resident, or is absent from the District, or neglects or refuses to make true return thereof, the cashier, president, secretary, or other principal officer of the national bank in which such stock is held, shall make such return.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, a question. I find in the old copy of this bill, the only one I have examined heretofore, the two sections numbered 153 and 154 included in one section which in the old bill is numbered section 153. I have no recollection of that section 153 having been changed to two sections in the committee.

I desire further to ask why upon the shares of capital stock of national banks the individual owners or holders are taxed; whereas in the case of all other corporations, including banks in the District, the tax is not levied against the individual owner. What is the object of making that change?

Mr. HUNTON. The reason is that the national-bank law requires the bank shall not be taxed and you have to tax the holders of the capital stock.

Mr. SAMFORD. I withdraw the amendment. The Clerk read the following:

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 155. Every company, association, or person not incorporated under any law of the United States for banking purposes, who shall keep an office or other place of business, and engage in the business of lending money, receiving money on deposit, buying and selling bullion, bills of exchange, notes, bonds, stocks, or other evidences of indebtedness, with a view to profit, shall be deemed a bank or banker within the meaning of this chapter; and all such banks and bankers shall annually, on or before the first Monday of May, make out and return to the treasurer, under oath of the owner or principal manager thereof, a statement setting forth—First. The average amount of the notes and bills receivable discounted or purchased in the course of business by such bank or banker, and considered good and collectible.

chased in the course of business by such balls of balls of balls.

Second. The average amount of accounts receivable.

Third. The average amount of cash and cash items in possession or in transit.

Fourth. The average amount of all kinds of stocks, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness held as an investment, or in any way representing assets.

Fifth. The average amount of real estate at its assessed value, describing the accounts.

Eighth. The amount of capital paid in or employed in such banking business, together with the number of shares or proportional interest each shareholder or partner has in such association or partnership.

From the aggregate of the first five items enumerated, the said treasurer shall deduct the aggregate sum of the fifth, sixth, and seventh items, and the remainder thus obtained shall be entered upon the books of the collector in the name of such bank or banker, and shall be subject to taxation the same as is provided for other personal property.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me call the attention of the committee to the last paragraph of this section, which reads:

From the aggregate of the first five items enumerated, the said treasurer shall deduct the aggregate sum of the fifth, sixth, and seventh items, &c.

Why is the fifth item put in and then taken out?

Why is the fifth item put in and then taken out?

Mr. NEAL. I will state to the gentleman the object is that there may appear in this return a full statement of all the property of the bank or banker. The committee will observe that the fifth item relates to the real estate of the bank or banker. That real estate being included in this return, and being otherwise taxed, must of necessity be taken out of the whole return in order to determine what amount of property the bank or banker has liable to taxation under this section other than the real estate. It is only to make the statement comtion other than the real estate. It is only to make the statement complete and perfect in the first instance, showing all the property of the bank. Then this fifth item is deducted, because it is already taxed in the shape of real estate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then the gentleman means to say that it would be the same as if it read "from the aggregate of the first four items enumerated, the said treasurer shall deduct the aggregate sum of the sixth and seventh items?"

Mr. NEAL. Yes.
Mr. HUNTON. The result is the same.
Mr. ROBINSON. Of course the result is the same.

Mr. NEAL. And this does no harm.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 157. Every agency of an insurance company duly incorporated, the principal office of which is located beyond the District of Columbia, shall return to the treasurer, in the month of April, annually, the amount of the gross receipts of such agency, less the losses paid in the District during the next preceding year. The remainder shall be entered upon the tax-list and be subject to taxation as other personal property.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Neal] a question. I understood that in the Committee on the District of Columbia there was an amendment offered and adopted to this section to insert after the word "District," in the second line of the section, the words "and street railroads in said District." I would inquire of the gentleman if those words were not inserted?

Mr. NEAL. The section just read has reference only to insurance commanies companies.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am reading from section 157 of the old bill.

Mr. NEAL. That is section 158 of this bill, the next section.

Mr. SAMFORD. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BAKER. In the first line of this section the word "agency" should be stricken out and the word "agent" inserted. It is a person and not a thing that is to make the return required by this section.

Mr. HUNTON. I think my friend is mistaken in that.

Mr. BAKER. Oh, no, sir; I can hardly be mistaken. An agency as such cannot make a return; the return is made by the agent who has charge of the agency.

Mr. HUNTON. The difficulty with the gentleman's amendment is this: if there were a half a dozen agents of one company in this dis-

Mr. BAKER. Why should not every man who has charge of an agency for an insurance company, even if there be a dozen of them in the city of Washington, give an account of his gains? It seems to me that every agent who has control of the business of a company should make a return.

The amendment of Mr. Baker was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. Baker was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. In line 5 the word "such" before the word "agency" should be changed to "his," since the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] was adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I would suggest that the amendments which have been made to this section render necessary another amendment. As the section now reads, each agent must make return in the district of the gross receipts of his agency "less the losses paid in the District during the next preceding year." In that way the losses might be deducted many times over. The words "by him" should be inserted after the word "losses," if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Baker] is to stand. Then the section would read, "less the losses paid by him in the District during the next preceding year."

The amendment of Mr. Lapham was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. LAPHAM was agreed to. The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 158. Railroad companies whose principal offices are located beyond the District shall be taxed upon their real and personal property situated within the District as other property is taxed; and in the valuation of the real property shall be included public grounds occupied by said railroad companies, together with improvements thereon made by said companies, the tracks which may be laid in any of the avenues, streets, or other highways of the District, together with the value of the use of such streets and highways for the purposes used by said railroads: Provided, Where, by the act of Congress incorporating any such railroad company, a different mode of taxation is prescribed, the provisions of this section shall not apply.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move to insert after the words "located beyond Mr. SAMFORD. I move to insert after the words "located beyond the District" the words "and street railroads in said District." I understand that was the amendment agreed upon in the Committee on the District of Columbia. My copy so shows, though I may be in error. The latter part of this section would seem to imply very clearly that such an amendment was adopted. I do not know that any railroad company has ever been incorporated by act of Congress except street railroad companies; certainly no railroad company whose office is located beyond the District has ever been incorporated by act of Congress. The latter part of this section reads:

Provided, Where, by the act of Congress incorporating any such railroad company, a different mode of taxation is prescribed, the provisions of this section shall

Now, unless street railroad companies are included in this section, I do not see the application of that proviso, because no other railroads in this District have been incorporated by act of Congress. I understand that railroad companies whose lines run into this District from beyond it are incorporated by State laws.

Mr. NEAL. If the gentleman from Alabama will examine section 154 he will find that the state of the

154 he will find that ample provision is there made for taxing street railroads. That section is as follows:

The capital stock of all other corporations not exempt by any of the provisions of this chapter shall be returned to the assessor at its true cash value by the cashier, president, secretary, or other principal officer thereof, but from such valuation shall be first deducted the appraised value of any property in the District which may be separately taxed against said corporation, &c.

Mr. SAMFORD. Let me ask the gentleman whether or not it is intended to tax the street-railroad companies for the use of the streets over which they run?

Mr. NEAL. We tax the capital stock of the street-railroad companies, as of all corporations incorporated and doing business in the District. This section 158 applies to only two railroad companies, the Baltimore and Ohio and the Baltimore and Potomac. Now, the charter of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company provides that the taxes assessed against their property shall go for a specific pur-

Mr. SAMFORD. Let me ask the gentleman whether either of these companies is incorporated by act of Congress?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly not; their principal office for doing business is outside of the District.

Mr. SAMFORD. What do you mean, then, by your provise?

Mr. NEAL. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad is chartered, so far as the District of Columbia is concerned, by act of Congress.

Mr. SAMFORD. That is what I asked.

Mr. NEAL. And the Baltimore and Obio Railroad Company is also

Mr. NEAL. And the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is also chartered by act of Congress. But by the charter of the Baltimore chartered by act of Congress. But by the charter of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company the taxes levied upon their property go to a specific fund, and not to the general fund of the District. Now, it was claimed by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company that they were not subject to the general tax laws of this District, that they must be taxed under the provisions of their charter in the same manner as they are taxed in the State of Maryland. This proviso was put in here to guard against litigation growing out of claims which might be made by the commissioners and resisted by the officers of these companies. cers of these companies.

Mr. SAMFORD. I shall not insist upon my amendment if members of the committee are opposed to it; but my recollection was that it was the intention to levy a tax upon these companies for that portion of the street used by them as a road-bed, just as is done in the case of steam railroad companies. However, if the committee did not so understand, I will not press the amendment.

Mr. NEAL. The reason of taxing the capital stock of street-railroad companies was because, in the opinion of the sub-committee at any rate, and I think of the majority of the committee, we would thus get a larger valuation as the basis of tax than by taxing their real estate, because it is notorious that real estate is almost always undervalued in a tax assessment.

Mr. BARBER. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Do the committee propose to include public grounds in the valuation of the real property of a railroad company? If so, are the committee satisfied that we have the constitutional power to do so?

Mr. NEAL. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company has now the use of about two hundred thousand dollars' worth of public property; and the terms of their charter provide that Congress may, if it sees fit, tax this.

Mr. BARBER. Tax our own property?

Mr. NEAL. Tax it because the company is using it, just as we tax the Washington Market Company on property belonging to the Gov-the Washington Market Company on property belonging to the Government but used by the company.

Mr. BARBER. Has the committee considered the question of our power to tax a corporation for property which it does not own?

Mr. NEAL. I say that this right is expressly reserved in the act incorporating the company.

Mr. BARBER. (This is certainly a very strange proposition.

Mr. SAMFORD. I am informed by gentlemen of the committee that they think the taxation of the stock of these street-railroad companies is sufficient. I do not desire to set up my judgment against that of the committee. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend by striking out the proviso of the pending section. This proviso, as I understand, is for the benefit of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. It seems to be understood that by some supposed act of Congress this company is entitled to a better mode of being taxed than other property-holders of the District. It is claimed, I believe, that the company has a charter from Congress which provides that it shall be taxed in accordance with the laws of Maryland. ance with the laws of Maryland.

Mr. NEAL. I said they claimed that. I do not say that is the fact. Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am not willing to allow that claim. If the company has a charter from Congress, Congress has reserved the right company has a charter from Congress, Congress has reserved the right to alter or amend it at pleasure as to taxation or anything else.

Mr. HUNTON. Let me say to my friend that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has waived that exemption, and settled its taxes.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Very well, my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. NEAL. Because the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has a special provision in its charter.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. My amendment is to strike out the proviso. If the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company have a benefit over and above all other real-estate holders in this District, then it is time Congress took it away from them. They have no right to it, and whether Congress has reserved in their charter or not the right to change it, we have the right, and the Supreme Court has said so.

Congress has reserved in their charter or not the right to change it, we have the right, and the Supreme Court has said so.

Mr. NEAL. Whereabouts?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. We have the right without regard to anything in the charter, because Congress is the source of franchise, if they hold it at pleasure. Have they a contract with us which for all time exempts them from taxation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If by special charter the railroad company has acquired rights under it I should like to know how you can divest it of them?

can divest it of them?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Have they a right of such a character that it is not within the control of Congress to say how and when and where and how much they shall be taxed?

Mr. NEAL. The tax which the act incorporating the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company allows is expressly appropriated for the use of schools in this District, and there is no right reserved to alter, amend, or repeal the charter in that respect. The Supreme Court of the United States have decided over and over again that a charter is contract, and unless such right is reserved it cannot be used. And a contract, and unless such right is reserved it cannot be used. And in the Ohio bank cases, where the supreme court of the State of Ohio undertook to tax the State banks in a manner different from what had been provided for by their charters by the State of Ohio, the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that the law was unconstitutional and that the bank charters were contracts, and the mode of taxation provided in those charters was the only mode under which they could be taxed by any law of the State of Ohio.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I do not think the gentleman has read the recent decisions of the Supreme Court in the Pacific Railway cases.

Mr. NEAL. Because there is there an express provision reserving the right.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Where they expressly hold, whether that provision is in the charter or not, Congress has the entire control, and such a provision is not a vested right. And there is no reason, Mr. Chairman, why a railroad company receiving the enormous profits the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Companies receive should pay a less rate of taxation than other people owning property in this District.

Mr. HENKLE. I desire to say on this subject there is no exemption from taxation of the property of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in the District of Columbia. That has not been sought on the part of the railroad company and it does not exist. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company pay taxes now upon their depot and public property on the portion of the square they now occupy and use.

cupy and use.

Mr. HUNTON. Expressly provided for in the charter.

Mr. HENKLE. Yes; expressly provided for in the charter.

Mr. NEAL. And goes to the public schools.

Mr. HENKLE. Yes; and goes for the benefit of the public schools in this District.

Mr. BRIGGS. What is the valuation?
Mr. HENKLE. The same valuation which applies to other property in the District. There is not a public steam railroad which is exempt from taxation in the limits of the District of Columbia toexempt from taxation in the limits of the District of Columbia today. There was a claim for exemption on the part of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, but they have waived that exemption, and within the past month they paid their taxes. Neither the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company nor the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company is exempt, never was exempt, and neither claims to be exempt. Both have paid their taxes.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then they do not want this proviso.

Mr. HENKLE. The effect of the proviso is this: that the taxes derived shall go, in obedience to the provision of the charter, to the public schools.

public schools.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. This provise does not touch it at all. That is what shall be done with the taxes these railroads pay. That is another question which is not affected by this provision in the slightest degree. This only provides how the taxes shall be collected and levied. It does not provide what shall be done with them.

Mr. HENKLE. I wish to say further in relation to the bearing this section may have on street railroads in the District of Columbia, that it was not expected or intended by the committee that the street railroads should be taxed for the use of the streets in the District of Columbia. They are taxed on their capital stock, they are taxed on all their property real and personal, and, more than that, they are required to keep in good condition and repair the pavements between their tracks and two feet beyond on either side.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question. If these roads are taxed upon their capital stock, suppose that stock is owned outside of the city of Washington, then have you not the city of Washington contributing to the protection of these railroads from which it derives no benefit in the way of taxation?

Mr. HENKLE. If the stock is owned outside of the District it is taxed at the company's office.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, the proviso that it is proposed here to strike out relates to the method of taxation of two railroad corporations. It is suggested by the gentleman from New York that it is within the constitutional competency of Congress to abrogate the provisions contained in the charter of these corporations which have been granted by Congress so as to change the method of taxation prescribed in the charter.

It is true the inhibition in the Constitution of the United States against the passage of any law which impairs the obligation of contracts is limited in its operation and effect to the various States. It is probably true that Congress may, if it sees fit so to do, violate the provisions of the contract which has been entered into by it and a corporation in such manner as a State would not be permitted to do by virtue of that inhibition in the Constitution to which I have alluded. But it strikes me it would be a very strange spectacle for this Congress to set the example of repudiating the obligation heretofore entered into by a preceding Congress after mature consideration and by proper legislation. It would be, in my judgment, a kind of Punic faith that I should regret to see particularly by this Congress.

Whether the subject that it is proposed to inflict a violation of this provision of the Constitution upon be a railroad corporation or a bondholder, or whether it be any other city than Washington or any other corporation, I look at it as possessed of the same vicious principle and trenching on rights that have been granted and sanctioned by oblitracts is limited in its operation and effect to the various States. It is corporation, I look at it as possessed of the same victous principle and trenching on rights that have been granted and sanctioned by obligations we are bound by every principle of honor and good faith to observe. If there be such a stipulation in the charter of this company, then this provision which it is proposed to strike out in this section is proper. If there be no such stipulation, this provise being allowed to remain does no harm, and as I understand that there is such a stipulation I submit the provise should be retained untouched and I hope it will be.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from New York to strike out the proviso should be adopted. One of the railroads entering into this District it seems has claimed all along that by the act of its incorporation it had certain immunities or exemptions from taxation, namely, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad corporation.

If we enact this proviso, although they have surrendered that right within a few days or recently, if they ever possessed the right at all they will posses it again under this proviso.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It will be renewed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, it will be renewed under this proviso, and therefore I think we ought to strike out the proviso. I do not think one mode of taxation ought to prevail as against a citizen and another as against a corporation. They ought to be put on the same footing in that respect.

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me, he will observe the proviso does not make a new law but refers to a law already in existence.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am aware of that, but the gentleman does not catch my point.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has a claim, and it has never been settled against them judicially, that originally they had certain exemptions from taxation. Now, suppose they were right in that, and by their charter they do have the exemption they claim. Then, if we enact this proviso we renew their rights which it is said they have surrendered, and for the future they will not be bound by any action they have taken in that respect.

Mr. HENKLE. But the asymption of the Politimers and Ohio Political Control of the Political C

Mr. HENKLE. But the exemption of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has expired by limitation and cannot be claimed hereafter.

Mr. McMILLIN. Suppose it has. I say that if this proviso is enacted it renews the exemption.

enacted it renews the exemption.

Mr. HENKLE. However, we do not care a sou about the amendment; strike it out if you wish.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes, 18, noes 19.
So the amendment was not agreed to.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point on that section that there is no quorum voting, and I shall make that point unless gentlemen vote who silenced this debate by assenting to the amendment, and now remain in their seats and refuse to vote.

less gentlemen vote who silenced this debate by assenting to the amendment, and now remain in their seats and refuse to vote.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman from New York how he expects to get a vote upon this ameudment in the House? We have been voting all the evening upon amendments, and those who have been defeated have acquiesced. Now, the gentleman from New York is defeated for the first time, and he does not acquiesce.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I beg the gentleman to understand there is no such point as that about the case. There is a great principle involved here. Are we by this to establish a principle that a railroad is to pay taxes upon a different principle from a private property-holder? And are we going to establish the principle that one railroad shall pay taxes upon a different principle from another?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Van Voorhis] insist upon his point of order that no quorum voted?

Mr. PRESCOTT. As a compromise might it not be agreed that this

Mr. PRESCOTI. As a compromise might that be agreed that this amendment shall be brought into the House to be voted upon?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That is what I was about to propose.

Mr. McMILLIN. It has been ruled that that cannot be done.

Mr. SIMONTON. When an amendment has been voted down in Committee of the Whole it cannot be offered in the House.

Committee of the Whole it cannot be offered in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will not be reported to the House, having been defeated in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then, I insist on my point of order.

Mr. SAMFORD. Could not the chairman of the District Committee agree to allow that amendment to be offered in the House?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to my friend from Alabama that question has been decided in the negative within the past ten days.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. There has been no decision of that kind.

Mr. HUNTON. If I have the power I will agree that the gentleman from New York can offer that amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that it could be offered as an independent proposition; but the chairman of the Committee of the Whole could not report it.

Mr. McMILLIN. In the case of a bill recently reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole the gentleman who was managing the bill agreed to admit an amendment, and stated there was managing the bill agreed to admit an amendment, and stated there was an agreement in the Committee that it should be voted upon in the House. But the point being made it was not allowed.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. There is no difficulty about this matter at all. In the case referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] the amendment was not offered in the House. The previous question was called on the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, and did not include the amendment which had been defeated in Committee of the Whole. But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] when this bill is reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole has it in his power, if he chooses, to admit the amendment of the gentleman from New York, or allow him to offer it, and can then move the previous question on the bill and amendments as reported by the Committee of the Whole and on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUNTON. And that I agree to do.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let it also be the understanding that the gentleman from Virginia will allow a statement of ten minutes to be made for the information of the House.

Mr. HUNTON. I will agree that there shall be ten minutes allowed to each side for a statement of the case.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Upon that understanding I withdraw the demand for tellers.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentlemen in charge of this bill upon what principle they allow improvements made upon public grounds belonging to the Government to be taxed?

Mr. NEAL. On the principle that that right is expressly reserved in the charter.

Mr. CONGER. We have made an arrangement that the people of Mr. CONGER. We have made an arrangement that the people of the District shall pay one-half of all the expenses of the District government, and that the Government of the United States shall pay the other half. The Government owns these grounds. The bill authorizes the Government property on which these railroads are located to be taxed for the District half of the expenses. Why should the Government property, besides paying half of all the expenses, be taxed to pay the District's half of the expenditure?

Mr.NEAL. For this reason: these railroad companies occupy, without any expense to them whatever, the public grounds, the streets, and the avenues of this city.

Mr. CONGER. I understand that. But why not provide that the tax derived from the property they occupy shall go to the Government and be applied toward paying its half of the expenses.

Mr. NEAL. Because I think the Government of the United States should pay its half independently of this. I am not disposed, as one of the Representatives of this great American nation, to deal in a niggardly way with the capital of the country. I want to see it made the most magnificent city on the American continent.

Mr. BARBER. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] has fallen into the same mistake which has already been made in this discussion.

discussion

discussion.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks I have fallen into the ditch, I am willing to let him help me out.

Mr. KLOTZ. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KLOTZ. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question pending.

Mr. KLOTZ. Then I object to debate.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. When the Government, for purposes of public policy and for the general interest of ernment, for purposes of public policy and for the general interest of the District, gave the use of public grounds to these railroads, it was not for rent nor for hire. And I venture to say no man will be willing to give our parks or our streets to any company for rent, for the value we can receive from them in that way. They are only given on account of a public necessity to make the means of communication with the capital what it is desirable they should be. It was for that reason that Congress offered the right of way across the public grounds or offered the occupancy of the public grounds in the city to these railroads, the use of the streets, &c., to bring one and then two railroads into this city for the accommodation of the Government and of the people who come here

That was one of the inducements; the companies accepted it and That was one of the inducements; the companies accepted it and came here, and they are now occupying what Congress said they might occupy, the streets and the public grounds. Here is a provision to tax whatever of the public grounds they occupy belonging to the Government, which grounds are never to be taxed for any other purpose. This provision is that they shall be taxed for the use of the District to assist it in paying one-half of the expenses which the District has to pay. I cannot see any consistency or propriety in our taxing these public grounds used by the railroad companies for the benefit of the District.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me a moment?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.
Mr. HUNTON. I think the gentleman from Michigan is entirely mistaken. I do not think he will find that the real estate belonging to the Federal Government upon which these railroads are located is in any event taxed except in the case of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, and that is expressly provided for in the permission given to that company by the Federal Government to occupy those grounds.

Mr. CONGER. I will read the clause of this section and let the gen-

Railroad companies whose principal offices are located beyond the District shall be taxed upon their real and personal property situated within the District as other property is taxed; and in the valuation of the real property shall be included public grounds occupied by said railroad companies, together with improvements thereon made by said companies.

Now all of the public grounds which they occupy is to be taxed as

Mr. NEAL. That is what we want to do.

Mr. CONGER. This provides "in the valuation of the real property" of railroad companies whose principal offices are located beyond the District "shall be included public grounds occupied by said railroad companies, together with improvements thereon made by said road companies, together with improvements thereon made by saucompanies."

Mr. BARBER. The effect of it is to swell the valuation of the lands owned by the railroad company.

Mr. CONGER. If our object is to tax our own public grounds because the railroads are upon them, to make the railroads pay for the ground which they occupy, although those grounds are owned by the Government, just as if they were owned by the company, then this may be right; otherwise it is wrong.

Mr. BAKER. Why should not the railroad companies be taxed for these grounds, if they occupy grounds owned by the Government? If they owned the grounds in their own right they would be compelled to pay the tax on them.

pelled to pay the tax on them.

Mr. CONGER. I will tell the gentlemen why. It is because this Congress during the war, when it was found that the possession of a single railroad company to this city, so far as the purposes of the Government were concerned, was obstructed, and untold peril overhung this Capitol, because there was but that one railroad, and because it passed through one city—it was because of that that Congress offered an inducement for another railroad to be built here in order that there should be two means of approach to this capital city of the nation. And as every man knows who has read the debates, and as every man who was here and participated in that legislation knows, Congress, with one voice from the North and almost one voice from the South, determined that there should be two means of access to this city. Mr. NEAL.

Through Baltimore.

Mr. NEAL. Through Baltimore.

Mr. CONGER. Through Baltimore and from New York. And we offered every inducement that was considered necessary in order to get another road here. We did not care who built it, but we wanted another road here, even if it came through Baltimore.

And in coming through Baltimore that new road had to burrow its way through the ground in the darkness because Baltimore forbade its coming through that city in the light of day. Now, when every opposition was made to that rival railroad which could be made by the exercise of any constitutional prover.

opposition was made to that rival railroad which could be made by the exercise of any constitutional or even unconstitutional power, Congress was called upon to make concessions and to offer inducements to some company to build another road here.

Mr. SIMONTON. Does the gentleman from Michigan—
Mr. CONGER. Let me finish. I do not mean the gentleman, but my remarks. [Laughter.] Congress had determined to authorize the building of a railroad from Washington to New York, independent of any other railroad, a great national military highway. Then there came offers of corporations to build a road by which the capital of the nation could be reached from the North and the East and the West. A company offered to build it if we would give them means of access to the city.

We did give them access through the streets and through the public grounds; on the public grounds, and a part of the public ground right in view of the Capitol, with the full knowledge that depots were to be built there, that cars were to stand there, that they were to run their tracks through the public grounds right in full view of the Capitol. We would have given them the public grounds in front of this Capitol in perpetuity if it had been necessary to induce another road to come here. That was a part of the contract. And now it is proposed to tax them for that portion of the public grounds which we gave them the privilege to occupy.

Mr. NEAL. Because that right was expressly reserved in the charter.

Mr. SIMONTON. Does the gentleman from Michigan deny that the right to tax the company for the use of this property was reserved in the grant to them of these public grounds?

Mr. CONGER. It may have been; but it was a part of the condition of their coming here that they should go upon these public grounds, even if they disfigured them with cars and with depots and with stations right in view of this Capitol.

Mr. NEAL. And that they should pay taxes on them, too.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I have no disposition to discuss this question. I have no idea that the gentleman from Michigan is serious in the speech he has just made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his formal amendment?

his formal amendment?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; but I still object to the proposition in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment before the committee. The Clerk will read.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Before the Clerk resumes the reading, I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 145, so as to strike out the unanimous consent to go back to section 140, so as to strike out the word "surety" and insert in lieu of it the word "security." It is now conceded on all hands that "security" is the proper word.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Yes, sir; I object; that change has already been made.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 163. When the assessors shall have returned the lists and inventories aforesaid, as above provided, to said treasurer, he shall notify the commissioners, and thereupon the said commissioners shall apoint four discreet persons, residents of the District, who, together with the treasurer, shall constitute a board for the equalization of personal property. Said board shall meet at an office, to be provided therefor by said commissioners, on the Monday succeeding their said appointment, and shall close their session on or before the third Monday thereafter. Said board shall have power to equalize the value of personal property, moneys, and credits; they shall hear complaints; and when any person has refused to list his property, or to swear to such inventory, and they may have reason to believe that the return made by the assessor of such person's property is eason to believe that the return made by the assessor of such person's property is eason to believe that the return made by the assessor of such person's property is eason to believe that the return made by the assessor of such person's property is eason to believe that the return made by the assessor of such person's property is eason to believe that the return made by the assessor of such person's property and where any person has listed his property and verified it, and they have reason to suspect the same is not a true inventory of his property and the value thereof, they may summons such person to appear before them on a day named in the summons, and shall on such day examine him under oath touching his property and the value thereof; and may also summons and examine under oath such other persons as to them may seem advisable, and upon such examination they may make such additions to the property and the valuation thereof as to a majority of the board may seem to be just; but they shall not reduce either the property or the valuations. Said board of equalization shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties as

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend by striking out, in the twentieth and twenty-fourth lines, the word "summons" and inserting "summon." Mr. NEAL.

Mr. NEAL. That is right; there is no objection to it.
The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to amend by striking out "it," in the eight-eenth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "the inventory thereof." The word "it" does not express the idea.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 165. Any president, cashier, secretary, or other officer of any national bank or other incorporated company, any banker, or any agent of any insurance company whose principal office is beyond the limits of the District, who shall refuse to list and make return of the capital stock of any such national bank or other incorporated company, or of the capital of any unincorporated bank or banker, or of the receipts of any such insurance company, as they are required by the provisions of this chapter, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof before the police court shall be confined in the jail of the District for any period not exceeding thirty days, and be fined in any sum not exceeding $500.

Mr. WILBER. I move to amend by striking out this section. The effect of it is that the agent of an insurance company doing business in this District may be put in jail if he fails to make return for the purposes of taxation, while a railroad company selling its tickets here and transacting its business every day in the year is not assessed on

Mr. NEAL. But it pays taxes on its property.
Mr. WILBER. So does the insurance company. The railroad conpany is not taxed on the business that it does. Why discriminate? The railroad com-

Mr. NEAL. Because insurance companies generally have no property in the District. Their agents come here, collect money from the people of the District, and send it outside the District to be spent.

Mr. WILBER. Very well; an individual residing outside the District is assessed and pays taxes where he lives.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. He pays taxes here if he does

Mr. WILBER. But a railroad company does not.

Mr. NEAL. Does the gentleman think it wrong to tax the receipts of insurance companies?

Mr. WILBER. The receipts of insurance companies are taxed where the company has its home office.

Mr. NEAL. Do you think that this District ought not to tax the receipts of insurance companies?

Mr. WILBER. I think that insurance companies should have the

Mr. Willer. I think that market companies same privileges as railroad companies.

Mr. NEAL. The gentleman begs the question; he does not answer.

Mr. HUNTON. I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. WilBER] that these two sections, the one under consideration and the next following, are intended to provide a penalty for all persons who refuse to make return for the purposes of taxation. As my friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] has explained, the object in regard to incorporated companies whose principal offices are outside the district is to make the agent here give a list of the taxable property, or else subject himself to a fine. Then section 166 provides that—

If any person summoned to appear before any assessor or board of equalization to give testimony, as in this title provided for, shall neglect or refuse to appear, or shall refuse to answer any question that may be put to him touching the matter under examination, without good and sufficient excuse therefor, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be confined in the jail of the District for a period not exceeding twenty days, and be liable to a fine not exceeding $100.

Now, these two sections provide a penalty for refusal to give in a true list of taxable property of incorporated companies and of individuals.

Mr. WILBER. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his amendment?

Mr. WILBER. Yes, sir.
Mr. BARBER. I desire to make an inquiry in regard to section 164.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. We have passed that.
Mr. BARBER. I know that; but I have the right to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether there is any way of avoiding the penalty here imposed, where the failure to make the return is the result of accident. Mr. NEAL.

Mr. NEAL. Certainly. If the gentleman will examine the pre-ceding section he will find it provided that where a man by reason of absence or sickness fails to make return he may come in at any time, make an inventory, and swear to it; and thereupon it goes upon the tax-list just as he returns it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out, in section 165, line 10, "before the police court."

Mr. NEAL. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARR. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman where in this bill insurance companies are charged a tax on gross receipts f

Mr. NEAL. Section 157.
Mr. FARR. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it does not do any such thing. It taxes agents of insurance companies, but not the insurance companies. They have undertaken in that section to levy a tax on insurance agents for doing business in the District, but they do not tax the companies at all.

Mr. NEAL. This section 165 does not put any penalty on the company but puts it on the agent.

Mr. WILBER. But suppose that agent should possibly do business without the knowledge of the company?

Mr. HUNTON. I make the point of order that we have passed that section.

Mr. FARR. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM. I should like to make an inquiry. After providing in section 164-

Mr. HUNTON. We have passed that section.
Mr. LAPHAM. Of course; but I am adverting to that with a view

Mr. LAPHAM. Or course; but I am adverting to that with a view of speaking in reference to section 165.

Mr. HUNTON. All right.

Mr. LAPHAM. After providing in section 164 an addition of 50 per cent. to the amount returned or ascertained, why is it necessary to add the penalty provided in section 165, and have that apply only to a certain class of persons who refuse to make returns?

Mr. NEAL. Section 165 applies to incorporated companies and to a certain class of persons who refuse to make returns?

Mr. NEAL. Section 165 applies to incorporated companies and to insurance agents, and section 166 to all other parties. If the gentleman will examine section 163 he will find the board of equalization have authority to summon before them any person they may see fit. If these parties refuse to appear there must be some way to punish them. We made provision as for contempt of court.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why do you have penalties of two different kinds?

One is imprisonment and according thirty days and a fire not exceed.

One is imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, and a fine not exceeding $500; and in the other case imprisonment not exceeding twenty days, and a fine not exceeding $100.

Mr. NEAL. We think the contempt is greater in the failure of an agent or officer in not appearing than in individuals. That is the reason why

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not see the distinction, but perhaps there is one.

Mr. WILBER. The distinction made here is all wrong, every bit of it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee.

Mr. WILBER. I move to strike out the last word. To prevent an insurance agent or any agent coming into this District to do business here, I do not care who it is, is contrary to the commercial interests of the people here and of the people elsewhere. Traveling agents are coming in here, insurance agents and others, and people are insured. If you keep them out and bring the business under the scope of the few who are here it will compel the people to pay the exorbitant prices they may charge.

I withdraw my formal amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 166. If any person summoned to appear before any assessor or board of equalization to give testimony, as in this title provided for, shall neglect or refuse to appear, or shall refuse to answer any question that may be put to him touching the matter under examination, without good and sufficient excuse therefor, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be confined in the jail of the District for a period not exceeding twenty days, and be liable to a fine not exceeding $100.

Mr. ROBINSON. My friend from Iowa made an inquiry long since, while we were considering section 145, and he was recommended to wait awhile. I think we have passed over the portion in reference to assessments, and I wish the gentleman from Ohio would now point out where the indebtedness that a party is paying interest on is allowed in reduction of the assessment for taxes.

Mr. NEAL. Turn to line 17, on page 38, and the gentleman will

Mr. ROBINSON. That is after section 145.
Mr. NEAL. No, it is before section 145.
Mr. ROBINSON. I have found it. Well, I charge it all to the gentleman from Ohio, because he rebuked the gentleman from Iowa and told him to sit down and wait. [Laughter.]
Mr. LAPHAM. I concede this section 166, which punishes the refusal to appear and testify, as applicable to all persons, is proper enough; but why should section 165 only punish certain officers who neglect to make returns and leave a citizen of the District who refuses to make return entirely exempt from any punishment what-

Mr. WILBER. There is no reason.
Mr. LAPHAM. I can see no reason for it. Section 165 only applies to a certain class of persons who represent corporations. tiable to punishment for refusing to make return, but the citizen of the District who refuses to make return is exempt from all punishment except he is liable to have 50 per cent. added to his tax. I cannot see the reason for it.

Mr. SAMFORD. Section 166 provides for the penalty.
Mr. LAPHAM. Only for refusal to testify; that is all, not for refusal to make return.

Mr. ROBINSON. To answer any question put to him under examination.

Mr. LAPHAM. That is where he is summoned to testify.
Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman will turn to section 164, he will find, in every case, where a person or corporation shall refuse to find, in every case, where a person or corporation shall refuse to make return, &c.

Mr. LAPHAM. There only a penalty of 50 per cent. is provided. I have no objection to that; but section 165 undertakes to punish as for a misdemeanor a certain class.

Mr. HUNTON. The reason is, that in the case of a person here you can get at him to make him disclose his property; but in the case of these foreign associations you cannot, and therefore that provision was incorporated in the bill to meet that difficulty.

Mr. LAPHAM. But the agent of the company would be here.

Mr. NEAL. There is, in my opinion, another reason, and that is the offense committed in this regard by the agent is one which is of more magnitude and importance than if by a private individual, because he acts in a fiduciary capacity and it is necessary for the protection of the individual rights that he should be held to a stricter accountability. For that reason we want to bring some pressure to accountability. For that reason we want to bring some pressure to bear against such parties in case of a failure to perform their duty

Mr. LAPHAM. It may be my own inadvertence, but I am unable

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 168. Any taxes assessed on any shares of stock, or the value thereof, of any national bank or other incorporated company, shall be and remain a lien upon such shares from the first Monday of May of each year until such taxes are paid, and the president, cashier, or other principal officer of all such corporations shall annually on the 1st day of November pay to the collector the tax imposed upon the shares of capital stock of such corporations for the previous year without reference to the place of residence of the stockholders thereof.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I wish to ask a question, if this is intended to operate on any corporations outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. NEAL. The sections already passed provide for the taxation of the stocks of certain corporations, and those sections as a matter of course apply only to such stocks as under the provisions of the preceding chapter are liable to taxation.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But this, as it reads here, seems to apply to the case of taxes assessed against a corporation which may be outside the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON. Is there any question before the committee?

Mr. HUNTON. Is there any question before the committee?
The CHAIRMAN. There is not; debate can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I object.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the last word.

I was proceeding to say that this section, without any qualification, as it now stands would apply to corporations outside of the District of Columbia and to their shares of stock in the hands of individuals and citizens. For instance, in the case of rallroad stocks; say that a man owns one hundred shares of stock; this tax is a lien upon that stock and follows it to the corporation and it is there a lien against it as against the owner, and if he sells that stock the tax will be a lien against it and will follow it into the hands of the assignee. Now, what I wish to get at is that the intent and object of this section— Mr. NEAL. The intention is that the tax shall be paid by some-

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Exactly; so I presume; but is that intended to apply to the stock in corporations outside of the District of Colum-

There is no provision to attach the stock outside of the

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then, what necessity is there for putting

Mr. NEAL. We have already provided in other sections of the bill what stock is to be taxed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But there is a provision to tax stock here which operates as a lien upon the stock and is an attempt to follow which operates as a lien upon the stock and is an attempt to follow it to a corporation wherever it may be. For instance, that stock may be national-bank stock in the city of San Francisco, and you attempt to tax it; or it may be that it is the stock of a silver and gold mining company, and you make the tax on the man who owns the stock; and if you are going to limit it to the District the section should say so, and if not, I do not think your lien amounts to much.

Mr. NEAL. The section as it now stands is sufficiently clear, and I do not see how such to inform on the down the section has contact the section.

I do not see how such an inference can be drawn here as the gentleman seems to draw. Of course we cannot hold a corporation for a tax which is outside of the district.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then, you should not assume that you can

Mr. NEAL. The bill does not assume it. Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The law applies to stock; the stock is here, Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The law applies to stock; the stock is here, but the corporation may be elsewhere. If the intention is to apply such to local corporations it ought to be so stated.

Mr. NEAL. But how is it possible for us to make a law to bind a corporation located say at San Francisco?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I agree with you, you cannot do it; but you ought not to try to do it. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 169. The taxes assessed upon the capital of any unincorporated bank or banking association shall be and remain a lien thereon and the property thereof from the first Monday of May in each year, and in case of non-payment thereof, at the time required by law, by the owner or shareholder, and after notice thereof by the collector, it shall be unlawful for the manager or other officer of such bank or banking association to transfer, or permit to be transferred, the interest or any portion thereof owned by such defaulting owner or shareholder until all the taxes thereon, together with costs, penalties, and delinquencies, shall be paid in full, and no dividends shall be paid to such owner or shareholder until payment in full is made. Any such bank or banking association shall pay to the collector the taxes that may be assessed upon its capital, if the shareholders thereof fail to make such payment, and may deduct the same from dividends on any such shares, or charge the same to the account current of any such shareholder, without reference to the place of residence of any such shareholder.

Mr. PRICE: I move to awend that section by striking out in the

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend that section by striking out, in the eleventh line, all after the word "full" down to the word "made," in the thirteenth line, the following words:

And no dividemds shall be paid to such owner or shareholder until payment in full is made.

The amount of a share of the stock may be $100, and the tax on it, say, is $1.50. On the 1st of June the bank declares a dividend. Now, you propose to prevent the bank from paying this dividend to the shareholder, because John Jones, the owner of one share of stock, walued at $100, owes on it a tax of $1.50.

Mr. NEAL. Are you through? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I ought to say, in addition to what I said before, that I approach your bill in fear and trembling, because it is the first piece of mechanism I have ever met that was perfect in all its parts, and for that reason I am exceedingly cautious about approaching it.

for that reason I am exceedingly cautious about approaching it.

[Laughter.]

Mr. NEAL. I think before we get through the gentleman from Iowa will agree with me this is a "perfect" bill. If he will look at line 6 of this section he will see that this which he proposes to strike out does not apply until after the collector has given notice to the bank that the shareholder has not paid; and the shareholder is not compelled to pay until the 1st day of November. Consequently this proposition does not apply until after the tax is due; and then it is the duty of the shareholder to pay it, and he ought not to have any dividend until he does pay it.

Mr. PRICE. The tax becomes delinquent according to the terms of the bill on the 1st day of May. In this "perfect" bill it is made a lien upon the stock from that date, and it is provided the bank shall not pay a dividend until that tax is paid.

Mr. NEAL. Oh, no.

Mr. PRICE. There is no "November" mentioned in this section.

Mr. NEAL. The clause to which the gentleman from Iowa objects is to take effect after notice is given by the collector that the tax is due. That is provided in this section, and the tax does not become due until November.

due until November.

Can you make a lien upon a thing that is not due? Certainly you can.

Not much. This is a mortgage upon that property Mr. PRICE.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. PRICE. before the tax becomes due.

Mr. NEAL. Oh, this is all right.

Mr. PRICE. That may be; but the trouble is, there are some people who cannot see that it is all right. The word "November" is not in this section from beginning to end. The first Monday of May is mentioned in terms; and it is said the tax is a lien on the stock from the first Monday of May.

Mr. NEAL. The tax becomes due and payable on the first Monday of November.

Mr. PRICE. I am talking about this section. There may be some where else in this voluminous book between page 1 and page 327 some section which provides what the gentleman states; but there is no such provision in this section.

Mr. BAKER. There is a section which fixes when the tax is to be paid; and this section provides that in case of non-payment of the tax at the time required by law notice shall be given and the dividend shall not be paid to the delinquent shareholder.

Mr. NEAL. Section 171 provides when the tax becomes due and payable.

Mr. PRICE. You mean by this you cannot sell the shareholder's stock at tax sale till the 1st of November.

Mr. NEAL. We mean by this provision that the man cannot sell his stock after the lien attaches

Mr. PRICE. I do not find fault with that. I am perfectly willing you shall prevent his transferring his stock. But you go further than that and prevent the bank from paying a dividend.

Mr. NEAL. Not till after the tax becomes due.

Mr. PRICE. Not at all. That is not the provision here.

Mr. NEAL. In this section there is this language used:

In case of non-payment thereof at the time required by law.

Now, the time required by law is the 1st of November.

Mr. PRICE. And in the same section you say it is a lien from the first Monday in May.

Mr. SAMFORD. Section 168 shows clearly that the tax imposed upon the shares of those corporations is not due till November.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The practical effect of that section is that the corporation will pay the tax or see that it is paid out of the dividends. It seems to me that is all right. It is a short and easy way to collect the tax. to collect the tax.

Mr. LAPHAM. Section 169, as I understand, applies only to unin-

Mr. NEAL. That is all.
Mr. LAPHAM. Why then should not the same provision be inserted at the end of section 168, that the amount which the corporation is required to pay should be deducted from the dividends which

Mr. NEAL. Section 168 requires the corporations to pay.
Mr. LAPHAM. Exactly; and why should they not be allowed to deduct the amount from the dividends?

Mr. NEAL. They will take care of that themselves.
Mr. LAPHAM. They cannot unless authorized by law.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, which the Clerk will report.
The amendment was again read.
The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 176. Every person shall be liable to pay tax for land of which he may stand seized for life, by courtesy in dower, or by a husband in right of his wife, or may have care of as a guardian, executor, agent, or attorney, having funds of the principal in his hands. And each person so holding lands shall pay the tax which may be assessed thereon each and every year.

Mr. HUNTON. In section 132 it is provided that-

Lands held under a lease for a term exceeding fourteen years shall be considered, for purposes of taxation, as the property of the lessees, and shall be assessed in their name.

I propose in the section just read to include lessees for a term exceeding fourteen years. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] will see that that is necessary in order to complete this section. I therefore offer this amendment:

After the word "lands," in line 6, insert the words "and lessees for a term exceeding fourteen years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 177. If any person who shall be seized of lands as tenant by courtesy or in dower, or who shall be seized of lands for life, or in right of his wife, shall neglect to pay the taxes thereon so long as such lands shall be sold for the payment of the taxes, and shall not within one year thereafter redeem the same according to law, such person shall forfeit to the person next entitled to said lands in remainder or reversion, all the estate which he, so neglecting as aforesaid, may have in said lands. And the remainder-man or reversioner may redeem the said lands in the same manner that other lands may be redeemed which have been sold for taxes.

Mr. HUNTON. I think a like amendment should be made in this section to the amendment made under the preceding section. I therefore move to insert, after the words "or in right of his wife," the words "and lessees for a term exceeding fourteen years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me that the words "so long as" should be changed to the word "until" before the words "such lands shall be sold for the payment of the taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 178. Any person having a lieu upon real property may pay the taxes thereon, in so far as they are a lieu upon such real estate, and the taxes so paid shall operate as a lieu upon such real estate, paramount to all other liens. Any person jointly interested with another in real property which may be assessed for taxation, may pay the taxes which are a lieu thereon, and shall thereby acquire a lieu upon such real property, paramount to all other lieus, and which he may enforce in any manner provided for the enforcement of lieus upon real estate.

Mr. NEW. I move to amend the section just read, by adding to it the following:

Provided, That such lien shall not have priority over liens given in whole or in part by the person so jointly interested and paying the taxes as aforesaid.

It will be observed that the last paragraph of this section provides

Any person jointly interested with another in real property which may be assessed for taxation, may pay the taxes which are a lien thereon, and shall thereby acquire a lien upon such real property, paramount to all other liens, &c.

If A and B are the joint owners of real property, and either or both of them should execute a mortgage to a third person, or otherwise create a lien in favor of such third person, it is not right if one of those joint owners shall pay the taxes upon that property, that he shall have priority with such lien as against his own grantee. I doubt very much whether, even without this amendment, a court would give to such joint owner priority of lien over his own grantee. But to save all question in that regard I think this amendment should be made. It seems to me that unless this amendment is made it would place it in the power of joint owners of selection to the lieuter of selection to the power of joint owners of selection to the lieuter of selection to the lieu

It seems to me that unless this amendment is made it would place it in the power of joint owners of real estate by collusion to pile up liens upon their own property as against liens that they had given in favor of third parties. That ought to be prevented.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to oppose the amendment. I think that this section as it now stands is just as it should be. We all know that a lien for taxes overrides all other liens, as long as such tax is due the Government. And where there are two joint owners of real estate upon which tax is due, the lien of the Government for the tax overrides every other lien upon that property. And where courts sell real estate for the purpose of discharging liens against it, the first payment is for the tax due. And where two persons owe taxes and one does not pay it and the other steps into his shoes and pays the tax due by both, this section substitutes him for the lien which the Government holds upon the land.

Mr. THOWER. Subsection

Mr. TUCKER. Subrogation.
Mr. HUNTON. It is the doctrine of subrogation enacted into law by this section. I think it is eminently proper where a joint owner, to save his interest as well as the interest of the non-payer, pays all the tax on the property, that his lien should be subrogated to the lien of the Government, and should be prior to all other liens.

Mr. NEW. I would be glad to reply briefly to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton.] Of course the District has a first lien for taxes unpaid, but the doctrine of subrogation has no application. The joint owner who pays all the tax only pays his own debt, for as between the owners and the District each one owes the whole tax. Still, as between the joint owners, the section is just; but unless amended as I have suggested the gressest injustice might result to amended as I have suggested, the grossest injustice might result to third parties.

Now, no principle is better settled than if A executes a deed to B, although he may have an imperfect title at the time of the execution of that deed, if he afterward acquires a better title it inures to the benefit of his grantee. Upon the same principle in equity and justice, if he acquires a lien upon the property which he did not have at the time he executed the deed, or, if you please, he acquires an interest in it which he did not have at the time he executed the mortages he should be extended as he have the property which he can be accorded to the mortages. gage, he should be estopped as between him and his mortgagee from

Mr. SAMFORD. Does the gentleman think that when he pays that tax it should inure to the benefit of his mortgagee?

Mr. NEW. Suppose the tax should not be paid; or, rather, that the one joint owner should, by collusion, not repay or contribute to the

Mr. SAMFORD. The lien would be in favor of a party that did

Mr. SAMFORD. The nen would be in favor of a party that did not give the mortgage upon the property.

Mr. NEW. But when the mortgage is foreclosed if the tax paid by one joint owner for the other, so to speak, is not repaid, the mortgagee must in the end pay it himself.

Mr. SAMFORD. Necessarily.

Mr. NEW. Very well; then it places it in the power of one of these joint owners, or both of them, thus to lessen the security of the

Mr. ROBINSON. Would he not be estopped from setting up that Mr. ROBINSON. Would he not be estopped from setting up that title as against his own mortgagee?

Mr. NEW. I have said that I doubt very much whether, if this amendment should not be adopted, a court would permit him to assert his lien as against his grantee. But to save all question in that regard I think this amendment should be made.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Indiana as a lawyer is inclined to believe he would be estopped.

Mr. NEW. I am very certain he would be if the section were amended as I propose. If he ought to be estopped, and there is any doubt whether he would be or not, the amendment should be adopted. Several MEMBERS. Let the amendment be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That will not do. The claim for taxes always takes priority of every kind of lien, every kind of interest, no matter what. Any joint owner of land assumes all the risk of taking care of the taxes himself, and if he has to pay more than his share he must look to his associate for a distribution. The Government must have it tay from the land and if the wrong man pays it he has his have its tax from the land, and if the wrong man pays it he has his have its tax from the land, and it the wrong man pays to remedy against the other.

Mr. NEW. A single word further. I think that—

Mr. HUNTON. I make the point that debate is exhausted. My friend from Indiana has already spoken twice. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 179. When any real property is sold upon execution or other order of a court having jurisdiction thereof, or is in any wise disposed of on proceedings in partition, the court may order all taxes and penalties which are liens upon such real estate to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale by the sheriff, trustee, or other officer selling the same.

Mr. NEW. I would suggest whether the word "sheriff" in the last line of this section is the word which should be used.

Mr. NEAL. No; it should be "marshal."
Mr. NEW. I move to amend by striking out "sheriff" and inserting "marshal."
The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 181. It shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes on real property upon which the same are levied, in arrears on the 1st day of July, annually, including all taxes due to the late corporations of Washington City, Georgetown, levy court, and the District of Columbia; and he shall, within fifteen days thereafter, publish the same with a notice of sale in a pamphlet of which not less than five thousand copies shall be printed for circulation; and it shall be the duty of said collector of taxes to give notice, by advertising in the regular issue of two daily newspapers published in said District twice a week for three successive weeks, that said pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any tax-payer applying therefor at the office of said tax-collector; and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold by the said collector at public auction at office of said collector in the city of Washington, on the first Tuesday of October following, and each day thereafter until all is sold, at a fixed hour, between the hours of ten o'clock in the forenoon and four o'clock in the afternoon of said days, to the highest bidder or bidders.

Mr. HUNTON I think that hefore the average of the said of the content of the

Mr. HUNTON. I think that before the word "day," in the twentieth line of this section, the word "secular" should be inserted. I move that amendment. The language will then read "on the first Tuesday of October following, and each secular day thereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to amend by striking out the last word, so that I may inquire of the gentleman having charge of this bill whether it is intended to print in the newspapers the list of delin-

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no; in pamphlet.
Mr. SPRINGER. Then there is only to be published a notice that there is such a list to be had in pamphlet form?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir. It avoids publishing the long list of delinquent taxes in the newspapers.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say that I had intended to move at this place a provision in regard to obtaining the judgment of a court before any sale of real estate for non-payment of taxes; but as my colleague [Mr. Townshend, of Illinois] has given notice of a substitute for this part of the bill which I incline to support, I prefer to withhold any amendment until that substitute is offered. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 184. Immediately after the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchasemoncy, he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale, and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within two years from the day of sale by payment to the collector of said District, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate, of the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 15 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed thereof shall be given by the commissioners or their successors in office to the purchaser at the tax-sale or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be prima facie evidence of a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized; and all proceedings prior to said deed shall be presumed to have been regular until the contrary be proved.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] whether there is any special provision in regard to the sale of property belong-ing to minors or other classes who usually have some special provisions for their benefit?

Mr. NEAL. There is a saving in favor of minors and persons under

Mr. NEAL. There is a saving in ravor or minors and persons under legal disabilities.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend this section by striking out, in line 7, the word "fifteen" and inserting "ten." I think 10 per cent. is a large enough penalty. It often happens that persons from necessity let their taxes go unpaid for a time, and such a provision as this would be very onerous when they come to pay them. It is a very severe provision. If a discretion were left with the commissioners to reduce the rate it might not be so objectionable.

Mr. NEAL. This is to apply after property has been sold.

The amendment of Mr. VAN VOORHIS was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 185. That the purchaser of any real property, at any sale hereafter made for delinquent taxes due to the government of the District of Columbia, for the assignee of said purchaser, or the heirs or grantees of said purchaser or assignee, at any time after a deed for said real property shall have been given by the commissioners of said District, or their successors in office, to said purchaser or assignee, as now provided by law, shall be entitled to proceed to recover possession of the said real property in the same manner as landlords are now entitled to recover possession of lands and tenements in said District from tenants whose estate on the premises has been determined; and all proceedings had in such actions shall be governed by the same rules of practice as are now provided for in such suits by landlords for possession; and no person or corporation against whom suits for possession shall be instituted by the holder of said tax-deed, his heirs or assigns, shall be permitted to offer evidence of any irregularity in any of the proceedings for the assessment, levy, or collection of the tax or taxes for which said sale shall have been made, or in the sale or in any of the proceedings subsequent to the sale, unless said person or corporation shall first pay into court the full amount of said tax or taxes, together with all interest, penalties, and costs which shall have accrued at the time such payment into court shall be made, including the costs of the action.

Mr. SAMFORD. I move to amend by adding after the section just

Mr. SAMFORD. I move to amend by adding after the section just read the following:

Nothing in this title contained shall be held to apply to special assessments heretofore made, or to change or affect existing law in relation to the same.

Mr. Chairman, if I had been present when the general debate upon this bill was proceeding I might, perhaps, have occupied more than five minutes in demonstrating to the House that perhaps there is a great hardship and harshness about to be legislated in this section. Section 186, which follows the section under consideration, embodies the same principle which I propose to combat. I am satisfied that if this House fully understands the scope and intention of these two sections it will hardly sanction them.

Dependent as the people of the District are upon Congress for wise legislation we should be careful to patiently consider laws providing for taxation, and see to it that they are at least justly and fairly dealt If by impatience or inadvertence we impose upon them unequal and oppressive laws we will not only perpetrate wrong upon them, but do violence to every propriety attaching to ourselves.

In this District we have the un-American exhibition of the power to tax without the right of representation. It is the only spot in this land where the law-maker can impose burdens in the presence of absolute silence from those who are to bear the burdens.

Now, sir, a casual view of the various acts providing taxation, in the light of recent decisions of the Supreme Court, will convince this House that the action proposed by this section will be exceedingly onerous to the tax-payer.

Laws were passed as far back as 1871 authorizing the assessment of special-improvement taxes, under which one-third of the expense of paving the streets was imposed on real property adjacent. of paving the streets was imposed on real property adjacent. During the extravagant era succeeding, these assessments were imposed to the extent almost of confiscation. The citizens contended these assessments were not only excessive but illegal. Notwithstanding this contention, tax-lien certificates were issued and bought by speculators at a comparatively nominal amount. The tax-payers sought by injunction in the courts to protect themselves; but during the progress of these suits Congress passed two acts which the courts held validated the assessments. Congress then by law authorized a revision and correction by the comprisioners which is now being revision and correction by the commissioners, which is now being

Now, this section comes in and provides that the purchaser at any sale hereafter made for taxes shall have a title so sacred that no contest shall be made against it unless the tax-payer pays into court all taxes, fines, and penalties, including costs of court, which sums shall be paid to the purchaser by the court if the defendant succeeds in his contest. He has also the summary remedy which the law affords

I violate no propriety in saying that in committee I made this assertion, and the chairman was candid enough to admit that the section did apply to these special assessments. And though the sale is to be hereafter, yet the assessment, together with interest, cost, &c., have already been made and accruing during the past seven or eight

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are providing a permanent municipal code for the District of Columbia. We are having special acts of legisla-tion in reference to these special-assessment taxes, and we should not incorporate in this code any provision pertaining to them.

There are two funds of taxation in this District. One is a general There are two funds of taxation in this District. One is a general fund of taxation for carrying on the municipal government and the other is a special-assessment fund, assessed years ago, for the purpose of providing pavements for the streets here. There were about a million and a half or two million dollars, and perhaps more, assessed on these special-assessment taxes. It is contended by the citizens in this District that they are not only excessive but they are onerous, and not only onerous, and that in a large degree, but they are odious; and they have therefore had to resort not only to legislation here in Congress to save them from the confiscation of this special onerous taxation but they have gone into the courts also to save themselves and Mr. NEAL. This is to apply after property has been sold.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I understand that; but the property sold is that of persons least able to pay, and when they have succeeded in

In 1875 (and I beg members of the committee to pay attention to this) and in 1878 Congress by act validated these assessments, and the District Legislature did the same thing, which the courts otherwise would have held to be illegal. After that had been done in 1875 and 1878, after the Supreme Court in the case of Mattingly, and lately in the case of Shoemaker, decided that Congress ratified and validated these illegal assessments, you come now and propose a summary rem-edy for the purchaser at these tax sales and keep the tax-payer out of his property without giving him his single day in court to contest

I do not know what has been the decision in other States. We have had the same character of laws declared to be unconstitutional in my own State; and it seems to be in fashion for gentlemen to refer to the various decisions and laws of their own States; and it was declared unconstitutional on the ground that a party could not be deprived of his property without due process of law. I say, no matter how illegal, how irregular, how odious, how onerous a special assessment for improvement may be, the party cannot come into court and defend against it without paying all taxes, all fines, all costs of

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. SAMFORD. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, in view of the fact that I have been bitterly opposing the section all the time, to give me a few minutes longer.

Mr. STEVENSON. Pending that, I think it is time for the committee to rise.

Mr. SAMFORD. This is too important a subject to act on to-night.
Mr. HUNTON. I will let you in after a while.
Mr. SAMFORD. I will get through in three or four minutes.
Mr. HUNTON. I will let you have three minutes after I am through.
Mr. SAMFORD. I should like to have them now in the connection of my preceding remarks, as they necessarily will be disjointed in the very few minutes which I can have.
Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama admits the propriety of this section in all questions of taxation except those for special improvements. I cannot see the distinction between those taxes and any other, to save my life.

He says these special-improvement taxes are onerous, oppressive, and were illegal. Well now, Mr. Chairman, I have only to advert to the fact these special assessments were complained of and Congress the fact these special assessments were complained of and Congress passed two laws of relief, one of which was to require a reassessment of the unpaid assessments for special improvements and the other to require a reassessment where the tax had been paid.

He says this action of Congress legalized these assessments which otherwise were illegal. My friend recollects the decision of the court very poorly if he states that to be the fact. The court said in its opinion in that case, after deciding that the tax was legal and if that be not so the two acts of Congress to which I have referred do legal-

Mr. SAMFORD. No; the gentleman will pardon me, the Supreme Court never passed upon the question even as to whether or not the tax was legal in the first instance.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have the decision here.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I have the floor.

We read it in committee the other day. I say, Mr. Chairman, if it be right to adopt this provision as to any species of tax, it is right to adopt at a to all character of taxation.

Now, my friend says it operates as a hardship upon the poor people.

Now, my friend says it operates as a hardship upon the poor people of this District. My experience is that it is the other class more generally rather than the poorer classes who have failed to pay up their special improvement taxes.

Now, in regard to the constitutionality of it. Whatever may be the decision in the courts of Alabama, I guarantee that there is no other State in which a provision of this sort would be decided to be uncon-State in which a provision of this sort would be decided to be unconstitutional, because we know this affects the remedy and not the right. It expressly refers to all sales hereafter made, and although the taxes may have been levied before this law passed, it applies not to past but to future sales and gives the remedy in cases of future sales and not to any other, and I submit if it is right to make this provision in regard to general taxes it is equally right to make it in reference to receive improvement taxes. special improvement taxes.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ala-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. SAMFORD. The gentleman promised me three minutes.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will be allowed sufficient time.

Mr. SAMFORD. Now, the gentleman, in referring to this decision of the Supreme Court, is mistaken. The court nowhere passes upon the legality of the tax in the first instance, but says that subsequent acts of the Legislature of the District and of Congress validated it. Prior to that the court did not decide it was valid.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.
Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to read that portion of the decision of the Supreme

Mr. SAMFORD. Yes, sir; if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. It is as follows:

It is difficult to understand what this legislative act meant if it did not recognize the validity of the assessments made by the board of public works, and consequently the authority by which the work was done and the improvements made.

Mr. SAMFORD. Precisely. The court decides that subsequent acts

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. That was the legislative act. Mr. SAMFORD. But it was validated by the legislative act of the District and the two acts of Congress. The court does not decide they were valid before the legislative act. Now, I understand that there are about $500,000 of these tax-lien certificates for special assessments held by the First National Bank of New York, and also that about a half million dollars more are in the hands of other third parties. And they all bought them with all the circumstances surrounding them. One of these material circumstances was the dispute as to their legality and excessiveness. The purchasers took them cum onere, and were thereby enabled to get them at reduced rates. And this section proposes to legislate them into higher and indisputable ground.

My friend from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] asks me why the same law shall not apply to these special assessments that applies to general taxation. The answer is, that the one has been assessed in the past, on which tax-lien certificates have been issued, issued under existing the beautiful parast and penalties have accrued. As to them, law, on which heavy interest and penalties have accrued. As to them, parties have mutual rights; but if this section becomes law all the rights of one party will be abrogated and the other will be furnished remedies never before enjoyed.

Another reason: these special assessments are now being revised, and though the Senate has recently passed a bill extending the time of revision, the commissioners are proceeding to advertise to sell, without proper revision, and if the sale takes place the tax-payer can never be heard even to say a word against their injustice.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the last word of this

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the last word of this section. It seems to me that there are provisions in that section that cannot stand the test of constitutionality and cannot be allowed to stand, and we may as well dispose of them here as to let the court do it after we pass it into a law. Here is a provision that if you sell a man's property for taxes and the purchaser brings an action to recover his property, he cannot put a witness into the box, he cannot defend his property, he cannot put a witness into the box, he cannot defend or take any steps in the matter, unless he pays the valuation into the court, there to remain until the case is decided. A man pays his tax, it may be $10,000 that he pays, and takes a receipt for it from the treasurer. The treasurer proves to be a defaulter. His successor finds no evidence upon the books that the tax has been paid, and the collector sells the property and the purchaser commences his action to recover possession. By this section the owner of the property who has paid his tax is prohibited from defending the action and proving the payment of the tax nuless the whole amount is paid into the court the payment of the tax unless the whole amount is paid into the court and the $10,000 be allowed to remain in the court until the litigation is ended.

Mr. UPSON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Goode having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Burrows reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HUNTON. There are several members of the committee who will be absent next week, and at their instance I ask that it be agreed by unanimous consent to take up this bill at the title of "Public schools" until the return of those gentlemen, passing over meanwhile these tax sections.

these tax sections

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BURROWS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan calls for the regular order, which is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I make the point of order that the question having been put on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, it is too late to make an objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WILSON. In the RECORD of the 6th of this month—
Mr. CONGER. I have called for the regular order.
Mr. WILSON. The gentleman cannot take me off the floor by his call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Wilson] rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Michigan could not take me off the floor if he would, and I am sure he would not if he could.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Have I not the right to reclaim the floor on my motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from West Virginia will take but a moment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Very well; I will yield for the present.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, the RECORD of the date of the 6th of this month reports me as having voted in the affirmative on the Weaver currency resolution on the 5th instant, and also reports I was paired on that day with Mr. ORTH, of Indiana. My vote on the resolutions is correctly reported. I had not noticed the report of this pair on that day until my attention was called to it this morning

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No notice of the expiration of the pair was given to the Clerk.

Mr. WILSON. I desired to make this explanation as soon as I became aware of the inconsistency in the report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Burnows in the chair.

L. MADISON DAY.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar. The unfinished business coming over from the last session of the Committee on the Private Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day. The committee at that time rose upon the point of order having been made that no quorum was present. The pending question was, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House? Upon that question tellers had been ordered, and the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. O'CONNOR, and the gentleman from Michigan Mr. WILLIES appointed as tellers will take their man from Michigan, Mr. Willis, appointed as tellers, will take their places, and the committee will new proceed to vote.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 73, noes 58.

Mr. BOUCK. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will continue their count, and members of the committee are requested to vote on one side or the other, in order to make a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside for the present, in order that we may proceed to the considera-tion of other business on the Private Calendar.

Mr. O'CONNOR, (one of the tellers.) I hope not; I hope this bill will now be disposed of.

The tellers continued and concluded their count, and reported that here were—ayes 85, noes 63. So the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No.

Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, at the request of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] this bill will be passed over for the present, not to lose its place upon the Calendar.

WHITEWOOD FLUME COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2805) to incorporate the Whitewood Flume Company; reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining by Mr. ACKLEN.

The bill was read, as follows:

GEORGE S. FISHER.

Mr. NICHOLLS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1998) to reimburse George S. Fisher for "waiting instructions" and for "transit to post of duty" to Beirut, Turkey, in 1874, and for losses sustained by the burning up of his library in the consulate building of the United States at Kanagawa, Japan, November 26, 1866; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

IMPORTATION OF TOBACCO INTO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. NICHOLLS also, by unanimous censent, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H.

granted to said company to erect, construct, and keep in repair either a ditch or flume, or both a ditch and flume, as they may determine, between the points and along the line designated in this act, and to turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof, the water of the streams mentioned in this act and their tributaries, leaving sufficient water at all times in the channels of said streams and their tributaries to supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of said ditch or flume: Provided, however. That said flume or ditch shall not be more than twelve feet wide at the bottom.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask that the reading of the report be dispensed with, as this is a substitute for the original bill on which the report was made. This substitute is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Mines and Mining. It simply authorizes this company to construct its flume or ditch through the public lands, granting to them the right of way.

Mr. BRAGG. I think it would be well for the committee to understand what this bill proposes. It is a bill which comes from the Committee on Mines and Mining, and by its title purports to be a bill to incorporate the Whitewood Flume Company.

Now, this bill is no such thing. It proposes to grant to certain

Now, this bill is no such thing. It proposes to grant to certain persons, who propose to incorporate themselves in Dakota under the name of the Whitewood Flume Company, the exclusive right to the use of the waters of Whitewood Creek and Deadwood Creek, giving not only the right to the use of the waters and the construction of a canal, but the right of way for ten feet on either side of the canal for twenty years.

In other words, it is granting a franchise to a company not yet in existence, by which they are authorized to go upon the Government lands, and to have the right to take the waters of these streams and divert them from their natural courses, so that when the lands shall have been disposed of by the General Government hereafter, they nave been disposed of by the General Government hereafter, they will be subject to the easement which this bill proposes to grant to this company that proposes to be incorporated.

In order to meet this objection what does the bill propose? It proposes that they shall leave water enough in these streams—for what? For such persons as may have the right to use the streams before the construction of the canal. But if it so be that the canal shall be constructed over a tract of land where there are no pre-emptions, no entries, no persons now using the streams, this grants absolutely the right to use all the waters of these two creeks, to be taken out of their beds and carried into a canal, so that a monoply of the waterpower arising from these streams, and the use of the waters of the streams, shall be given to persons who propose to incorporate themselves into a company, provided this bill shall pass.

It seems to me that this bill would more properly come from the Committee on the Public Lands than from the Committee on Mines and Mining under the pretense of its being a bill to incorporate the Whitewood Flume Company.

Mr. ACKLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] has a wrong conception of the object and effect of this bill a misconception honestly entertained I doubt not. If the committee a misconception nonestly entertained I doubt not. If the committee will give me their attention for five minutes, I can make this matter as plain as the sun at noonday. The whole matter is simply this; Some young men from Iowa went into the Territory of Dakota and entered some mining claims. They dug a tunnel six hundred and fifty feet long, commencing at the base of a hill down which is the fall of this creek. They drove this tunnel all on their own land; and having extended it six hundred and fifty feet they were seventy feet from the content. the surface. Then being at bed-rock they sunk a shaft to intersect that tunnel. The people living above them, some seventy-three in number if I remember correctly, (the papers are on file with the Committee on Mines and Mining,) asked Congress to allow these men to be incorporated so that they may dig that ditch ten or twelve feet wide from that point through their mining claims down to the bedrock, so that they may have the benefit of draining their land into this rock, so that they may have the benefit of draining their land into this tunnel. Almost every man, I think every man interested in this matter (because the ditch is only three or four miles long) has signed a petition to Congress to have this thing done.

Now, the reason they come here asking the passage of this bill is that possibly they may run over a strip of land fifty or sixty feet wide—only a small strip, if any—belonging to the Government. They apply here to have the sanction of the Government to take from that strip, ten feet wide, whatever earth and stone may be necessary. That is all there is in the proposition.

The Committee on Mines and Mining in the Forty-fifth Congress—and there was then a practical miner upon the committee—had this and there was then a practical miner upon the committee-had this matter under consideration. I see here my friend from North Carolina [Mr. Davis] who was a member of the committee at that time and will verify everything I am saying; probably he knows much more about the matter than I do. That committee in the Forty-fifth Congress, after careful investigation, reported unanimously a bill of this kind; but it never received action for want of time. The measure was reintroduced in the Forty-sixth Congress, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and is now reported from that committee, I believe, unanimously. If I am not right in this statement, I hope I may be corrected. This is the way the matter stands; and this is all there is in it. there is in it.

Mr. PAGE. Is there not a general law giving to ditch and canal owners the right of way over the public lands of the United States? I believe such an act was passed in 1866.

Mr. PRICE. I am not aware whether there is such an act or not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can answer the question of the gentleman from California [Mr. Page] if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Price] will allow me. Having the same impression as the gentleman from California, I have consulted the statutes for the purpose of ascertaining the fact. I ask the Clerk to read section 2330 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Cierk read as icilows:

SEC. 2339. Whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes herein specified is acknowledged and confirmed; but whenever any person, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injures or damages the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

Mr. SPRINCERP I desire to sall attention to the foot that this pro-

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call attention to the fact that this provision of the statutes secures to parties the right to construct canals and ditches over the public lands to the extent that may be required to connect any mining claim they may have with natural water-courses. It seems to me that if the parties in whose interest this bill is preat seems to me that if the parties in whose interest this bill is presented desire only the right of way over the public lands, they have that right under the general law. If not, I think they ought to have it, but they ought to have it by general law. I am opposed to setting a precedent here which would bring to this Congress innumerable private bills for the incorporation of companies to carry on mining enterprises or to open up canals and ditches in all the Territories of the West. Such a precedent would ingulf this Congress in an amount of west. Such a precedent would inguit this Congress in an amount of private legislation which would absolutely prevent the transaction of public business. If the general laws on this subject are not adequate for the full and complete protection of all persons who may desire what this bill proposes to grant, the right of way over the public lands for ditches and canals, I think the general law ought to be so amended as to give them this right. I believe they have it now under the provisions of the statutes I have caused to be read. If they have not the remedy is in the general law and not in setting a precedure. have not, the remedy is in the general law and not in setting a precedent for the incorporation of an innumerable number of private com-

But this bill does not incorporate a company. Although its title says it is a bill to incorporate the Whitewood Flume Company the body of the bill states that it is a company to be organized under the territorial law of Dakota, and therefore it is in aid of a corporation to be created hereafter, and to grant exclusive privileges for twenty years to a company which may be hereafter organized.

I am opposed to the granting of exclusive privileges to the natural water-course indicated, because that might interfere with the rights of other persons in the immediate vicinity who might wish to use of other persons in the immediate vicinity who might wish to use

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Illinois will observe that the bill protects the rights of all other parties.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not see how it can protect them if it gives these parties the exclusive right for twenty years to erect, construct, and keep in repair this ditch or flume mentioned in the bill.

Mr. PRICE. Precisely; it gives the right for twenty years to keep

Mr. PRICE. Precisely; it gives the right for twenty years to keep in repair this ditch or flume, but it is also provided that sufficient water is to be left at all times in the channels of said streams and their tributaries to supply all claimants whose right to use the same attached before the commencement of said ditch or flume.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is to be either a ditch or flume, or both a ditch and flume, as they may determine. I will read the language of the

And the exclusive privilege for the period of twenty years is hereby granted to said company to erect, construct, and keep in repair either a ditch or flume, or both a ditch and flume, as they may determine, between the points and along the line designated in this act, and to turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof, the water of the streams mentioned in this act and their tributaries, leaving sufficient water at all times in the channels of said streams.

Mr. PRICE. That is it.

Mr. SPRINGER. "And their tributaries, to supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of said ditch or flume." Attached before that. Well, what rights have attached before that no one knows. Perhaps nobody's right has attached up to this time, and it prevents any other rights attaching to attached before that no one knows. Pernaps nobody's right has attached up to this time, and it prevents any other rights attaching to this water after the passage of this bill.

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman from Illinois will recollect for a moment, he will know that that country is settled up now possibly as much as it will be in the next fifty years. It is the very place where those people are, and the very men who have rights there are the marks have acked for this thirst to be done. They are the very increase. who have asked for this thing to be done. They are the parties asking for the passage of this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. This ditch is to be three miles long.

Mr. PRICE.

Mr. SPRINGER. And from where it leaves the natural water-

Mr. SPRINGER. And from where it leaves the natural watercourse until it reaches the mining property no one, for twenty years, who may discover valuable mining property, could dig there without the permission of this company.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Illinois and other members are under a misapprehension. This ditch spoken of extends on the line of these miners above that shaft I have spoken of at the head of that rapid, and does not affect the channel at all. It is for the purpose of draining that land so they may get down to the bed-rock. The flume or ditch they speak of is below that of the land of the men

Mr. SPRINGER. We have no map of the topography of the country and no statement of the rights of others surrounding this property, and hence we are going somewhat in the dark. It is for that reason I think it very questionable at least as to whether we should pass a

It think it very questionable at least as to whether we should pass a bill of this kind or not.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Chairman, the section of the Revised Statutes the gentleman from Illinois has called attention to is not pertinent to the peculiar condition of this case at all. It refers to a case where priority of possession or right to use the water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes has vested and accrued. Those who are interested in the passage of this substitute, which is, I desire to explain to the committee, a substitute for the original bill proposing the incorporation of this company, and is not a bill itself to incorporate a company, and therein the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in stating it as a bill to incorporate the company—those men ask we should grant the right to erect and keep in repair this ditch orfume to these parties; that it is necessary for the purpose of carrying on their mining operations. The petition which was presented to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and which I have had incorporated in the report made by that committee as an appendix incorporated in the report made by that committee as an appendix thereto, requests specifically Congress may grant to this company the right to erect and construct this flume or ditch for the purpose therein mentioned.

There is, I am informed, but a very small portion of the public domain infringed upon in the construction of this ditch or flume, and it is to obtain the consent of Congress to have the right of way over the public domain, and for no other purpose, the substitute has been reported by the committee. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining, and is not at all open to the objections which the gentleman from Illinois has raised to it.

Mr. BRAGG. I have now before me the bill, and in all its features it sustains exactly the position which I took with the bill not before me, except that it is a little worse. This is a bill authorizing the constructing, maintaining, and operating a ditch, flume, or tunnel, as may be required—

Mr. ACKLEN. What bill is that the gentleman is referring to now?

Mr. BRAGG. I refer now to a bill reported by Mr. ACKLEN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, as a substitute for the bill No.

Mr. ACKLEN. As a substitute for that bill.
Mr. BRAGG. Very well. To conduct water commencing at or near Whitewood Falls or Whitewood Creek in the Cape Horn mining dis-Whitewood Falls or Whitewood Creek in the Cape Horn mining district, &c. This is not for drainage simply, but for mining and milling and other purposes, and amounts to this: that it gives an absolute monopoly of all the waters in these creeks, with the right to divert them into a tunnel or channel for mining and milling and other purposes, and shall have the right of way thereof for ten feet on both sides of the said ditch or flume and the free use of stone and timber along the line of the same and its branches, and this to continue for a period of twenty years.

This is a grant of timber and stone, not to speak of land, but a general grant of timber and stone by the United States to this incorporated company. This bill further grants to them the exclusive use of that water, except to such persons whose rights to use the same may have attached before the commencement of the said ditch or flume. Now, that is a cognovit, an admission that the Government possesses there property which is subject to claimants, subject to entry, subject to be taken up, the title to which is still in the Government; and this bill proposes to take away from the Government the riparian rights which would inure to the owners of that property in case hereafter it should be taken up, and a valuable mine should be developed upon it or any other interest which would require the use of this water which flows through the land. In other words, it grants in advance to the company, before its incorporation, a monopoly of the water of these creeks, which may be of immense importance and the water of these creeks, which may be of immense importance and value to the mining operations on lands which still belong to the Government; and it grants the use of stone and timber generally, so much as may be necessary—all to go to this corporation.

I see that one of these persons who is to be incorporated under this bill has a name singularly similar to that of the member of Congress from Iowa who spoke on this bill, William H. Price.

Mr. ACKLEN. I would ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if this bill does not in terms provide that sufficient water shall be allowed to remain in those creeks at all times, to supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of this ditch? ditch ?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly.
Mr ACKLEN. Therefore, there can be no possible objection—
Mr. BRAGG. I did not yield to the gentleman to put in an argument right here, but to ask a question. My point is that that very condition, that very exception there admits the fact that there is a tract of territory which is yet subject to entry; so that by this bill we are taking from the Government, when it grants to persons entering that land the right to the use of this water, because to use the water at all this land must have been entered and these claims perfected before this ditch was commenced.

But if that has not been done, and subsequently when it is entered and some mine is developed, you deprive the claimants under the Government from any right in the use of that water unless the consent of these parties be obtained.

Mr. ACKLEN. But the gentleman will remember that it is provided expressly in this bill that parties whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of the said flume are amply protected. These waters are useless where they are, and the riparian owners of this property themselves have signed and petitioned for

Mr. BRAGG. Well, if they are the riparian owners on that stream they may be interested, but without reserving the right of such as may come in hereafter such privileges should not be granted. That provision shows to my mind that this land is not all taken up, and provision shows to my mind that this land is not all taken up, and therefore that we ought not to pass this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this case, and I gave it some consideration in the Forty-fifth Congress, though I do not know how far the provisions of this bill correspond with the provisions of that which was considered by the Committee on Mines and Mining in that Congress, but as I understand this it is based upon the assumption that it is necessary to get at least congressional aid to perfect the corporation at all—some of stand this it is based upon the assumption that it is necessary to get at least congressional aid to perfect the corporation at all—some of this property being still public property, a portion of it being a part of the public domain. If I remember correctly, in the Forty-fifth Congress the committee had the written request or application of all the individual owners along the line of this flume or ditch, their written request that the application should be granted. Of course they could not request anything more than that.

The right of the Government was not in them, and the territorial government could not condemn anything ascenting their rights.

government could not condemn anything excepting their rights. They concede that it was to their interest and to the public interest

They concede that it was to their interest and to the public interest also, and that being so, as I understand, the only persons who can be injured by this grant are those who now have vested rights. They have these vested rights, but are willing that this shall be done, and surely if it promotes the general good, there ought to be no objection to the Government granting precisely what private individuals granted where they had the control.

The territorial Legislature, as I understand it, cannot give relief; cannot give all that is desired or all that is necessary in the incorporation of this company, because they cannot interfere with the rights of the Government of the United States in the public domain. If they could give perfect relief it would not be necessary, perhaps, to come here, but they cannot. As every individual interested in and along the line of this property has requested, as I am informed, that this charter be granted, I think they may be left to look after their own interests, and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] need not concern himself about the interference with private and vested rights. rights.

Mr. ACKLEN. The section referred to by the gentleman is section

1851 of the Revised Statutes. It states:

The legislative power of every Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. But no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil.

It was owing to this section of the Revised Statutes that the parties here interested felt it necessary to apply to Congress for the right of way over the public domain, which is granted by this substitute. Nothing else is asked for. I ask that the bill be laid aside to be re-

Noting else is asked for. I ask that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I have heard it stated three or four times since this bill has been before the committee that nothing is asked but the right of way for this company, the Whitewood Flume Company. In looking at the report I find that is all that was asked by the petitioners who wish this action to be taken by the House. I will ask the Clerk to read the petition from which it will be seen that the petitioners who are cited as advocating the passage of this act simply asked Congress to give them a right of way over the public domain.

asked Congress to give them a right of way over the public domain.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Certainly.

Mr. ACKLEN. The petition incorporated in this report is the petition upon which was based the original bill for which this is a substitute. If the gentleman will examine the original bill for which this is a substitute. If the gentleman will examine the original bill he will find it provided for the incorporation of a company with the rights and privileges which will be found fully set forth in detail in that bill. This bill recommended by the Committee on Mines and Mining is a substitute for the original bill.

Mr. NEWBERRY. And this is a bill which nobody has petitioned for so for as the report shows. The patition from Deadword City.

for so far as the report shows. The petition from Deadwood City—and the Clerk will read it in a moment—simply asks Congress to give the right of way over a portion of the public domain. It asks nothing se. Am I correct in that?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I will ask the Clerk to read the petition.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEADWOOD CITY, March -, 1878.

We, the undersigned, respectfully represent that W. H. Price & Co. are building a flume from the falls of Whitewood Creek, developing and opening the claims above said falls; that their enterprise is attended with great expense; and, therefore, as a protection to them and as action eminently proper in the premises, we, owners of placer claims along the line of said flume, do ask that a charter issue to said W. H. Price & Co., giving them the right of way for said bed-rock flume, in said Whitewood Creek, in the county of Lawrence, Territory of Dakota.

Mr. NEWBERDEY. Now. Mr. Chairwest, the bill in addition to

Mr. NEWBERRY. Now, Mr. Chairman, the bill, in addition to giving the right of way to those individuals and that company, among other things which I will not enumerate, gives that company—

The exclusive privilege for the period of twenty years to erect, construct, and keep in repair either a ditch or flume, or both a ditch and flume, as they may determine, between the points and along the line designated in this act, and to turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof, the water of the streams mentioned in this act and their tributaries.

Those are the Deadwood Creek and the Whitewood Creek and their tributaries. It permits the turning of all the waters of those streams into that ditch or flume—

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman will excuse me. I am sure he does nor want to do an injustice to the bill and to the parties who seek this legislation. The bill preserves in terms the water for the use of other parties.

Mr. NEWBERRY. If the gentleman would wait only half a minute and allow me to complete my sentence, he would find I was coming to that.

Mr. PRICE. I will wait a minute and a half, if the gentleman

Mr. NEWBERRY. I was reading the bill-and to turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof, the water of the streams mentioned in this act and their tributaries, leaving—

sufficient water at all times in the channels of said streams and their tributaries to supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of said ditch or flume.

We have no data as to when that ditch or flume was commenced; we do not know whether it was one year or ten years ago. I presume if it was on a mining claim it was in the time of the first proprietors who went upon that stream, the Deadwood Creek. If this bill passes, from the instant they commenced that ditch or flume no one has any right to or interest in the water in that creek unless he was there at that time. Every drop of that water is given to this company, and you compel every one who uses a drop of that water company, and you compet every one who uses a drop of that water to pay for it.

There is nothing said here specifically to show what is the use of that flume. Is it a public improvement or is it simply a private improvement? It purports to carry that water through Deadwood City to Central City. The distance is not given. The water is to be carried to those two cities; but the purpose of this is not found in this bill or in any report accompanying the bill. I have looked through the report as carefully as I could in the few minutes I have had it in my hands and I have from proteing as to the use of this ditch or my hands, and I have found nothing as to the use of this ditch or flume; nothing as to whether it is of public importance or whether this is simply a private operation to control all the water that runs through that valley for the use of this company for which they may charge to suit themselves.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are certain things appearing from an inspection of these papers to which the House should give attention. The original bill, No. 1078, was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] and is a bill of twelve sections, creating a corporation and giving that corporation extended powers. Upon that bill the Committee on Mines and Mining prepared a report of twenty-seven printed pages, which we have here; but instead of reporting bill No. 1078 back to the House, they report a substitute, as the com-bill No. 1078 back to the House, they report a substitute, as the committee say, and a substitute is printed on pages 26 and 27 of the report. But the substitute there printed is not the substitute now before the House. Therefore, so far as the report of the committee shows, we are acting upon a bill which the committee did not recommend. There is no other report before the House that I am aware of. I will give way for a moment so that that matter may be explained, in order that we may not act under any misapprehension.

Mr. ACKLEN. The bill originally introduced will be found quoted by sections in the report. The sub-committee recommended to the full committee the bill which is found on pages 26 and 27 of the report. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] will observe, the report was directed to be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining. That committee, upon an examination of the substitute reported by the sub-committee to the full committee, authorized to be reported to the House a substitute for the whole matter, which was reported to the House and placed upon the Calendar, ter, which was reported to the House and placed upon the Calendar, as appears from the records. I think that explanation is sufficiently satisfactory.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, to make my statement plain—and I accept what the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Acklen] says about it as the fact—upon an inspection of this report we find, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Newberry] has just said, no explanation of the purpose of the bill itself. We have here a long and undoubtedly very able argument on the power of Congress to create a corporation. And the original bill and the substitute as recommended by the sub-committee went to the creation by Congress of a corporation. That is shown by the bill of four sections to be found on pages 26 and 27 of the report.

Now, in what position are we? It is said that Congress is not asked to create a corporation. No; but by this second substitute which we

Now, in what position are we? It is said that Congress is not asked to create a corporation. No; but by this second substitute which we are now considering Congress is asked to adopt a corporation to be created perhaps before 1884 by the Territory of Dakota, and then to give that corporation all the powers they sought to gain under an incorporation by Congress. But with this exception, the committee have kept out of this last substitute the provision for the protection of all private claimants, which they put in the other substitute which they incorporated in their report.

Now if contlemen will examine the substitute bill which was rec-

Now, if gentlemen will examine the substitute bill which was recommended by the sub-committee, and which appears to have been adopted by the committee, so far as the report shows, there will be found a fourth section, which provides that if persons along the line of this flume or canal shall object to the passage of this ditch through of this flume or canal shall object to the passage of this ditch through their lands as affecting their claims they shall have the right to be heard in the courts, where the question of damages shall be determined, and they shall have the right of appeal.

Now, when we come to examine the bill before its, what do we find? We find that Congress is asked, not to create a corporation and describe and define its powers and limit its rights, but it is asked to pass a bill providing that these gentlemen may become a corporation in the Territory of Dakota under territorial laws prior to 1834; and if they shall so become a corporation, then they shall have the control they shall so become a corporation, then they shall have the control of the various streams mentioned in this bill.

Now, it is not alone as my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE says here—and I know he wants to be right about it—it is not alone that they shall have the right of way over some sixty or seventy feet of Government land; not at all. It is that, but it is very much more. It is to have for twenty years the exclusive privilege of controlling these streams, if I understand the bill aright, with this limitation: they shall not take away the water needed for those who have present claims.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Not present claims.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Massachusetts wants to be right, I have no doubt.

Mr. ROBINSON. Undoubtedly.
Mr. PRICE. The gentleman will notice that no fifty or sixty feet is asked for, and nothing of the kind is granted.
Mr. ROBINSON. I took the fifty or sixty feet from the gentleman's own statement.

I said ten or twelve feet. Mr. PRICE.

Mr. PRICE. I said ten of twelve less.
Mr. ROBINSON. Then it is that much less.
Mr. PRICE. Now let me call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts and of the committee to this one fact.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not quite through yet.

Mr. PRICE. It will not take me more than a minute and a half.

Mr. PRICE. It will not take me more than a minute and a man.
Mr. ROBINSON. I will be glad to hear the gentleman.
Mr. PRICE. This matter has been pending in Congress for ten years past, and has been recommended by every man who has any knowledge of the facts. Not a syllable or a word has come from the Territory of Dakota against this, but every man who has said anything about it is in favor of it.

This was the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands of the Forty-fifth Congress, the then Delegate from the Territory of Dakota being a member of that committee. The present Delegate from that Territory is now present; I have been looking for him all the morning but I have not before seen him. If he has a word to say against this bill, then it may go. I have not said a word to him on the subject. No man who knows anything about this matter out-on the subject. No man who knows anything about this matter outside of theory is opposed to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am speaking of the theory of the bill, and upon the papers as they stand. Now if we are to give this new corporation the same powers, rights, and privileges they were to have if incorporated by Congress, why are not private claimants guarded and protected in their rights and privileges as was intended by the fourth section of the substitute set forth in the report?

As the gentleman from North Carolina has said that according to his recollection all the private claimants joined in the request for this legislation, I wish to draw his attention to the report of the present committee, in which they say:

Your committee have been reliably informed, however, that nearly all of the owners of land and placer claims lying on the route of the proposed flume are desirous that the same should be completed at as early a date as possible, and have united in a petition to that effect.

To insure, however, the completion of this work, some mode of condemning private property is necessarily requisite; otherwise the captiousness or avarioe of private land-owners might indefinitely delay, if not altogether defeat, the results to be accomplished by the corporation. It remains, though, with your committee to see that the mode prescribed shall be such a one as will certainly protect private citizens and insure these private land-owners a fair and just compensation.

This shows to me that in the opinion of the committee all the claimants had not petitioned for this legislation, and also that the committee were satisfied the private land-owners ought to have protection.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. I have not read the whole of the present report; but my recollection is that in the Forty-fifth Congress the Committee had information from the Delegate from the Territory as well as from persons interested, that the bill not only met with no opposition from persons along the line but was approved by them. That is my recollection. It may possibly be that all the by them. That is my recollection. It may possibly be that all the persons interested did not approve the measure. But if it be necessary, for the purpose of enabling these gentlemen to use their property, to condemn the right of way over other property, it seems to me this power ought to exist somewhere. If it does not exist in the territorial Legislature as to public property, then it seems to me we ought to give that authority. I suppose that in all our States there are laws authorizing the condemnation of private property not only for public uses but in some cases for the use of individuals. For instance, where it is absolutely necessary that one man should have an outlet over the land of another for the purpose of drainage, we have in my State a provision for the purpose; I suppose there is such a provision in all the other States. But there is no provision in this case which would operate as against the Government of the United States. The right to use the stone along the narrow limit contemplated seems to me not to be of so great consequence that we should not grant it if it would be of any public benefit.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman from North Carolina of course would not say that under any circumstances private property should be taken without compensation?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Oh, no, sir.
Mr. ROBINSON. And the gentleman thinks, therefore, that the bill should afford some protection to those whose property may be

Mr. DAVIS, or North Caronna. I apprehend that the territorial laws would protect them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I have said now all that I propose to say about this bill. I have said thus much because I could not find the gentleman from Dakota just at the time I wanted to see him to make inquiry about the bill. I may vote for the bill finally; but I wanted information. I do not think we ought to pass bills of this kind without having them clearly understood. kind without having them clearly understood.

Mr. BENNETT rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the gentleman from Dakota, [Mr. BEN-

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to ask the gentleman what his particular point against the bill is. I had not the pleasure of hearing his remarks, as I was out of the Hall.

Mr. ROBINSON. My friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] says that my point is "everything in general and nothing in particular." I think that is rather damaging to the bill in which he is interested, as it implies there is so much objectionable that it is not necessary to particularized.

Mr. PRICE. I give the benefit of that to the gentleman from Mas-

Mr. ROBINSON. Seriously, I said (I do not wish to repeat my speech but only to state the points) that it seemed to me there was no provision here for the protection of private parties along the line of this improvement, against whom Congress undertakes to say this corporation shall have the exclusive right for twenty years to make and repair this ditch; and, further, that important provisions which seem to have been recommended by the committee for the protection of these parties have been omitted in the bill now under discussion.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the bill in the opinion of the gentleman affect the water rights of parties along the line?

Mr. ROBINSON. It does seem to me to do so. It gives this corporation the exclusive control of various streams (with which, of course, the gentleman is familiar, though I am not) for twenty years. This seems to me a very serious matter. I should like to hear from the gentleman from Dakota.

Mr. ACKLEN. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would like to call his attention to the fact that the substitute prowould like to call his attention to the fact that the substitute provides that this company shall have the right of way over the public lands. The territorial laws will protect all the private rights which might be endangered, and which possibly the committee may have thought would be endangered under the original bill which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The bill originally sent to that committee was referred to a sub-committee, who modified in the committee was referred to a sub-committee, who modified in the committee was referred to a sub-committee, who modified in the committee was referred to a sub-committee, who modified in the committee was referred to a sub-committee. fied it to some extent and reported it back with this report to the full committee, who accepted neither the original bill nor the substitute, but who have recommended unanimously the passage of the bill which I have in my hand—a substitute granting to this company simply the right of way over the public lands, with the right to erect and maintain this ditch or flume. That is all there is in the case.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman whether the substitute printed in the report is the one to which he refers?

Mr. ACKLEN. The substitute printed in the report is the one reperted by the sub-committee to the full committee, but the full committee did not accept it.

Mr. CONGER. It is the same with the exception of the last sec-

Mr. ACKLEN. The substitute prepared by the sub-committee contains a good many things different from the original bill. It is not so enlarged in its power, but that has nothing to do with the bill before the House.

Mr. CONGER. I have two or three objections to this bill.

In the first place, the report contains a part of Blackstone, portions of the four gospels, and a verse or two from the epistle of Jude, two pages in regard to the use of seals by the Jews and Romans and among the Normans and Saxons, and besides there are so many different propositions in this report, covering twenty-seven pages, that it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it must have been intended to confuse the mind and withdraw the attention of Congress from the bill to which it purports to relate. [Laughter.]
And I am now told the bill reported in the report, and the substitute printed in the last part of it to which the whole report is said to be referred, is not the bill before the House. It seems to me, therefore, that no portion of the bill or of these twenty-seven pages with all its law-learning, with all the accumulated wisdom of centuries, that no portion of either relates to this little Whitewood flume bill. [Laughter.]

First, we are confused with the report, with the learning which it contains; and then, sir, we are confused by the substitute bill; and finally we are told that neither the original bill nor the substitute in the report is the one in any essential particulars of the one reported.

That is one objection.

My other objection is that there is no necessity for the passage of such a bill by Congress, in Dakota or anywhere else. The law of Congress declares that the Territories, including the Territory of Dakota, may pass general laws for the incorporation of all persons desiring to be incorporated for certain purposes, and among them is the very purpose mentioned in this bill and in this petition. There is nothing in the report, there has been nothing stated on this floor, showing an incorporation under the general laws of Dakota may not accomplish all that ought to be accomplished by such an act of incorporation. That I mat ought to be accomplished by such an act of incorporation. That is my second objection to this bill.

I will not stop to read the law even, as it is quoted in this report, which declares the power of Dakota to pass general laws, which all the inhabitants may avail themselves of; and yet we are asked to pass a special law giving to a few corporators, for twenty years, powers which perhaps the Legislature of Dakota would be unwilling to give to any incorporation.

My third objection to the bill is it authorizes the turning the water of two streams by name and their branches, I know not how many, away from the streams and conveying some of them where they never return at all to their original streams.

Mr. PRICE. Where?
Mr. CONGER. In the bill; and there is nothing in the bill to show whether the water taken from the Whitewood and the Deadwood Creeks shall flow back into those streams again or into some other streams in some other direction, and so too with the branches of those streams. If there is any intimation at all it is that the water shall finally return to Deadwood Creek; but there is nothing to show whether the water taken from Whitewood Creek or the branches thereof shall return. Whether they are to go back into the original branches or streams is uncertain. In a country where the streams are valuable both to the United States holding the land for settlers and to the settlers who come upon them, for the purposes for which streams are valuable, I object to their being diverted from their channels and taken for the advantage of a private company and turned off into other channels, leaving the intervening place without its natural flow of water.

The gentleman on the other side, remarking to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, says I am telling the truth as far as I know it.

[Laughter.] Well, I am reading from the bill, from the gentleman's own report. Mr. PRICE.

Mr. PRICE. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan—
Mr. CONGER. Wait until I am done. I heard the gentleman say that to another member. [Laughter.] I should not have said it myself unless I carried out the same policy the gentleman before me a few minutes since inaugurated. Mr. PRICE. If you follow my footsteps you will never go far

Mr. CONGER. Let me see whether I am right. For the purpose of constructing maintaining, and operating a ditch, flume, or tunnel, as may be required, to conduct water, commencing at or near Whitewood Falls, on Whitewood Creek, in the Cape Horn mining district, and including both Deadwood Creek and Whitewood Creek, and extending through Deadwood City to Central City, on Deadwood Creek, in the Territory of Dakota, for mining and milling, and shall and may have perpetual succession.

In this bill in section 3 it says:

And to turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof, the water of the streams mentioned in the first section of this act, and their tributaries, leaving sufficient water at all times in the channels of said streams and their tributaries to supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of said ditch or flume.

Taking away all the Government right to it or the Government right to convey it to those who might buy the land along the tributaries thereof

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit me to ask him what he is reading from?

Mr. CONGER. I am reading from the substitute reported by the committee, and the bill read before the House has the same words in it.

Mr. ACKLEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He will find that the bill before the House, which is the substitute reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, contains no such language. The report is entirely different.

Mr. CONGER. Then, if there is no such report from the committee, this bill has no business here before the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. But there is a report.
Mr. CONGER. Then I should like to know where that report is. I have been reading from page 27 of what purports to be a report containing a copy of the bill incorporating the Whitewood Flume Company, which was given me. When I read from that I am told that it does not refer to the bill before the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman is mistaken. The bill which is before the House is a substitute for the bill to which he refers.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will read from the bill which is before the House. Now I read from House bill No. 2805. That is the bill before the House, is it not?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will read from that bill:

To conduct water, commencing at or near Whitewood Falls, on Whitewood Creek, in the Cape Horn mining district, and including both Deadwood Creek and Whitewood Creek, and extending through Deadwood City to Central City, on Deadwood Creek.

Now, the gentleman says the other which I read from was not the bill. I want to say that the words I read from the other bill are exactly identical; at least I fail to see any difference between them so far. I will read further:

And keep in repair either a ditch or flume, or both a ditch and flume, as they may determine, between the points and along the line designated in this act, and to turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof, the water of the streams mentioned in this act and their tributaries—

Mr. ACKLEN. Where did the gentleman find that in the bill be-

Mr. ACKLEN. Where the the gentleman and that in the bin before the committee?

Mr. CONGER. "Leaving sufficient water at all times in the channels of said streams and their tributaries to supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the commencement of said ditch or flume," &c.

Now I ask if this is the bill that is before the House? The Chair will be kind except to inform me.

will be kind enough to inform me.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the bill, No. 2805.

Mr. CONGER. Then why should I be interrupted by the gentleman from Louisiana to know where I got the bill if it is here before the committee, or does not the gentleman know what bill is before

Mr. ACKLEN. I interrupted the gentleman because I saw that he was reading from a report and not from the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I read from page 27 of the report and I have stated that the words which I read were identical with those contained in this bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentlemen is mistaken. They are entirely different.

Mr. CONGER. Now I have read the bill or portions of it and I say that the words are identically the same as those on page 27 of this

Mr. ACKLEN. I must take issue with the gentleman there. He will find that they are different.

Mr. CONGER. I have already stated my objections to this billMr. PRICE. I want to say something on this bill.

Mr. PRICE. I want to say something on this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Now, the gentleman might be thinking of what he is going to say, while I am talking. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. It is very kind of the gentleman to make such a suggestion to me, but I have not time to think while I am listening to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I shall be glad when the gentleman rises if he will tell me why Congress should incorporate a company in a Territory, when we have already decided to pass general laws providing for the incorporation of such companies, and just such companies as this, by the Legislatures of the Territories? Why should we take the power from them? Why should Congress give to a private corporation for from them? Why should Congress give to a private corporation for this or for any purpose, without reservation as to use, with no re-striction as to the price to be paid for the use of this water by anybody else, the right to turn these streams into a flume or channel and take it away from the natural channels and the inhabitants of that part of the country for the period of twenty years as contemplated in this bill? If I thought the gentleman from Iowa was prepared to answer me

I would stop right now.

Mr. PRICE. Suppose you try it? [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. Then I will.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to correct my friend from Michigan in some Mr. PRICE. I rise to correct my friend from Michigan in some particulars. He seemed to be trying, I say seemed, I do not wish to attribute any wrong motive to him, for while his imagination is fertile on most occasions, I do not believe it reached the height of sublimity this would indicate—but he seemed to be impressed with the idea, and attempted to convey it to the committee, that this water by some means or other would run off somewhere after leaving this channel or ditch into the wilds unknown, or up some mountain I don't know where. I do not know whether that was his intention or not; but if he had listened to me with half the attention I listened to him, and if he believed what I said, [laughter,] as I always believe what he says, he would have found this plain, stubborn fact: that an elevation of about seventy feet—or rather that the Whitewood Creek has a fall of somewhere about seventy feet, and I also stated, as I believed plainly, that these young men who went out there from my own town had commenced at the bottom of that hill alongside the creek and dug a tunnel, and when they had got in six hundred and fifty feet they were at the end of the fall, so to speak—that is, they were at a point below the surface of the ground, corresponding with the head of the falls. Then they sunk a shaft, and that was the last thing they did. Now, then, the water to be taken out of this creek is to be turned into that shaft at the head of the falls, and is to run down the shaft into this tunnel, and that is all there is of it. When it gets into the tunnel it runs to the foot of the falls, and runs into Whitewood Creek again.

This ditch that is spoken of here is for the accommodation of other parties. And when I say to this committee that every man in Dakota who knows anything about this or has any interest in it directly or indirectly has signed a petition to have this done, and no live man or any other kind of a man has ever uttered a sentence asking for anything in this matter except what this bill asks for, I think there should be no hesitation on the part of this House in passing it.

This is not the bill exactly as I introduced it, and I think is not so good a bill for the parties concerned, but they are willing to take this rather than nothing. And the effect of it will be that the matter which my friend from Michigan was afraid was going to be dispersed and disseminated and disappear into some unknown region where it would never more be heard of goes just into the same creek again.

My other friend from Michigan on my left [Mr. Newberry] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] also seem to be troubled about this fact that the water is all to be taken out of that creek and that nobody whose rights are subsequent to the passage of this act shall have a right to use it. Now, for the sake of harmony, and to show we do not want anything but what is right, I am willing that they shall strike that portion out if they choose so that the bill will read as I shall read it now:

To turn into and through said ditch or flume, and branches thereof-

Not the branches of the creek but the branches of the flumethe water of the streams mentioned in this act and their tributaries, leaving sufficient water at all times in the channels of said streams and their tributaries,

A MEMBER. What for ?
Mr. PRICE. I propose to stop with those words which I have now read, and to omit the words which follow:

To supply all claimants whose rights to use the same attached before the com-encement of said ditch or flume.

I would leave out those words. It is the simplest thing in the world for anybody who understands it.

Mr. HAZELTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. Who is the William H. Price mentioned in this bill?

He is my son, and I am proud of him.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am glad of it.

Mr. PRICE. If that is anything against the bill, vote against it. Mr. HAZELTON. I did not know but it was the gentleman from Iowa himself.

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; I have no middle name.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to know if there is a general law of the territorial Legislature or whether there can be a special act passed by the territorial Legislature under which these parties can be incorporated?

Mr. PRICE. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say I was told that could not be done. I have my information not from the men whose names are mentioned in the bill, because they are not presumed to know about it, but from men who live in the Territory and from the Delegate who preceded the present Delegate from that Territory.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I know nothing about the fact myself, because I have not investigated the point. But if these parties can become incorporated under a general or special territorial act, then I do not think they can come here for an act to incorporate them.

do not think they can come here for an act to incorporate them.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that this act proposes to incorporate this company?

Mr. ACKLEN. It does not.

Mr. HAZELTON. It proposes to give them certain powers.

Mr. PAGE. When they are incorporated.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I understand they are to be incorporated. porated by the territorial Legislature if incorporated at all. ask whether or not it is in the power of the territorial Legislature, either by general or by special act, to enable these parties to accomplish what they desire or what they ought to accomplish? If so, the local Legislature ought to give them the necessary power that they require, and that because they are upon the ground and know what privileges it is right to grant. But if the territorial Legislature has not the power to do this, in that case if we can have sufficient information in regard to what ought to be done it may be proper for us to

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word.

I am somewhat familiar with the mining laws, and I have had some experience in reference to this matter of the construction of ditches and canals over public lands of the United States and the manner in which the water rights are acquired for the use of the miners. If this bill simply means what the gentleman from Iowa says it is intended to mean, I believe it will simply give these parties the right of way over the public lands of the United States.

The general law which has been read, section 2339 of the Revised Statutes, gives them that right. It gives the right to construct ditches and canals over the public lands for mining or other purposes and to take timber and rock for the construction of those ditches.

The only question about this bill, in my judgment, is whether additional rights are granted by it to this company or the parties named in the bill in regard to the water rights. Now, I do not believe Congress desires to grant additional rights to these parties other than they have now under the general law or the local laws of the Territory. If they have acquired a priority of right to any of these waters they can hold that under the local laws, the laws of the Territory. I do not think Congress should grant any additional rights to any of the water-courses of the United States other than those which are now held and enjoyed under existing laws. I do not suppose that is the object of the gentleman who has charge of this bill; and if he will insert a proviso that no additional rights to water-courses of the United States not now held and enjoyed by these parties under existing laws and customs in that locality shall be vested in them by this bill that would meet the objection which attaches to it, in my judgment. The only question about this bill, in my judgment, is whether adIf that is done, I see no reason why the bill should not pass. I believe, however, everything that is desirable in this bill is granted in the general law passed in 1866, granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over lands of the United States.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman—
Mr. HAZELTON. I want to ask the gentleman from California a

Mr. PAGE.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. HAZELTON. On your proposition, if you were to confine the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] to the powers contained in the general law, why is there any use for this bill at all?

Mr. PAGE. I have not attempted to discuss that. I say that in my judgment this bill can do no possible harm if the restriction I have suggested be placed on it, that no additional rights, no water rights, shall be granted by this act that are not now held and enjoyed by the parties named in the bill.

Mr. HAZELTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] if by this legislation any powers are asked beyond what would be granted by the general law

Mr. PRICE. I am not prepared to answer.
Mr. HAZELTON. I would like to know. That is a fair question.
Mr. PRICE. I am not prepared to answer that question just now.
Mr. FINLEY. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PHILIPS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a motion that the committee rise

Mr. FINLEY. I will yield for that purpose.
Mr. PHILIPS. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a letter of Captain C. O. Boutelle, of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, cevering memoranda by Dr. John A. Johnson, of Beaufort, South Carolina, in reference to the destruction of the Beaufort Library. The memoranda give a history of the library, together with such action as has hitherto been taken upon the subject. I move that the paper be referred to the Committee on the Library, before whom there is now a petition on the same subject.

The motion was agreed to. Mr. CONKLING presented a petition signed by a large number of merchants of the city of New York engaged in the wholesale dry-merchants of the city of New York engaged in the wholesale drygoods and clothing trade, praying for the passage of a national bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of the Union Iron Company of Buffalo, New York, asking favorable consideration of the bill introduced by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] and more lately reported back, touching a revision of the tariff. The bill having been reported, the petition should lie upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie upon the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Rev. J. D. Reagan, editor of The Country Standard, of Stoutland, Camden County, Missouri.

of The Country Standard, of Stoutland, Camden County, Missouri, praying that wood and straw pulp, soda-asb, and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper be put upon the free list, and that the duty on printing-paper be removed; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. No. 3047) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to recommend a proper site for a union railroad depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2328) to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. BECK. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments.

I desire to say that I am instructed by the committee to advise the Senate that I shall call up the bill at the earliest possible time, tomorrow or next day. I wish to ask whether it should not remain on the table without going on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator.

Jouett, of the United States Navy, for eminent and conspicuous services in battle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EDUCATION OF INDIAN CHILDREN.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Mr. IELLER Submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas it has been reported that the Secretary of the Interior proposes to take a certain number of children of the Cheyenne Indians without first having obtained the consent of their parents for the purpose of educating them at Hampton, Virginia, or Carlisle, Pennsylvania: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby instructed to inquire into the truth of said report, and also inquire whether any Indian children now at school at a distance from their parents were taken from their parents withouttheir consent and report to the Senate, and the said committee also report whether any legislation is required to protect the Indians in the possession of their children.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the resolution be considered at this time

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the resolution be considered at this time. The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the reso-Intion.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the Clerk read some extracts I have taken from the telegraphic dispatches in the New York Times of last Friday. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

General E. D. TOWNSEND, Washington

The following dispatch from General Pope is forwarded for the information of the General of the Army. I respectfully join with General Pope in asking for the suspension of the order for some time. We are now reaching the period of the year when Indians are the most easily stirred up.

P. H. SHERIDAN, Lieutenant-General.

FORT LEAVENWORTH. April 21.

RENO, INDIAN TERRITORY, April 20. Assistant Adjutant-General Department of the Missouri, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas

Agent Miles received instructions from the Interior Department this morning to take from Little Chief's band of Cheyennes a number of children and put them to school. Clark informs me that Little Chief was promised, while in Washington, that he would not be compelled to pursue this course with the children of his band. I am of the opinion that Little Chief will not comply with Agent Miles's demand for the children. I request that if I Company, Twenty-Third Infantry, can be spared from duty at Caldwell, that it be directed to report to me. If I am compelled to make a round up I shall need the company. The demand for the children will not be made for several days.

RANDALL. Commanding.

RANDALL, Commanding.

As the execution or attempted execution of the order mentioned will be sure to create very serious trouble, if not an open outbreak of the Northern Cheyennes, who are and have been very much discontented; and as its immediate or remote execution does not seem to warrant such dangerous consequences, I respectfully urge that it be recalled or suspended for some time. Its execution now would entail the necessity of increasing the force at Reno, and might make it impossible to send more troops to McKenzie. Please telegraph me as soon as possible, as I must be prepared.

JOHN POPE, Brevet Major General.

The resolution and preamble were agreed to.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH MEXICO.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the President is hereby requested to communicate to the Senate, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interests, a copy of dispatch No. 838, of date April 28, 1879, from the United States minister to Mexico upon the subject of commercial relations with that country.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN. On Friday I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which this body concurred in the House amendment to the resolution ordering the printing of the Smithsonian report. I was very sure there was some misapprehension about it. I have conferred with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Whyte,] the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and he concurs with me. I hope therefore that the vote will be reconsidered, and the resolution referred to that committee. I will say action in both Houses was had without a reference

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Maine. The vote will be regarded as reconsidered and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing, with the amendment of the House of Representatives.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. WHYTE. Two or three days ago a joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 100) for the printing of extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries was returned from the House with an amendment. As it was read at the desk I presumed that the House had made the remainder of the resolution conform to the amendment passed by the House. It was discovered afterward that that had not been done; and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the House was concurred in was made but not acted upon. I ask that the Senate now act upon that motion, so that we may non-concur in the amendment and have a conference to alter the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland the Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment

RETIRED LIST OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is concluded; and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the standing order of the day, commencing at the point reached on the last call of the Calendar.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the morning business is through, I ask leave of the Senate to have considered the bill (S. No. 1136) to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians.

Mr. MAXEY. I must object to that. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, the regular order is demanded, and the Secretary will report the pending bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I believe it was once decided that one objection was sufficient to carry over any bill, and this bill went over under the idea at the time that the ruling of the Chair would be that one objection was sufficient, and the bill could not be taken up by a majority vote. As I understand, that is not the decision of the Chair at this time. This bill was passed over under the supposition that one objection would carry it over at that time. I learn that all the objections to the bill are now removed or can readily be removed. It is an important bill and can be passed in a very few minutes if it should be taken up. It fell behind in the way I have stated and if I cannot get the consent of the Senate to take it up or get it up under the new ruling of the Chair it will be passed over for an indefinite period.

Mr. MAXEY. I call for the regular order because I think there is eminent propriety in it. The first bill on the Calendar in regular order has been partially considered, and I think there will be but little more debate upon it. It would be idle to take up the bill by piece-meal and throw it off when it is regularly reached, and it ought to be now

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the bill I have indicated takes up any length of time I shall withdraw it. It is a bill that creates a good deal of anxiety

Mr. MAXEY. Let us go on with the regular order.
Mr. SAUNDERS. Let the bill I indicated be read for informa-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas demands the regular order, and the Chair must recognize the call.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Although I believe I could make a motion to take the bill up by a majority vote, I do not wish to insist on taking up time. The bill should be acted upon. It is an important bill. It provides for the sale of a large tract of land which belongs to the Omaha Indians. The Indians want it sold, and the white people want it sold. It is one of those things that there is no disagreement

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list of non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward, the consideration of which is resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Maxey] from the Committee on Military Affairs, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 3, after the word "thirty," it is proposed to strike out "consecutive," and in section 2, line 2, after the word "thirty-five," to strike out "consecutive."

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Clerk to read the bill as it will be if

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That when an enlisted man has served as such thirty years in the United States Army, honorably and faithfully, and the last fifteen years thereof as a non-commissioned officer, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, he retired from active service, and placed on the retired list hereby created, with the non-commissioned rank held by him at the date of retirement.

SEC. 2. When an enlisted man has served as such thirty-five years in the United States Army, honorably and faithfully, and the last fifteen years thereof as a non-commissioned officer, he may be retired from active service at the discretion of the President, with the non-commissioned rank held by him at the date of retirement.

SEC. 3. Non-commissioned officers retired from active service shall receive 75 per cent. of the pay and allowances of the non-commissioned rank upon which they are retired.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to offer an amendment. I move to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That in addition to the number of cadets at West Point Military Academy now authorized by law, the President shall each year appoint two colored cadets at large.

Mr. MAXEY. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the bill and has nothing to do with the bill one way or the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be reported at the desk.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. I trust the Senate will not act upon that. The President now has the right to appoint ten cadets at large, and he can select colored or white as he pleases. It is a matter in his discretion entirely. I do not know that Congress would be very wise in saying that the President shall appoint men, either white or colored. He has a right now to appoint either as he sees proper. has a right now to appoint either as he sees proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas raises the point of order that the amendment is not relevant.

There is certainly a color to that idea. [Laughter.] The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the spirit of the rule which governs amendments to general appropriation bills, the Chair submits the question to the Senate: Is the amendment just read relevant to

Mr. ALLISON. The rule with reference to general appropriation bills is an exceptional rule, of course. I do not know that under our rules there is any limitation to the right of amendment. I offer this amendment in good faith, as I believe it is an essential thing to the promotion of the efficiency of the military arm of the service, and I think the amendment is strictly germane.

In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, I will say that under a law passed last year it is impossible for the President to appoint any cadets at West Point for some three years to come unless point any cadets at West Point for some three years to come unless this amendment shall pass. I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to say to the Senator from Iowa that his amendment might be proper on the Military Academy appropriation bill—it has nothing in the world to do with the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON. But the West Point bill has been already passed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I sincerely wish that the Senator from Iowa would withdraw his amendment, first, because I do think it december to the bill. from Iowa would withdraw his amendment, first, because I do think it does not properly belong to the bill under consideration. I say frankly, as I always mean to talk frankly, that I am not disposed to provide just now for the appointment of any additional cadets at West Point; but if we are to appoint them I would do so upon a bill for that purpose unembarrassed by any other subject-matter. I am in favor of the bill reported by the Military Committee, and I would like to vote for it unconnected with any other subject. I will state in a very few words the reasons which lead me to favor the bill.

I am in favor of the bill, first, because I believe it eminently right, just, and proper. I am in favor of the bill because it seeks to do that which we are doing in detail. The honorable chairman of the committee may be able to tell me, I do not remember how many cases, but in several, we have passed special laws retiring sergeants or privates mittee may be able to tell me, I do not remember how many cases, but in several, we have passed special laws retiring sergeants or privates who have been a long time engaged in the service. This bill, therefore, seeks to do in whole what we have been doing in detail. It is adopting a system of general legislation which will do away with the necessity of meeting the cases as they are presented in detail. It is only doing by a general law what we do by special laws.

When this bill was up the other day, I felt an interest in the bill because I had presented a memorial which went to that committee, and I suppose the facts stated in that memorial may have had their consideration with the committee in reporting this bill. It was the memorial of Luke Walker, who states in it that he was at Fort Knox, in the State of Maine, an enlisted man then, at the date of the memorial, that he enlisted in the United States Army in 1838, was made morial, that he enlisted in the United States Army in 1838, was made corporal ir 1843, sergeant in 1846, and received his appointment as ordnance-sergeant in 1852. He served with credit and distinction throughout both the Mexican and the late civil war, having been in the Army as a private and non-commissioned officer for forty-two consecutive years without the intermission of a single day. Since the memorial was presented to this body, under the providence of a higher power he has been called from earth and the provisions of this bill will not meet his case. He has passed away.

The principal reason upon which I would support this bill I have not heard stated in this body. I would place the non-commissioned officers after the long service named in the bill upon a retired list, because I believe it would promote the best interests of the service, as has been well stated by the Senator from Texas; but I would do as has been well stated by the Senator from Texas; but I would do it for another reason, which, as I have said, I have not heard named. By the law as it now stands, I suppose any person disabled by sickness which occurs in the line of his duty in the military service is entitled to a pension. But take the limitation of thirty years. A man who has served continuously that time is by law entitled to a pension if he has lost his health in consequence of that service. The law gives it to him, but while the law gives it to him in its letter he is whell. it to him; but while the law gives it to him in its letter he is wholly nable to comply with the rules of the Department in furnishing that evidence which entitles him to it. There is from the hard service of long years no earthly doubt that the health of the soldier has become impaired and he is the proper subject of a pension; but it is next to impossible to comply with the rules of the Department and to furnish that medical evidence which traces cause to effect. The gallant soldier to whose memorial I have referred, and he was a gallant soldier to whose memorial I have referred, and he was a gallant soldier undentedly as I heart four the chair in the late. lant soldier undoubtedly, as I learn from the physicians who had him in charge, died in consequence of the severe toil and exposure to which he was subjected in the service; and yet it is difficult to fix the precise time and place or the precise occasion which developed the disease that caused his death. You pension your soldiers who did duty only for fourteen days. Here is a man who has done consecutive service for thirty was said it is investigated. tive service for thirty years, and it is just next to impossible for him to supply that evidence which will entitle him to a pension, and this bill puts him upon a retired list where he will not be driven to the Pension Office to secure a pension. Pension Office to secure a pension.

Besides that, it is running along pari passu with your existing laws. They apply to commissioned officers. Why should they not apply to the rank and file who have borne the brunt of battle and who have trod their solitary march at midnight amid the darkness of storm and the inclement seasons of all the different portions of our country? I think it is a most wise thing to do; and while my attention was called to it by the particular case which passed under my personal observation, I am still more strongly in the faith that the bill is well-founded in principle and ought to receive the favorable action of this founded in principle and ought to receive the favorable action of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa germane to this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, of course I have no objection to having that question submitted to the Senate; but, as I understand the general rules of the Senate, anything is germane to a bill; and the rule with reference to appropriation bills is one of exclusion and in derogation of what are the general powers of the Senate in reference to amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The general parliamentary law is that the subjects embraced in a bill must be germane and relevant to each

Mr. INGALLS. The question of relevancy, I think, has never been raised before on a bill of a general character. The provision in the rules relative to appropriation bills, by absolutely necessary inference would imply that any amendments of any character were appropriate and could be received to any other bill than an appropriation bill. Of course, the Chair can submit the question to the Senate; but this is certainly an anomaly. I do not want it understood because it is submitted to the Senate that it is a question that can be raised under

Mr. BURNSIDE. It is not at all likely that the committee that had this bill in charge for a moment dreamed of putting such an amendment on the bill as this of the Senator from Iowa or anything analogous to it; therefore if the Senate act on this amendment it will act on a subject that has not been before the committee, and is not at all relevant to the matter the committee considered. I think if a all relevant to the matter the committee considered. I think if a thing of that kind is done by the Senate, it ought to be done on a separate bill or on some other bill of the same nature as the amendment, so that it can be considered by a committee of the Senate.

I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as I look at the matter now, but I should want to consider it. I should rather have a committee consider it before acting upon it. It certainly has nothing to do with this bill; it is not at all like it in any particular. I sincerely hope that the Senate will not add the amendment to the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, however this amendment may be disposed of, I hope we shall not sustain the objection on the point of order, because there is no rule that I am aware of which prevents any amendment being offered to any bill, except an appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated that in the outset.

Mr. ANTHONY. Jefferson's Manual says:

If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order; for were he permitted to draw questions of consistence within the vortex of order, he might usurp a negative on important modifications, and suppress, instead of subserving the legislative will.

Amendments may be made so as totally to alter the nature of the proposition; and it is a way of getting rid of a proposition, by making it bear a sense different from what it was intended by the movers, so that they vote against it themselves. (2 Hats., 79, 4, 82, 84.) A new bill may be ingrafted, by way of amendment, on the words "Be it enacted," &c. (1 Grey, 190, 192.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that that is not this case. It is not a question between amendments, but a question between an amendment and the text of the bill, whether the subjects embraced in the text of the bill and in the amendment be cognate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is there any rule that requires the subjects to be cognate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is not aware of any but the ordinary parlimentary rule only.

Mr. ANTHONY. But where there is a provision in the rules which prohibits irrelevant amendments on appropriation bills, the inference is that they are in order upon other bills; and certainly I never have sk that they are in order upon other bils; and certainly I never have known the question of the revelance of amendments raised except upon an appropriation bill. I hope the point of order will be decided correctly, however we may vote upon the amendment itself.

Mr. WHYTE. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether he does not consider that the second clause of the twenty-ninth rule has reference to general bills? The first clause reads:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill;—

There there is a semicolon. The rule then proceeds:

nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto—

Mr. FERRY. That applies to appropriation bills. Mr. WHYTE. It continues:

and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

Does not that come under the general clause of amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. That comes under the clause "amendments to appropriation bills."

Mr. WHYTE. Is it limited to appropriation bills?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly; and by the heading to Rule 27, the Senator from Maryland will see that the three rules from 27 to 29 inclusive emply to appropriation bills.

inclusive apply to appropriation bills.

Mr. WHYTE. It does not say so, the twenty-seventh rule, as I read it. That heading only applies to Mr. INGALLS. The rules from the twenty-seventh to the thirtieth apply to appropriation bills; and then comes in a rule on "private

Mr. WHYTE. It does not so state. It is classed under general amendments; it is only Rule 27 that is headed "general appropria-

Mr. FERRY. I will state to the Senator from Maryland that so far as my observation has extended the question of relevancy has har as my observation has extended the question of relevancy has never applied to any amendment except to an appropriation bill; and the specific provision there, as the Senator from Rhode Island has stated, naturally includes permission to offer any amendment to any bill except to an appropriation bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. These rules, 27, 28, and 29, all apply to appropriation bills. It has been too much the custom of the Senate to decide questions of order with reference to their bearing upon the subjects on which they are raised. I hope we shall not pronounce this amend-ment out of order, because it would be contrary to all the precedents of the Senate. Mr. MAXEY.

Mr. MAXEY. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order and let the question come squarely up on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr.

ALLISON.]

Mr. PLUMB. There does not remain very much to be said on this proposition after the very thorough consideration it received at the hands of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] at the last sitting of the Senate; but I desire to call attention to the statement of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] with reference to the difference which, as from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] with reference to the difference which, as he conceives, exists between privates and officers concerning this question of retirement, which he deems to be material.

It was stated by him that an officer was under an implied obligation to continue in the service of the Government. I think that theory is entirely opposed to the universal practice which has obtained. In fact it may be said that there is now no such theory remaining concerning the tenure of office in the military service. Every officer is, by the universal practice at least, entitled to resign at any time that he pleases. The acceptance of a resignation, I venture to say, has never been refused, and I think the Senate took that view of it some two years ago, perhaps, when on an appropriation bill for the Military service. two years ago, perhaps, when on an appropriation bill for the Military Academy at West Point it offered a premium of $750 to such tary Academy at West Point it offered a premium of $750 to such cadets as having graduated at that Academy would consent to retire from the Army of the United States and go back into the body of the people from which they came—go back into civil life.

The private soldier is held by the tenure of his service for five years, the full term of his enlistment. He must then re-enlist. This bill in its scope must necessarily be very limited from the nature of the case, because when a man has served five years and we will say obtained the rank of a non-commissioned officer, he is required to re-enlist, and may not be able to re-enlist, in the same company or even in the same may not be able to re-enlist in the same company or even in the same regiment. He may be obliged to go to a recruiting station very far distant. The law prohibits the increase of the Army beyond twentyfive thousand men. If a man is serving in Oregon, the Secretary of War may have issued an order that recruits be not taken in Oregon. In fact he may be waiting for the adjustment of the recruiting that is going on before he will permit any more recruiting to be done at all, and then a man may be obliged to seek a distant recruiting station and there enlist in some other regiment, be assigned to a company, take his chances for promotion in a company in which the full number of non-commissioned officers already exists; and so the chances are multiplied very materially that he will not obtain the rank of a non-commissioned officer again for a number of years.

If I were to express my own feeling about this matter of retirement, considering what the Government has already done for commissioned officers, I should say that the scope of this bill ought to be very materially enlarged, because from the very necessity of things it can only apply to a very few persons.

In the next place, very few persons re-eulist for six consecutive terms, and he is examined at each enlistment, while an officer is not subject to these continual examinations as to his fitness to remain in the Army, but remains inevitably unless he determines to go out, which he rarely does. Therefore the number of persons to be benefited by this bill is very limited, and they are certainly a class of persons not inferior in their deservings to that other class for whom we have already provided with a certain degree of munificence. These are the men we most want. Officers we can always get; the privates we sometimes have great difficulty in getting; and as we have already given this privilege of retirement to the commissioned officers of the Army, we ought not to perpetuate the distinction between them and the private soldiers by a legislative inhibition, in fact, that no such relief, no such chance of future support, shall ever attach to a man who is unfortunate enough to be in the ranks and against the man who is fortunate enough to be appointed an officer in the Army.

I think, therefore, that upon all reasons, if we are to consider the

I think, therefore, that upon all reasons, if we are to consider the retired list as any part of the Army establishment, if that is to be a feature of our legislation with reference to the Army, it ought to apply to non-commissioned officers, and I would say also to the private soldier. That is my own belief. If, then, this bill is objectionable at all, in my judgment it is objectionable because it does not embrace enough persons; it ought to embrace more; but the committee thought it was proper to consider this peculiar class of persons, as has been stated by the Senator from Texas, as a class now in sight and peculiarly deserving, and one to which there can be no possible obscible obsc been stated by the Senator from Texas, as a class now in sight and peculiarly deserving, and one to which there can be no possible objection whatever, and in that view this bill has been presented. I think that on reflection no Senator who has voted for the retired list now existing in reference to commissioned officers, or who believes that an essential part of the Army establishment, can consistently vote against this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not propose to discuss the bill, but I wish to say a word or two on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa besay a word or two on the amendment of the Senator from lowa because I intend to vote against the amendment. As I mean to vote against it I want to state why I shall do so. I am not opposed to the education of representatives of the colored people of the country at West Point or at any other place, and I am not opposed to their going into the Army and Navy, and anywhere else where white people go. If the Senator from Iowa introduced this amendment for ple go. If the Senator from lowa introduced this amendment for the purpose of giving them a fair and equal show at the public Treasury with white people, he does not provide for enough of them. They should have at least twenty-five or thirty, if we give them a fair representation in proportion to their numbers. But I am like the Senator who made a suggestion a moment ago. I do not think I am prepared to vote to increase the number of men at West Point. I think from the experience we have had with that institution, lately think from the experience we have had with that institution, lately at least, it would be quite as well if we did not have anybody at West Point; and, therefore, because I am not disposed to increase the number of gentlemen who are to be educated at the public expense at West Point, I am opposed to this amendment.

A SENATOR. To be educated?

Mr. TELLER. They seem to be educated and mutilated. I believe the public control of the public of the pub lieve the institution supported by this Government at West Point is lieve the institution supported by this Government at West Point is not very valuable to the country. In my judgment, if we should withhold all appropriations from it and send the young men to their families, we should do a very good service to the country, and for that reason I am opposed to sending any more there of any kind or color. Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think the proposition of the Senator from Iowa would destroy and break up the West Point Military Academy. The amendment is to authorize and direct the President to appoint colored cadets at West Point. If he offers it for the purpose of breaking up that institution I think it will accomplish that object. A few days ago when a resolution was offered here in reference to the maltreatment of a colored cadet at that place we heard it proclaimed that there was no association there between the heard it proclaimed that there was no association there between the white cadets and the colored cadets. It was stated on the floor of the Senate that white men there did not associate with the colored cadets who had been placed in that institution. That will be the result, however many you may place there. You may place an equal number of colored and of white cadets in that institution, and you will find that the colored cadets will associate together and the white cadets will associate by themselves. It will be so in every department of this Government wherever you attempt to bring the two races together.

The fact is that enforced association is impossible. There may be a disposition on the part of some white men to associate with colored people, and whenever that disposition prevails the association may take place; but unless there is that disposition, you cannot implant it in the breast of the white men by legislation. If you send colored cadets to West Point in any considerable number the consequence will be that parents will withdraw their sons or the sons themselves will neglect their studies or so conduct themselves that they will not be compelled to remain in the institution.

Now, I have no special love for West Point. I think it would be very well to do without such a military institution in this country; but if we have an institution designed to educate youth for the purpose of entering the Army and promoting the efficiency of the military establishment, then I think we eught to act with reference to it in that way which would make it most efficient.

in that way which would make it most efficient.

You may say that it is a prejudice on the part of the white young men against colored people. It may be prejudice, but it is implanted in their bosoms; it is placed in their being; it is utterly ineradicable, in my opinion. What is the use of our attempting by force of statutes to do that which persons themselves do not desire to do in reference to their associations? Colored cadets may go there and have the benefit of the instruction, but they cannot have congenial association which would make their abode in that institution at all pleasant. In my opinion it does not promote the interest of either race to enforce association. opinion it does not promote the interest of either race to enforce association between the different colors; and I think it was absolutely an act of cruelty to send that young man Whittaker to that institution, knowing as those who placed him there must have known that he would occupy an isolated position in the institution. While I have no doubt the professors of the institution gave him all the facilities that were proper, gave him all the recognition that was right and proper to make his condition as comfortable as possible, yet I believe it an utter impossibility to place a young colored man in association with a large number of white men and compel them to receive him into their company and into their association. I understood the other day from the remarks of a Senator on the other side of the Senate that the colored cadet had no associates. This, then, is not exclusively a feeling opinion it does not promote the interest of either race to enforce asso colored cadet had no associates. This, then, is not exclusively a feeling in the breasts of the white people of the South, but it resides in the hearts of the people of the North just as thoroughly as it does in those of the people of the South. Enforced association in this country between the races, I repeat, is impossible; and I am glad it is so, because the interest of both races requires that there should be distinction between them in their associations.

I do not believe it would promote the interests of the colored man to bring him in social intercourse with the white man. He will receive all the sympathy from the white man that his merits entitle him to, and I should be glad to see his condition improved by aid extended by the white race. I have no antipathy against the colored man; and because I speak my sentiments honestly and frankly, I do not wish it to be understood that I have the least unkind feeling for the colored people. I have lived all my life in a community where they reside. I have always treated them with courtesy and kindness. they reside. I have always treated them with courtesy and kindness; have had them in my employ; and have done many acts of kindness to them.

Now, Mr. President, as I am on the floor I will make a few remarks on the bill itself. When this bill was introduced, I interposed some objection very briefly to its passage. I desire to say to the Senator from Texas who has charge of the bill that I was not prompted in that opposition by any hostility to the soldiers in any class, whether non-commissioned officers or commissioned officers or privates; but I have been in the Senate long enough to know that there are particular times, and a greater manifestation of it has been made in the present session than I have witnessed heretofore—when there is a strong desire on the part of Senators to increase the pension list and the retired list of this country. I am aware that there are influences strong desire on the part of Senators to increase the pension list and the retired list of this country. I am aware that there are influences which incline us in that direction. In the first place, the sympathies of humanity, which are honorable to our whole race, prompt us to do kindness to others, the soldier especially, because of late years he has been the bean ideal of the American people; but there is another influence—he has a vote. From some cause or other, there has been manifested in the Senator as I think an under anyticty to promote the manifested in the Senate, as I think, as undue anxiety to promote the interests of the soldiers of the country at the expense of the interests of other classes who bear the burdens we impose upon them. This bill adds about forty-two men to the retired list, as it is stated by the Senands about forty-two men to the retired list, as it is stated by the Senator from Texas, doubtless truly, but what will be the total drain on the Treasury? While it may be true that this bill only proposes to add forty two names to the retired list, the debate which has been indulged in on this proposition has revealed the fact that there is a strong inclination existing in the Senate Chamber to extend the benefits of the retired list and the pension list further than they are now extended by the operation of law.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMUN] a few moments are retired.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hamlin] a few moments ago gave expression to his views on this subject, and if I understood him correctly he thought that the provisions of this bill ought to be extended to the private soldiers of the Army. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] very emphatically raises an objection to this bill because it is not sufficiently comprehensive in its scope. He desires that the beneficence of the country shall be extended much further than this bill proposes to extend it. I believe he did not indicate how far he would go or in what direction he would bestow the bounty of the Government, but he gave emphatic expression of his disinclination to the bill on the ground that it did not extend far enough.

So the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] a few days ago, breathing the same spirit, indulging in the same style, wanted the charities of the country extended still further, and introduced into the Senate a bill to place persons in the civil service upon the retired list after a certain number of years. I do not know but what that might be done with equal propriety as to be continually extending the benefits of the bounty system and the pension system to the soldiers of the country. There are men who have been in the civil service for a great length of time, worthy men, who have been faithful in the performance of their duty. I heard the other day of the death in the performance of their duty. I heard the other day of the death of a gentleman in this city who had been consecutively for forty-three years in the civil service of the country, and during all that time had been absent from his post but five days. The father of the same gentleman, I understood, had served in the same capacity, in the same entreman, I understood, had served in the same capacity, in the same office, for a period of over forty years. These gentlemen were doubtless just as worthy as men in the military service, and I do not know but what the provisions of the bill introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island would be just as equitable and just as proper as those of the bill now under consideration proposed by the Senator from Texas

But, Mr. President, I say here and now that I think we have carried this business of pensioning people and placing men on the retired list fully as far as it should go. However worthy they may be—and I have nothing to say against the worthiness of the gentlemen proposed to be placed on the retired list by this bill or by any other measures that have been suggested in debate—I think we ought to be careful not to lay a burden upon the people of this country too heavy to be borne. We have now a pension list of more than two hundred thousand, I believe two hundred and fifty thousand soldiers; we have a naval pension list; we have a retired list of the Navy and of the Army. That is not all. There are other classes in this country whe are now pensioned on the tax-payers of the country. Every stockholder in a national bank drawing his interest on the capital, while he has tendered to him the franchise of banking, is in a certain sense and to a certain extent a pensioner on the bounty of the Government. But, Mr. President, I say here and now that I think we have carhe has tendered to him the franchise of banking, is in a certain sense and to a certain extent a pensioner on the bounty of the Government. Every gentleman engaged in manufactures all over this country that is receiving the benefit of a protective tariff, laid exclusively for protection without regard to the necessary revenue of the country, is to that extent a pensioner upon the bounty of this Government, and his pension is paid directly or indirectly out of the pockets of the people of this country.

Sir, it is time we had called a halt. It is time we looked on the Sir, it is time we had called a halt. It is time we looked on the other side of this picture and looked to the taxes out of which these pensions are all paid. They are paid by the toiling millions, the farmers, the mechanics, and the laboring men of the country who are placing the money in our Treasury which you donate so liberally, ah, so lavishly to bounties, to pensions, and to retired lists.

While you are voting away the people's money the sons of toil are laboring at the plow-handle and in their work-shops from sun to sun with scarcely an hour's intermission; compelled to labor and toil in order that they may raise the means necessary to support their families and to pay the exactions which your liberality, which your gratuities exact from them. We had better direct our attention to lessening the burdens of the tax-payers of this country, rather than increasing those burdens. I have some regard for the people who pay the taxes that come into the Treasury. Whenever the people of pay the taxes that come into the Treasury. Whenever the people who pay the taxes that come into the Treasury. Whenever the people of this country shall be unwilling to submit to these exactions, and shall demand of you to repeal these laws, what will become of your bounty list? What will become of your pension list? The people may submit to the yoke tamely for a while, but there will come a time when they will inquire of their public servants, and they do inquire of their public servants, and they do inquire of their public servants. public servants now, by what authority, by what right they place their hands in the public Treasury to take out the money which they have placed there by taxation on themselves and give it away at will.

I wish, sir, the minds of the people of this country could be properly directed not only to the liberality but I say to the extravagance of the American Congress in voting away the moacy they have placed in the Treasury; and I think if the people could be fully aroused on that subject we chould hear no more of retired lists, and we should hear that there was less lavish expenditure of the revenues of this

I have not made these remarks because I am opposed to doing all that is right and proper for the soldiers. I respect them in their calling just as I respect every other man in his calling, no more, no less. I would do for them equal and exact justice, but I would not do more at the sacrifice of the rights and by doing injustice to others. I would reward them for their services properly, but I would not attempt to create a privileged class in this country who are to be retired after a certain number of years upon the bounty of the Government while more than nine-tenths of the people in this country are compelled to more than nine-tenths of the people in this country are compelled to labor for their daily bread.

I have said, Mr. President, all I desire to say on this subject. I shall record my vote against this bill and against every measure which proposes to create in this country any additional privileged class. Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in perfect good faith. I believe that it is essential that we should have some congressional declaration with reference to the public policy that we intend shall prevail at the West Point Military Academy. I believe colored youths are admitted to nearly every college in the United States. I see no reason why they should be excluded from West Point.

Mr. HARRIS. Are they excluded?
Mr. ALLISON. I propose to state affirmatively that they shall not be excluded. We have now four colored regiments in the Army of the United States, I believe, two of infantry and two of cavalry. It may be said they are not excluded, as the honorable Senator from Tennessee seeks to suggest to me. It is true they are not excluded by any law of the United States; but they are practically excluded, or at least have been for many years.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question? He says they are practically excluded. Who practically excludes them? Has not your party had the President all the time? He has had the power to appoint colored cadets and so have time? He has had the power to appoint colored cadets and so have members of the House. Have they ever appointed them? Then, if they are practically excluded, they are practically excluded by the Senator's party.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not intend to go into any party discussion of this question. I trust that it will be considered above above the constant of the president of t beyond and outside of party considerations. The question is whether or not we shall make a legislative declaration that it is the public policy of the Government of the United States that colored persons shall have the same access to the military school of the United States that the white youths of this country have. That is the question of policy to be considered.

Mr. HEREFORD. That is the law now.
Mr. MAXEY. As the Senator from Iowa has stated that he offered Mr. MAXEY. As the Senator from Iowa has stated that he offered the amendment in entire good faith, allow me to suggest that the Constitution says the President "shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint" officers. The Constitution further declares there shall be no distinction made "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." I sak the Senator, as a lawyer, if Congress can pass an act in the phraseology of his amendment compelling the President to appoint from either the white or the colored race without making a distinction on account of race, color, or previous condition?

of race, color, or previous condition?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there is any constitutional difficulty in the way. I think there is no doubt of the fact that the President, in the way. I think there is no doubt of the fact that the President, if we give him the authority, can appoint two colored cadets at West

Mr. MAXEY. He can do it now.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment simply proposes to put upon our statute-books a legislative declaration that it is the policy of this Government that the colored citizens of the Republic, who owe it duties, who are compelled in time of war to come to its defense, shall have their share. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] says that he opposes the amendment because they do not have their proper share. I want simply by this amendment to make a legislative declaration that they shall be recognized in the appointments made at West Point. That is all I propose. The President is now authorized to appoint ten cadets at large. This amendment proposes that instead of ten he may appoint twelve cadets at large, and that two of them shall be from the colored race.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Under the law now cannot the President, cannot every member of Congress, select a colored boy if he likes?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KERNAN. Then are not all equal?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no difficulty on that score, but I wish to put on record a legislative declaration. I will say to my friend from New York that it is part of the public policy of this Government that West Point shall be open to all its citizens and that the President in the exercise of the appointing power, which we give him exclusively, shall out of the twelve appointments to be made select two from the colored race. That is all there is in this amendment.

Mr. BECK. Does the President need coercion on that subject?

Mr. BECK. Does the President need coercion on that subject?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether he does or not. If he does need coercion, I propose to place this provision in the statutes that he may be coerced. The youths sent to West Point are compelled before they can enter that Academy to undergo a most rigid examination physically, mentally, and morally, and with reference to their educational advantages prior to their entrance at West Point. If the President of the presid dent selects two colored youths who can pass that examination, I want to know what objection there is to his doing it; and if he does not do it of his own volition, I want to know what objection there is to placing upon record a statute which will authorize and direct him to do it? That is all there is of this amendment, and I hope it will

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am utterly astonished at the position taken by the Senator from Iowa. The country knows how kindly the President of the United States feels toward the colored race. Delegations of colored people have called upon him, and he has expressed his kindness toward them and shown them a circular issued to the heads of the Departments requiring them to recognize the colored element in appointments to offices, and with that before him the Senator from Iowa comes and asks a democratic Congress to take the Executive by the throat, and compel him to recognize the colored people of this country in appointments made by him, asking the democratic party to compel the republican Executive to recognize the colored cadets at West Point!

Why, sir, is it possible that a distinguished republican Senator will rise in his seat and ask such a thing at the hands of a democratic Senate? Members of Congress have the right to appoint cadets at West Point. Nearly one-half of the members of the House are mem-West Point. Nearly one-half of the members of the House are members of the party in sympathy with the republican Executive. They have the right to appoint colored cadets there; and the Senator from Iowa might just as well ask Congress to put a provise in this bill compelling the Representatives from the different States to appoint one-half of those they are entitled to appoint, from the colored people.

Mr. President, I cannot think that the Senator from Iowa is in earnest. I cannot think that he would so reflect upon his republican Executive and upon his republican party and the record which they have been making for so many long years. It is an admission to the have been making for so many long years. It is an admission to the country that they are not recognizing the colored element.

I have seen it stated that the colored element will ask for the Vice-President's position in the coming contest. I suggest that the Senator insert an amendment in this bill compelling the national republican convention, when it meets in Chicago, to nominate a colored man for Vice-President. They constitute nearly one-half the voters of the republican party, and I think that the party ought to recognize them, but it ought not to come to the democratic party for the compulsory measures to make them do what they otherwise ought to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business, being the resolutions declaring that WILLIAM P. KELLOGG was not elected and that Henry M. Spofford was elected United States Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term beginning March 4, 1877.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 22d instant approved and signed the following act and joint reselutions:

The message also announced that the President had on the 28d instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence by holding an interna-tional exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2440) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to the Fairmount Park Art Association thirty condemned or captured bronze cannon, to be used in the erection of an equestrian statue to the late Major-General George Gordon Meade, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the seat held by WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as Senator from the State of Louisiana.

Mr. JONAS Mr. President, the pending contest is brought here not so much by Judge Spofford as by the State of Louisiana, which for three years has been deprived of her constitutional representation on this floor. The Constitution provides that the Senate "shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years." The State of Louisiana by her Legislature has at least twice within the past three years called the attention of the Senate to the fact that she has been deprived of her constitutional representation in this body; that the Senator chosen by her Legislature to fill the term beginning March 4, 1877, has been kept from his seat; and that an usurper never chosen by the Legislature of the State has been permitted to misrepresent her.

This, then, is no mere question between individuals as to the possession of the honors or emoluments of office, but it is the demand of a sov ereign State that she may have in this body that representation which is guaranteed to her by the Constitution. The question not only concerns Louisiana and her people, but those of every other State, who are all interested in the legislation of Congress and the constitution of the Senate, and who are vitally interested in knowing that the Senate is a constitutional body, whose members are elected and qualified in accordance with the requirements of that instrument. was well expressed in a report made to the House of Representatives by a committee which investigated the Louisiana election of 1874, and which bears the distinguished signatures of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, Mr. Vice-President Wheeler, and Mr. Frye, and from which I beg leave to read, page 24:

It is further said that this is a question which concerns the people of Louisianaalone, and that they should be left to fight out the question among themselves.
But this is an erroneous view, both of the rights and the duties of the people of the United States under the Constitution. They have an interest in the questions whether Senators and Representatives for Louisiana, thrust into their seats by illegal means, shall sit in Congress to make laws for them, and whether electors, gaining their office in like manner, shall turn the scale in the choice of a President of the United States. The President and Congress are bound to recognize and, if need be, to support the true government of Louisiana against all usurpers; and the American people will abandon their rights and flinch from the performance of their duties when they leave these questions to be settled either by the mob or the

The question of the recognition of a State government is also involved, for the two claimants to this seat have presented different credentials, each purporting to be signed by a different governor of credentials, each purporting to be signed by a different governor of Louisiana, each bearing the seal of State, and each certifying the election of a Senator by a different Legislature. As there could be but one governor and one government in Louisiana at the same time, and only one Legislature, it becomes the duty of this Senate, in the investigation of the title to this seat, to ascertain and decide who was the real governor of Louisiana inaugurated in January, 1877, and which of the two bodies which met and held, or pretended to hold, sessions in New Orleans in January, 1877, was the legal Legislature of Louisiana. This duty becomes even more imperative from the fact that the members of the House of Representatives elected to the Forty-fifth Congress from Louisiana bore credentials signed by Francis T. Nicholls as governor, (who also signed the credentials of H. M. Spofford,) and that the House of Representatives recognized those credentials and seated the members thus accredited. Where there are two governments and two Legislatures, each claiming authere are two governments and two Legislatures, each claiming authority, in a State, and the trouble cannot be accommodated and settled by the people of the State themselves, it becomes the duty of Congress to decide which is the legal government within the State. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Luther vs.

Borden, (7 Howard, 42,) says:

Borden, (7 Howard, 42,) says:

Moreover the Constitution of the United States, as far as it has provided for an emergency of this kind, and authorized the General Government to interfere in the domestic concerns of a State, has treated the subject as political in its nature, and placed the power in the hands of that Department.

The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on the application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State. For, as the United States guarantee to each State a republican government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in the State before it can determine whether it is republican or not. And when the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union, the authority of the government under which they are appointed as well as its republican character is recognized by the proper constitutional authority, and its decision is binding on every other Department of the Government, and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal.

Senator Morton in a speech made in December, 1875, reported in

Senator Morton in a speech made in December, 1875, reported in volume 4, part 1, of the RECORD, page 5, said:

I will show before I get through, that before the seating of Mr. Kellogg, the people of Louisiana had settled this question of a disputed government themselves.

In the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the 22d of October, 1877, I find that Mr. Hill introduced the following resolution:

The controversies heretofore existing in the State of Louisiana as to which of two rival bodies was the Legislature of that State, and as to which of two rival claimants was the governor of said State, having been settled by the State itself since the last adjournment of the Senate,

Resolved, That the Senate do recognize and accept said settlement as final.

This resolution was offered fully in the spirit of the doctrine laid down by Governor Morton and the doctrine held by the Supreme Court in the Rhode Island case. On the 25th of October, on motion of Mr. HOAR, the following substitute was adopted by a party vote:

Resolved, That it becomes necessary in determining the validity of an election of Senator held in January, 1877, to inquire who were the lawful Legislature at that time, and that no other authority is competent to determine that question for the

Thus the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who reported in favor of Mr. Kellogg, refused to accept the settlement made by the people of Louisiana themselves, and declared that the Senate alone had people of Louisiana themselves, and declared that the Senate alone had the right to inquire who was the Senator legally elected from Louisiana. To resume, Congress of course includes both the Senate and the House, and if they have not agreed, and until they can agree, the question remains an open one, and undecided, unless in the mean time the people should have decided it for themselves. Senator Morton again, on page 11 of the same RECORD, said:

That power was never given by a statute. If it had been, the President could exercise that power just as he has exercised this; but he has never been authorized by an act of Congress to say whether a government was a monarchy in form or a republic in form. Congress could give him that power, but never has. But Congress has given him the power to say, when there are two governments in a State, which one is the lawful government, and his exercise of that power is binding upon us as a separate body. It is binding upon all the courts by the express decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Congress as a Congress, both Houses, can reverse it, but not otherwise. Suppose it were so. Suppose, if you please, that one House can do it. The Senate might recognize the Kellogg government, the House might recognize the McEnery government, and the President might recognize still a third government. Then we would have anarchy. If the Senate was to admit a Senator certified to by Kellogg, and the House to admit members certified to by McEnery, then we should have anarchy, we should have confusion utterly at war with our system of Government.

It is urged on behalf of the sitting member that the vote of the Senate giving him his seat on the 30th of November, 1877, was final and conclusive on the question involved and that it constitutes resadjudicata, and cannot now be inquired into. This defense is no more a surprise to us, Mr. President, than is the resolution submitted by the committee to the other side.

I find that on the 30th of November, 1877, during the debate which immediately preceded the seating of Mr. Kellogg, the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] offered the following amendment to the pending resolution:

Resolved. That nothing in this resolution shall be so construed as to preclude the Senate from its right to demand an investigation of the charges presented in the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, and upon which a vote of the Senate has just been taken, as affirming the right of WILLIAM P. KELLOGG to a seat in the Senate.

After some colloquy with the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. Conkling,] Mr. Morgan withdrew his amendment, with the notice that at some future day the claims of Kellogg would be investigated fully, and that then he expected the republican side of the House to contend that the passage of the resolution seating him constituted res adjudicata as to all the questions involved. Mr. MORGAN said:

Mr. President, I have brought this subject to the attention of the Senate and the country. What the rights of myself or any other Senator may hereafter be must be judged by the Senate when the question is presented. Of course they must be judged under the law and according to the Constitution; but I must say that it is my duty now to inform the Senate that upon some proper occasion, if his resolution shall pass, an opportunity will be demanded to bring the subject of the fraud of Kelloge in obtaining his credentials to the attention of the Senate and the country, and on that occasion I shall be very much gratified—and from the view I take of the subject now I must confess that I shall be much mistaken—if the Senator from New York should not object to the consideration of that resolution upon the ground that it has been included in the final vote of the Senate on this subject. I now beg leave, Mr. President, to withdraw my amendment.

I do not admit, Mr. President, that the plea of res adjudicata has any place or force in the proceedings of legislative bodies, especially where these bodies are the sole judges of the election, returns, and qualifications of their own members, in the last resort, and without appeal. There are no precedents of a similar character to this case for the application of the rule, and the right to inquire into the election of a sitting member when questioned by the State he claims to represent rests in the discretion of the body which, by the Constitu-tion, is alone invested with the jurisdiction to decide it.

But granting, for the sake of argument, that the plea of res adjudi-cata would be a good one if this was a contest between two claimants cata would be a good one it this was a contest between two claimants under the same government and claiming election from the same Legislature, which would simply be a question which of two individuals the acknowledged authority had accredited here, how can it be applied to defeat the right of the State of Louisiana who says that her lawful representative is denied his seat, and that that seat is filled by an usurper who was never chosen by her Legislature and who presented credentials from a government which never existed in

And if doubt might exist as to whether the Legislature which elected Judge Spofford could demand an investigation of this question, its status being involved, there can be no doubt that the Legislature elected in 1878, which sent me here, and the Legislature elected in 1879, both of which had undisputed legality, could call the attention of the Senate to this wrong and ask that it might be investigated and righted, no matter how solemnly decided. But this application was for a rehearing. It was to have the case reopened, retried, to have new evidence introduced, and to have questions investigated which on the former hearing were arbitrarily decided by a partisan majority without investigation, almost without hearing. I ask what provision of the Constitution, what law, written or unwritten, what precedent, deprives this Senate of the right to reopen and grant a rehearing in a case involving the constitutional right of a State to repprecedent, deprives this senate of the right to reopen and grant a rehearing in a case involving the constitutional right of a State to representation and the question as to the legality and recognition of her government? And this, too, when there is no appeal from the judgment rendered, if wrong.

The question to be decided here is a political question; it is not judicial. The Senate is not a court, or, if so, is a law to itself when engaged in the investigation of the title of its own members, and cannot be held to the technicalities of courts of law.

It may be, and is, to the public interest that the plea of res adjudicata should be applied to put an end to private litigation, but it is not, and never can be, to the public interest that an usurper should retain a seat in Congress to which he was never elected, against the protest of the State which he pretends to represent, when he has been seated through error, fraud, or partisan injustice. It is the State which has the constitutional right to be represented by two Senators of her own choice. It is her right which is to be investigated and not the mere claims of an individual, and when at any time she denies that she is properly represented here it becomes the duty of the Senate to investigate her complaint. And this is a continuing duty which the Senate can never avoid or refuse to perform, and from the performance of which she can be debarred by the claims of no individual. As Senator EDMUNDS said in 1875 when speaking on the resolution to seat Pinchback:

It has been said that the State of Louisiana is entitled to two Senators and that it is a wrong to her that she does not have them. That is true; but it is two Senators that the State of Louisiana is entitled to, and unless this man be her Senator we commit a gross outrage upon her by giving him a place here as her representative; and it appears clear to me that he is not.

Is not the outrage upon the constitutional rights of Louisiana just as great if we keep a man here (already seated) who is not her Senator, and are not the requirements of the Constitution as binding upon us in the one case as in the other? The case of Fitch and Bright, which will be relied on upon the other side, was a case entirely dissimilar from this. In that case only questions of technicality were involved. The facts were undisputed. The State government was not questioned. The Legislature which elected Fitch and Bright was the admitted Legislature of Indiana, and the joint session in which they were elected contained an undisputed quorum of legal members of that Legislature. The protest against their election came from members composing and styling themselves the minority of that Legislature. There was no doubt that Fitch and Bright represented the solemn will of the State of Indiana. The only question raised was a technical one as to whether or not that will had been expressed with proper form. There was no act of Congress at that time regulating elections for Senators, and in the absence of such general law its legality would not at this day be doubted. On page 396 of the Congressional Globe for the special session Thirty-fifth Congress will be found the opinion of Mr. McDonald, (now the distinguished Senator from Indiana,) at that time attorney-general of Indiana, sustaining the validity of the election, and advising the governor to grant credentials to the Senators elected.

dentials to the Senators elected.

Indeed, since the passage of the act of Congress, in the case of Senator Eustis from my own State, (who was elected in the same manner.) this body has sanctioned such an election.

Having been once decided, there was no reason of public policy why this case should have been reopened. It was a simple contest between individuals for the honors and emoluments of office. There was no new evidence, no disputed facts; it was the same dry question of law which had been argued and decided before. The State of Indiana was not here contending that these Senators were mere usurpers and that they were never chosen by her Legislature. They had not been seated upon credentials signed by a stranger to her executive chair and office. No constitutional objection whatever was made to their election, and yet many of the ablest men in the Senate and country argued and yet many of the ablest men in the Senate and country argued and yet many of the ablest men in the Senate and country argued and voted that this case should be reopened and tried again. Among these were Mr. Douglas, John Bell, William H. Seward, HANNIBAL HAMLIN, Zachariah Chandler, Simon Cameron, Ben. Wade, Henry Wilson, Mr. Collamer, and Lyman Trumbull, and the minority report made by the two last-named Senators, and referred to in the report of the committee, is both powerful and convincing. In it they say:

mittee, is both powerful and convincing. In it they say:

The power of the Senate to judge of the election and qualification of its own members is unlimited and abiding. It is not exhausted in any particular case by once adjudicating the same, as the power of re-examination and correction of error and mistake, incident to all judicial tribunals and proceedings, remains with the Senate in this respect, as well to do justice to itself as to the States repsented or to the persons claiming or holding seats. Such an abiding power must exist, to purge the body from intruders, otherwise any one might retain his seat who had once wrongly procured a decision of the Senate in his favor by fraud or falschood, or even by papers forged or fabricated.

In what cases and at whose application a rehearing will at all times be granted it is not now necessary to inquire; but when new parties, with apparently legal claims, apply, and especially when a sovereign State, by its Legislature, makes respectful application to be represented by persons in the Senate legally closen, we consider that the subject should be fully re-examined, and that neither the State, the Legislature, nor the persons now claiming seats can legally or justly be estopped or even prejudiced by any former proceedings of the Senate to which they were not parties.

It is evident on examination of the proceedings in the Bright and Fitch case that the committee did re-examine the case, and found there was nothing new in it and nothing to change their previous opinion that the State of Indiana already had upon this floor "two Senators chosen by the Legislature thereof."

In the case of Gholson and Claiborne, in the Twenty-fifth Congress, the House of Representatives adopted a course exactly the opposite of that pursued by the Senate in the Fitch and Bright case, and at the second session of the same Congress reconsidered the action by which they had seated Messrs. Gholson and Claiborne, on the merits of the case, reversed their action, and sent Messrs. Gholson and Claiborne back to the people.

In reference to this question of res adjudicata I should like to read briefly from the remarks of Judge Thurman in May last when the resolution was before the Senate authorizing the committee to take

Sir, it is certain, and very certain, that the Senate would disgrace itself, it is very certain that the Senate would do manifest injustice, were it to hastily, or without the most plain, the most manifest reason, reverse a decision that had been made seating a Senator on this floor. The case must be extremely strong that would justify such a proceeding as that. All that I am free to admit; but to say that the technical rule of res adjudicata that applies in courts of justice applies in this Chamber on a question of this kind, is to confound all distinctions and to disregard all the laws of this body.

Is there anything more fundamental than that, in deciding a question as to the right of a Senator to a seat on this floor, the Senate is a law to itself? Is there a single book, a single authority that anywhere asserts that this Senate would be bound by a decision even of the Supreme Court of the United States upon a question of this kind? Not one, but they all state the reverse. The Senate would not be bound in deciding this, of which it is the sole judge, by even the views of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the Constitution of the United States. This is well-known haw. I could cite a case from my own State in which the supreme court of the State had construed the constitution, and in which upon the question of seating a member of the senate the senate of the State took a different view of the constitution and decided according to their view and not the view of the supreme court of the State. This is excessarily results from the fact that we are the sole judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of the members of this body, and, therefore, we have our own course of proceeding, we have our own judgment, and no judgment that we can make can be reversed. All this was very fully admitted by my friend whom I see sitting before me [Mr. CARPENTRE] in the very notable case of Abbott; but although he and I differed very much indeed as to what the Senate ought to do in that case, upon this fundamental principle we went arm in arm. That, then, is the first proposition.

Now, how does the rule of res adjudicates as administered in the courts of common law apply to a case of this kind? I si tho fundamental principle we went arm in arm. That, then, is the first proposition.

Now, how does the rule of res adjudicates as administered in the courts of common law apply to a case of this kind? I si though the subject of the pleas of res adjudicates and supplications that any of the proposition of th

Senator Hoar. As I understand, unless it be true that the returning-board system of declaring the election was unconstitutional and the Packard legislature an unconstitutional Legislature, you rest your claim on the fact that when you were elected there was a Legislature which had been in fact organized by a large majority of the conceded choice of the people?

Mr. SPOFFORD. Yes, sir.
Senator Hoar. And that whether you obtained a strictly legal certificate in the beginning, or whether you were prevented from getting a strictly legal certificate by the transaction, from the fact that the Legislature had not made proper provision for one under the constitution, is entirely immaterial, it being conceded that the Legislature that acted was composed of a majority really chosen?

Mr. SPOFFORD. Yes, sir. I was not elected until the Packard government had entirely disappeared and had given up all pretensions to power.

Senator Hoar. I do not see myself how there can be any doubt of the soundness of your position.

of your position.

I propose to demonstrate from the evidence that there can be no doubt of the soundness of this position, although it was immediately afterward abandoned by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, who took the lead in the committee in voting down the request of Mr.

Spofford for leave to take further testimony.

In the proceedings of the committee, pages 79 to 96, will be found the discussion of the proposition made and urged by Senator SAULSBURY, by Senator Merrimon and by Senator HILL, on behalf of Judge Spofford, that further time should be given him to take further testimony in order to elucidate this case. The discussion ended by a refusal to take further testimony. I will read but a few words:

take further testimony. I will read but a few words:

Senator Merrimon. I must call attention now specifically to one point on which Mr. Spofford proposes to take testimony, touching which, if I recollect correctly, there is no admission at all. That point I think will be material when we come to consider the merits of the whole case. Mr. Spofford says "that the composition votes for Senator and political proclivities of the Legislature on the 24th April, 1877, when H. M. Spofford was elected Senator, were substantially as set forth in the aforesaid argument," meaning Spofford's argument made before the committee on another occasion. One of the points he makes is this: At the time of Kelloge's election there were two rival bodies, one called the Nicholls legislature and the other the Kellogg legislature. Each of those bodies claimed to be the lawful Legislature of the State. They were then in a state of contest and protest, and there was nothing settled as to the legality of either body. What he wants to prove is that afterward this contest was settled; settled to the satisfaction of both these contesting bodies; settled to the satisfaction of the whole country, outside of the politicians.

Senator Cameron. That you cannot prove.

Senator Cameron. That you cannot prove.

Senator Merrimon. And that the very men who sat in the Packard legislature at the time that it is pretended Kelloge was elected actually went into the Nicholls legislature, and that they voted for Spofford himself. I submit that is a material fact, and a strong circumstance going to show that the persons in the Packard legislature and a strong circumstance going to show that the persons in the Packard legislature and a strong circumstance going to show that the persons in the Packard legislature ture and composing it at the time that it did this act, did not regard it as a lawful legislature; that they regarded it as a body of men insisting upon a right which was afterward settled, and which became the regular Nicholls legislature, or the regular legislature of Louisiana, which elected Mr. Spofford. Mr. Kelloog does not admit that fact; it is nowhere admitted; and Mr. Spofford now proposes to prove that fact, to wit, that many, very many, of the persons who were in the so-called Packard legislature, and voted for Mr. Kelloog, afterward went into the legislature as ascertained and established, and voted for Mr. Spofford, thereby repudiating the action that had taken place in January in the election of Mr. Kelloog, and thereby giving the strongest declaration they possibly could that they themselves did not at that time understand the Packard legislature as having any real existence or any existence. I insist that the testimony is important, and that Mr. Spofford ought to be allowed to prove it.

And yet the committee refused to allow Mr. Spofford to take this

And yet the committee refused to allow Mr. Spofford to take this And yet the committee refused to allow Mr. Spofford to take this testimony so material to his case, this testimony upon which the whole case in fact really turned, as was insisted in the resolution offered by Mr. Hill. The committee voted finally on the 23d of November. On the very day when they refused to reopen this case for further testimony the chairman stated that there were already some five thousand and odd pages of testimony. On that day the committee were unable to agree as to what was testimony and as to what was not testimony. It was evident that no one knew what was in testimony and no one knew what the testimony was; and yet on the testimony and no one knew what the testimony was; and yet on the 26th of November, three days afterward, they made their report to the Senate, a report pretending to judge the case, and which shows, as was the fact, that the majority of the committee could not have read the testimony, or that they were totally unfamiliar with what was proven.

Mr. President, let us examine the questions suggested by Senator Was the action of the returning board unconstitutional and fraudulent? Was the Packard legislature an unconstitutional legislature, and was the legislature which elected Spofford composed of a majority of those conceded to have been chosen by both sides? This is what is claimed by Judge Spofford, and if true in either respect, the soundness of his claim was conceded by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts.

I shall not fatigue the Senate by reading the election laws of Louisiana as they existed from 1870 to 1876, inclusive. Nor shall I enter into any argument of my own as to the constitutionality of the returning board or the legality of its acts. These questions have been discussed after investigation in this body, in the House, before the electoral commission, in elaborate reports to Congress, in the press, and on the stump, ad nauseam, until the theme is threadbare. I proceed to show by the highest republicant estimony, and by the telegraphic of the statement o ose to show by the highest republican testimony, and by that alone, that the returning board had no right under the constitution and laws of Louisiana to do more than to compile and make return of the votes actually cast at the polls; that they were unauthorized even if the law under which they acted was constitutional to throw out votes actually cast, and thus to change results, except where protests had been filed and affidavits made at the time and place of casting the votes, and only after full investigation had been had, and full proof made of the circumstances justifying such action. And the record shows that they threw out votes and changed results without investi-gation and arbitrarily, and that they pretended to return by this means a Legislature without a legally elected quorum in either house, which pretended Legislature went through the farce of electing Mr. Kellogg a United States Senator.

In regard to the constitutional right of the returning board to thus make the returns I desire to read again from republican testimony. I read first from the speech of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Ep-Munds] made March 16, 1875, in the Senate, on the admission of Pinch-

What are the returns that they-

The returning board-are to send to the secretary of state? Can any man stand up and say that it is any other thing than what the language of the law says, a compilation of results from the various sources which the law has provided and which has flowed into their hands. Such returns, it says—not those obtained by extrinsic evidence; not those obtained upon affidavit; not those obtained upon the judgment of any court; not those obtained in any other way than that they come from the separate assemblies of the people, sworn to and certified in the manner prescribed by law, their seals broken in their presence, and the results of those statements are to be proclaimed—and such results, thus proclaimed, are prima facte evidence.

Then he quotes the law of Lowisians

Then he quotes the law of Louisiana.

Then he quotes the law of Louisiana.

Not a list of any persons such as, according to their judgment, ought to have been elected; not a list of such persons as, according to their judgment, or as according to any evidence except that which the constitution and this law speaks of, ought to have been elected or were elected. The question of determining who were elected, the constitution had invested in the house of representatives itself; and this action under the law and the constitution, therefore, is only to ascertain, as the law in terms declares, who in the first instance appeared from the papers to have been elected by the people and who thus, for the time being, make up the composition and the aggregate of the representatives of the people, under the constitution, in the house of representatives and in the senate. That being done, the constitution invests that tribunal with power to determine upon the right of every member who takes a seat in it and of every person who makes a claim to it; and if we were to hold otherwise we should then hold what this lamentable affair has shown would be the natural consequence of such a proceeding, that it is within the competence of the returning board of Louisiana at any time, without regard to what the original papers may show, to select a house of representatives and a senate for itself.

As they did in that instance and as they did in the present accepts.

As they did in that instance and as they did in the present case in the composition of the Legislature—if Legislature it can be called—which sent Mr. Kellogg here:

It may take those who were voted for; it may take those who were not voted for, whatever it chooses to take and chooses to send a list to the secretary of state become the members of the house of representatives and of the senate for the time being, on the theory of this election of this claimant here; and there is no help for it, while the constitution says that the returns coming from the people shall appear in the house of representatives and be canvassed and counted, having been sent to the secretary of state and by him turned over, and while the law says that this returning board, guided by the explicit letter of its commands, shall certify to the secretary of state the names of the persons who according to the returns, and those only, have been elected by the people as their representatives in the General Assembly. And yet, when you turn to this case, you find upon the undisputed evidence conceded all around that the board which returned the body of men that elected Mr. Pinchback never had any returns, never had any votes, and that they made up their list of the persons who were to compose the house of representatives that elected this gentleman from information which they received from a great variety of sources.

Again he says on page 65.

Again he says on page 65:

Again he says on page 65:

Let us proceed to find what returns it is that the secretary of state is to lay before the Legislature, either by the constitution or by the election law of Louisiana. The constitution says that the returns shall be sent to him. The same constitution says that those returns shall be turned over to the speaker of the house of representatives by the secretary of state. That plainly imposes on the secretary of state the duty of turning over to the Legislature the very papers, unaltered, unchanged, unopened, that he receives. If this word "returns" in this constitution does not apply exclusively to those primary and fundamental evidences of local action which the people are to give in their various parishes, then you have no provision in the constitution for any returns from the people, and you may begin your election at the returning beard, as I do not know but that this one, so far as we can get at any fact about it, began and ended at the same place.

I read again, Mr. President, from the report made by Messrs. Hoar, Wheeler, and Frye, in 1875, (pages 20 and 21.) They say, (this was the report of the minority of the committee, Messrs. Hoar, Wheeler, and Frye:)

WHEELER, and FRYE:)

Wheeler, and Frye:)

Upon this statute we are all clearly of opinion that the returning board had no right to do anything except to canvass and compile the returns which were lawfully made to them by the local officers, except in cases where they were accompanied by the certificates of the supervisor or commissioner provided in the third section. In such cases the last sentence of that section shows that it was expected that they would ordinarily exercise the grave and delicate duty of investigating charges of riot, tumult, bribery, or corruption, on a hearing of the parties interested in the office. It never could have been meant that this board, of its own notion, sitting in New Orleans, at a distance from the place of voting, and without notice, could decide the right of persons claiming to be elected.

The board took a different view of its powers, and proceeded to throw out the votes from many polls where they found intimidation and violence to have existed. The result was to defeat persons whom, on the returns, they should have declared elected, and to elect persons who should not have been declared elected. In regard to four parishes they declared no result whatever, but referred the matter to the Legislature.

The result of this action was to change the political majority of the persons who, by the constitution and laws of Louisiana, are entitled to organize the house of representatives.

The returning board claims that in this proceeding they acted under an honest belief that they were right in their construction of the law, and that they were giving effect to the true will of a majority of the people of Louisiana, and that in their construction they followed the precedent set by the democratic or fusion returning board of 1872. We believe they did follow such a precedent. We have no doubt that they believed they were defending the people of Louisiana against a fraud on their constitutional rights. But there is no more dangerous form of self-delusion than that which induces men in high places of public

The majority of the committee in the report made by Messrs. Foster, Phelps, Potter, and Marshall, in the same volume, say:

Phelps, Potter, and Marshall, in the same volume, say:

We hold, therefore, that in November, 1874, the people of the State of Louisiana did fairly have a free, peaceable, and full registration and election, in which a clear conservative majority was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, of which majority the conservatives were deprived by the unjust, illegal, and arbitrary action of the returning board.

To the resolution reported to the House from the committee, as to the action of the returning board, we are all agreed.

We understand the committee to be unanimous in finding the fact that the action of the returning board has defeated the will of the people as expressed by them at the polls on the 3d of November, 1874. The people then elected to the lower house of their Legislature a majority of conservative members; a portion of the conservative members thus elected were refused their certificates. This is an act of great injustice to the individuals, of gravest danger to the State and free government, and ought to be immediately corrected by any power competent to correct it.

I shall not read from the reports of democratic committees, the Morrison committee, the Potter committee, the Field committee, the minority of the Howe committee of the Senate, all of whom take the same view that these republican authorities have taken of the power and action of the returning board.

It became necessary, of course, for the republican party to defend the action of the returning board in 1876, for high game was involved, no less a stake than the Presidency. Therefore all of these fine words were recanted, not a republican voice was raised to condemn the action of the returning board, although it rivaled in atrocity the outrage of 1872, and was far more unjustifiable than the action of the same board in 1874. But the expressions of opinion made in 1873 and 1875 cannot be blotted out, and the conduct of the returning board in 1876 can be most strongly condemned by quoting the language of those who now seek to defend it.

I do not intend to read to the Senate the mass of testimony taken by the Howe committee of the Senate and the Morrison and Field committees of the House in relation to the conduct of the election in Louisiana in 1876. It is all in evidence here, and it fully establishes the legality of that election. It shows that the democrats elected their governor and a majority in both branches of the Legislature, (not to speak of the electors.) It is proven that the election was free from violence and intimidation, and fair, except that the election was free from violence and intimidation, and fair, except that the democratic party were deprived by fraud of a large number of votes in the city of New Orleans. All this was shown by the returns made by the commissioners of election. There were no affidavits of intimidation or violence accompanying these returns, as required by law, but affidavits and protests, made in the city of New Orleans long after the election, were received and considered. The charges in these protests and affidavits were abundantly disproved yet the returning board threw out enough votes to give the republican electors and governor a pretended majority and to give a pretended republican majority and pretended quorum in each branch of the Legislature. All of the outrages successfully perpetrated in 1873 and 1875 were sought to be repeated in

In those years they were enforced under the protection of the military power of the United States. The military power was again expected to intervene. Kellogg, in whose behalf it had successfully interfered in 1873, making him governor over a people who had spurned him at the polls—Kellogg, at whose request it had dispersed the Legislature elected by the people in 1874, was still at the helm, still controlling the same machinery, still organizing conspiracy for his own benefit, and still confident of receiving aid and assistance from the then President.

The avidence hitherto taken and that just taken fully show Mr.

The evidence hitherto taken and that just taken fully show Mr. Kellogg to have been the head of a conspiracy organized to rob the people of Louisiana of their political rights for the third time. His aim and object was to secure the position of Senator for himself. The little incident of the Presidency was an afterthought, born of necessity, and probably not originally contemplated.

To show the political condition of Louisiana at that time I will read again from a republican report. Whether all the members of the Hoar committee agreed to this report or not I do not know. It was reported by a sub-committee :

Mr. McMILLAN. Does the Senator cite this to show the condition of Louisiana in 1876?

Mr. JONAS. Yes, sir, I do; and I cite it for the reason, Mr. President, that this testimony was taken in 1875; that the condition of things remained unchanged; that Kellogg was governor; that all political power was in his hands; that although one branch of the Legislature under the Wheeler compromise was in the hands of the conservatives, yet they were unable to repeal any law upon the statute-book. The election laws, the registration laws, and the administration of all those laws, remained in the republican party and remained in the hands of Mr. Kellogg as its head. This report was submitted by Mr. HOAR as the report of the sub-committee and was adopted by the whole committee and reported to Congress. adopted by the whole committee and reported to Congress. It was made by the distinguished gentleman who recently was elected governor of Ohio, Mr. Foster, a man who, but that on this occasion he preferred to do justice to Louisiana rather than to follow the partisan behests of his own party, might have occupied the position that Mr. Hayes does to-day, provided he had been willing to take office on such doubtful title. Mr. Foster says:

on such doubtful title. Mr. Foster says:

The general condition of affairs in the State of Louisiana seems to be as follows: The conviction has been general among the whites since 1872 that the Kellogg government was a usurpation. This conviction among them has been strengthened by the acts of the Kellogg legislature in abolishing existing courts and judges and substituting others presided over by judges appointed by Kellogg, having extraordinary and exclusive jurisdiction over political questions; by changes in the laws centralizing in the governor every form of political control, including the suspension of the elections; by tontinuing the returning board with absolute power over the returns of elections; by the extraordinary provisions enacted for the trial of titles and claims to office; by the conversion of the police force maintained at the expense of the city of New Orleans into an armed brigade of State militia, subject to the command of the governor; by the creation in some places of monopolies in markets, gas-making, water-works, and ferries, cleaning vaults, removing filth, and doing work as wharfingers; by the abolition of courts with election judges and the substitution of other courts with judges appointed by Kelloge in evasion of the constitution of the State; by enactments punishing criminally all persons who attempted to fill official positions unless returned by the returning board; by unlimited appropriations for the payment of militia expenses and for the payment of legislative warrants, vouchers, and checks issued during the years 1870 to 1872; by laws declaring that no person in arrears for taxes after default published shall bring any swit in any court of the State, or allowed to be a witness in his own behalf—measures which, when coupled with the extraordinary burdens of taxation, have seemed to vest, in the language of Governor (Kellogg'e's counsel, "a degree of power in the governor of a State scarcely exercised by any sovereign in the world."

This was the condition of affairs. Kellogg appointed and controlled the State registrar of elections. He controlled the appointment of supervisors for the parishes, all of whom were republicans and most of whom were sent from the city of New Orleans. His State registrar of elections was Mr. Michael Hahn, a candidate at that time registrar of elections was Mr. Michael Hahn, a candidate at that time for the Legislature and the same man who was installed by General De Trobriand in the speaker's chair of the house of representatives after the legal speaker, Governor Wiltz, had been ejected therefrom. His clerk, Mr. Blanchard, had access at all times to the books of registration for the city of New Orleans. Let me inquire who was Mr. Blanchard? An affidavit made by himself, to be found at page 207, volume 4, of Bartlett's Contested-Election Cases, in the testimony given in the case of Sheridan vs. Pinchback, will tell who Mr. Blanchard was in his own language. Mr. Blanchard was the State registrar of elections under Governor Warmoth in 1872 and 1873, and conducted that election and conducted it fairly, if nonular oninion is to be bethat election and conducted it fairly, if popular opinion is to be believed in Louisiana; but in 1873 or 1874 he came forward and made lieved in Louisiana; but in 1873 or 1874 he came forward and made an affidavit in which he charged himself with perjury, with forgery, with falsifying the record, with making false returns, and with swindling the people of Louisiana out of their votes at the election of 1872. After making this affidavit, after making the affidavit that he did all this against Governor Kellogg and in favor of McEnery, he was received into the loving embrace of Governor Kellogg and made his confidential clerk and intrusted with the management of his elections

This man Blanchard issued orders in the name of the deputy registrar, and had the books of registration removed to the custom-house, where he had full charge and control of them, and the testimony shows that he employed his force of clerks to cancel and erase therefrom the names of democratic voters. This will be found in the testimony of Peter Williams, page 537 of the testimony recently taken. Kellogg received and consulted constantly with Blanchard, and Jewett, the secretary of the committee of registration of the republican party, at his house during the counting of the votes and the action of the returning board, also with Wells and Anderson, members of that board. He received them, not in broad daylight but in bers of that board. He received them, not in broad daylight but in the dark, by the back door, in the silence of night, where they came to him to bring portions of the returns that they were engaged in perfecting, papers connected with the election, connected with the returning board, connected with the office of the supervisors of registration, and they counseled with him as to what changes were necessary to be made in order to secure the election of a republican Legislature. This will be found in the testimous of the process. lature. This will be found in the testimony of Hauser, at pages 505 and 509. Of course the sitting member has endeavored to contradict and 309. Or course the sitting member has endeavored to contradict this testimony, but he has not endeavored to impeach either of these witnesses, Williams and Hauser, both of whom were prominent persons in his own party. Of course he has a corps of witnesses who are brought forward through all this testimony, drilled to contradict everybody, drilled to deny everything, drilled to say that everything was false or that everything was impossible that unimpeached witnesses were received by an existing dense. Levelt is the masses was raise or that everything was impossible that unimpeached witnesses swore was actually and positively done. Jewett is the man who issued the sewing-machine circulars, by which thousands of democrats were deprived of registration and of their votes. He it was who sent out the circular to the supervisors of registration which I shall read. It has appeared in evidence before, but I wish it to appear again, because this was the battle order, the plan of the cam-

Dear Sir: It is well known to this committee that from examination of the census of 1875 the republican vote in your parish is 2,200 and the republican majority is 900. You are expected to register and vote the full strength of the republican party in your parish.

Your recognition by the next State administration will depend upon your doing your full duty in the premises, and you will not be held to have done your full duty unless the republican registration in your parish reaches 2,200 and the republican vote is at least 2,100.

All local candidates and committees are directed to aid you to the utmost in obtaining the result, and every facility is and will be afforded you, but you must obtain the results called for herein without fail. Once obtained, your recognition will be ample and generous.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Mr. JONAS. It is all to be found in the stack of evidence which has been submitted in this case. After the declaration of returns by the returning board, Governor Kellogg fortified the State-house and made of it a military barricade. I was appointed by the caucus of the democratic members of the house of representatives, of which I was a member, chairman of a committee to visit the State-house the Saturday before the assembling of the Legislature, to examine the fortress and to ascertain from the governor whether the membersfortress and to ascertain from the governor whether the memberselect were to be permitted to occupy their seats and organize the Legislature in the State-house or not. I went down with my committee and we were admitted through a half-closed door in the front of the house, the other half of the door being nailed up and barricaded. Armed sentinels were standing within the door, and armed police officers were in charge of the entrance. We examined the whole building. The main side of the building fronting on Saint Louis street, which had several large entrances, the whole house in fact being usually thrown open on that side, was not only closed but heavily barricaded, like a fortress in a state of siege. But one-half of the door, as I have stated, was open on Royal street, and nobody was permitted to enter there without giving his name and receiving special permission from the sentinels placed on guard by the acting governor and commander-in-chief of Louisiana.

We saw Governor Kellogg and we learned from his lips that if our governor and commander-in-chief of Louisiana.

We saw Governor Kellogg and we learned from his lips that if our names appeared upon the list of members returned to the Legislature by the returning board we would be permitted to enter that house and take our seats, but that if our names were not on that list it would be impossible for him to guarantee that we could enter the State-house. He was afraid, he said, of broils, afraid of troubles, afraid that the Legislature might be improperly organized; afraid, said he, that it might turn out as it did in 1875—that was when the people organized their Legislature in the State-house, and made it necessary for him to call for military aid to eject them. An ounce of prevention he doubtless thought was better than a pound of cure.

On the day of the meeting of the Legislature the democratic mem-The speaker of the house organized and proceeded to the State-house in a body. The speaker of the house, Mr. Bush, and myself were at the head of the column. We were both of us certified to be elected by the returning board. When we arrived at the door there were two people in charge, and beyond them could be seen a host of policemen all

I omitted to say that while in the State-house Saturday preceding we found nearly the whole of the police brigade of the city armed and regularly encamped in that fortress. We found an opening between the State-house and the Orleans Hotel where the United States tween the State-house and the Orleans Hotel where the United States troops were quartered, through which they could obtain immediate ingress into the fortress in case of necessity. I say we presented ourselves at the door of the State-house. We found there an individual whom I know by sight as connected with the governor's staff, but I do not know him by name. We found another individual, whose capacity I did not know until I read his own statement in the evidence recently taken by the committee, a Captain George L. Norton, who at that time held the position of harbor-master for the State governat that time held the position of harbor-master for the State government, and who at this time, like everybody else connected with the Kellogg drama, holds an office under the Federal Government. He stood there in charge, and graciously deigned to inform Mr. Bush and myself that we could enter, but none of those who were with us could do so unless their names were on the certified list returned by the returning board, which list was in the hands of his companion. I see by this testimony now that he was there in the capacity of a staff officer of Governor Kellogg. He says, "I was on your staff and acting on your staff." The testimony will be found at page 1189. As we all could not pass the guard maintained by these staff officers of Governor Kellogg, none of us entered. We retired to Saint Patrick's Hall and organized the Legislature, but at the door of the State-house this protest was read, showing that the legal representatives of the people of Louisiana had done what was in their power to organize the Legislature within the State-house.

We, the democratic-conservative members of the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana, presenting ourselves at the doors of the State-house for the purpose of repairing to the hall of the house of representatives, found the State-house occupied by a military force, consisting of United States soldiers and Metropolitan police, having full control of said building, under the orders and direction of the executive of this State. The right to enter the State-house is denied to such of the members as have not certificates of election from the secretary of state, although duly elected and returned by the commissioners of election.

Besides the right of ingress is denied to contestants for seats in this body and to the public generally, and the State-house is barricaded and fortified as in time of war, notwithstanding the patent fact of general peace and tranquillity prevailing in this State and in this community.

We, therefore, protest most solemnly:

1. Against the invasion by the executive of the rights and privileges of the Legislature, a co-ordinate branch of government; and

2. Against the military occupation of the State-house by United States troops and Metropolitan police.

And we decline entering the hall of legislation until it be thrown open to all the members of the Legislature, and to all contestants for seats, and to the public, and until the said military occupation shall have ceased and all these obstructions shall have been removed.

A similar protest was adopted by the senate, and a concurrent resolution was telegraphed to the President giving the state of affairs. The Kellogg legislature organized in the military barracks, shut out from the light of day, the public not admitted, no one admitted unless he received a pass at the door or held the countersign. It orless he received a pass at the door or held the countersign. It organized with nineteen present in the senate. The senate consists of thirty-six members and nineteen was necessary for a quorum. This included Blunt, Hamlet, and Weber, who I will show were never elected, thus leaving only sixteen senators present. The house organized with sixty-eight present, sixty-one being required for a quorum, including ten who were not elected, to wit: Bird, Blair, Brewster, Early, A. R. Holt, Heath J. J. Johnson, Lane, F. Martin, and Swazie. Thus, including the Seventh ward, which for the sake of argument I concede here, although I will not hereafter, only fifty-eight members were present who could claim any pretense of election. The journal of the senate on the first day of their session, from which I beg to read briefly, shows that Mr. Hamlet having disappeared a few moments after the organization of the senate no quorum was present. Senator Twitchell "moved that the president of the senate be authorized to send for absent members and appoint such sergeants-atauthorized to send for absent members and appoint such sergeants-at-arms as he may deem necessary for the purpose." This was adopted.

On motion of Senator Blunt the senate took a recess for thirty minutes. At the expiration of the recess, the roll being called, only fourteen were pres-

Mr. Garland, senator-elect from the tenth senatorial district, was brought in.

Mr. Garland protested against his being brought before the Senate; and it turning out that he was a new senator who had not taken the oath, he was discharged on refusing to qualify.

Mr. Steven was also brought in. Mr. Steven was a holding-over senator. He was a member of the senate sitting at Saint Patrick's Hall. Mr. Steven had joined in the protest with the other democratic senators when not permitted to assemble in the State-house, and had contiguously the constant of the senate. participated in that organization of the senate. Mr. Steven, Mr. Garland, and Mr. Boatner, also a new senator, were sent by the senate as a committee to Mr. Kellogg, who was still at that time governor, to notify him that the senate was organized and ready to receive any communication which he might be pleased to make. After being admitted to the presence of Mr. Kellogg, and having delivered their message and having received his answer, these senators were captured, and while Mr. Garland and Mr. Boatner were released, Mr. Steven was held against his will under duress in the Packard senate, and I will read the proceedings which took place by virtue of the quorum which his presence constituted in that body.

The president ordered a call of the senate, resulting as follows: Present, 19, including Steven. A quorum present.

Having obtained this quorum-

Senator Harper moved that the cases of G. Y. Kelso and Percy Baker, contest-ants, be taken up from the table and acted upon, and called the previous question.

Neither Mr. Baker nor Mr. Kelso had been returned by the returning board. Finding that they were defeated, being unable to count them in, they failed to make any return and remitted the question to the senate; but Mr. Hamlet having disappeared, there being a fear of losing their pretended quorum, knowing that they could only hold losing their pretended quorum, knowing that they could only hold Mr. Steven in compulsory attendance for a brief time, they desired to act upon these cases and to seat Messrs. Baker and Kelso. Therefore without examination of the cases and without report, they proceeded to seat Mr. Kelso and Mr. Baker. Let us see how this was done.

"On call of the yeas and nays resulted as follows:"
Yeas 15, nays 3. "Blank—Steven—1."
This was on a call of the yeas and nays on a motion to seat a senator as required by the constitution of Louisiana. There were 15 who voted "yea," there were 3 who voted "nay," making 18 in all, and the constitution requiring 19 to be a quorum and Mr. Steven counted as voting blank, I will ask how any one can vote blank on a call of the yeas and nays? If that senate had any power over

Steven they could have compelled him to answer or hold him in contempt; but it was absolutely impossible for him to vote blank. Under this proceeding they seated Mr. Baker, and then on a similar motion they seated Mr. Kelso, Mr. Steven reported as voting blank. The statement of Mr. Steven is in evidence and I will beg leave to

On January 1, 1877, I was one of the holding-over senators who formed the senate of the State of Louisiana, convened on that day in Saint Patrick's Hall, in the city of New Orleans.

I was one of the committee of three appointed by the chair to inform Governor Kellogo that the senate was duly organized, and ready to receive any communication he might have to make, &c. The other members of the committee were Mr. Garland, of Saint Landry, and Mr. Boutner, of Catahoula, both of whom were elected in 1876. The committee proceeded to the Saint Louis Hotel, were admitted to Governor Kellogo's office, and delivered to him in person the message with which they were charged. Upon leaving Governor Kellogo's office I was stopped by two or three persons, who stated that they were sergeants-at-arms of the senate, and that I must accompany them to the senate chamber. I stated that the senate of the State had met in Saint Patrick's Hall on that day and had adjourned until the following day; therefore I refused to accompany them, and refused to submit to arrest.

I was thereupon seized by two or more of these parties and pushed and dragged to arrest.

I was thereupon seized by two or more of these parties and pushed and dragged in the direction of the senate chamber, I resisting at every step. In this manner we reached the outside bar of the senate, where by getting my feet against the railing, I was enabled for a few moments to make a more effectual resistance. I was finally forced to the bar of the senate. I addressed myself to the president, (Lieutenant-Governor Antoine,) who was in the chair, stating the circumstances which led to my arrest, protesting against the arrest, and demanding that I be permitted to withdraw. The president stated that I could only be permitted to withdraw by unanimous consent of the senate, which was refused. At this juncture Governor Kellogg came in through a door immediately in rear of the president's desk. I appealed to him as commander in chief of the forces occupying the building to release me, as I considered my arrest as equivalent to a violation of a flag of truee.

building to release he, as I considered, the senate had me in custody he flag of truce.

He stated that he was very sorry, &c., but as the senate had me in custody he could not interfere. I then made an attempt to go out, but was seized by several persons and forced back. I took a chair and sat down with my back to the president, at the end of the center aisle. The roll was then called, my name repeated probably a dozen or more times; I made no response nor gave recognition in any way, shape, or manner whatever. When the roll was called on the seating of Baker and Kelso I made no answer, nor gave sign or motion of any kind whatever.

WILL STEVEN.

This was the way in which Baker and Kelso were seated, and this is the way in which the Packard senate made their pretended quorum. I desire to call attention just for one moment here to Governor Kel-LOGG's statement to a committee of the Legislature in reference to this matter. A committee of the house went to Governor Kellogg on that same day to ask whether he had any communication to make to the house, and Governor Kellogg made quite a long address, in which, among other things, he said:

The same may be said as to the senate, a legal quorum of senators holding over and senators declared duly elected met in the senate chamber in the State-house, nineteen in number, and later in the day one of the holding over democratic senators appeared also in the senate chamber, making twenty senators present out of thirty-six.

Thus the governor stated to this committee that later in the day one of the democratic senators had appeared in the senate, making twenty present, when at that very time he knew that this senator had been dragged before the senate and held under duress, and had personally appealed to him for his release, and he had answered that he was in the custody of the senate, and that it was out of his power to do anything for him.

Steven, as I have said, was counted to make a quorum, and on a call of the yeas and nays reported as voting blank. Kelso and Baker were not even reported as elected by the returning board. The vote

Thus, deducting Steven, Weber, and Blunt, there were only 16 legally elected senators in the Kellogg senate (so called) when Kelso and Baker were admitted.

Hamlet participated in the organization, (claiming to be a senator from the Ouachita district,) but was not present on this occasion. He was returned by the returning board, although badly defeated by Meredith, democrat. Meredith died before taking his seat, and Stubbs, democrat, was elected in his place. The returning board threw out 1,517 democratic votes in Ouachita and 141 in Caldwell. Thus the republicans had but 16 senators. At the pretended election of Kellogg only 14 of these were present and participated. Demas and Wheeler, legally elected republicans, were absent, as were Weber and Hamlet, not elected, (page 384.)

Thus, giving Kellogg every man who had a pretense of being elected he had—

A quorum of the Legislature, which consisted of 36 senators and 120 representatives, total 156, was 79. Deducting the 3 from the Seventh ward, he had but 65 legal members present; and he never had even a pretended quorum in the senate to resolve to go into joint session or to transact any business whatever.

Long, republican, who received a larger vote than Johnson, republican, in De Soto, admitted his defeat in a published letter, and refused to take the seat the returning board gave him.

This Packard legislature, which as I have shown had no quorum, either at its organization or afterward, elected Mr. Kellogg, and then remained encamped in that barricade for the next one hundred and edd down transactions no hundred seasons. and odd days, transacting no business, keeping no journal, passing no bills, raising no money, having no power outside of the building and very little within. It remained there a disorderly mob until about the 23d or 24th of April, when it dispersed. Those who were legally elected went in and took their seats in the Nicholls legislature, where their names had always been carried upon the rolls. Those who were not elected went to their homes and admitted the fact that they were defeated. Their pretended governor came here and was appointed to office and went abroad, and the Packard government disappeared from office and went abroad, and the Packard government disappeared from the face of the land, never having had one hour's authority, never having had one hour's actual power, never having had one hour's actual existence as a government.

The Nicholls legislature organized with a quorum in both branches. It had nineteen senators present, and one (Meredith) sick, who subsequently died. On the twelfth day of their session Mr. Breaux came from the other house and took his seat, and on the thirteenth day of their session Wheeler and Demas from the other house came in and took their seats, so that by the thirteenth day of their session they had twenty-three senators present. They had at the organization sixty-two members present, one more than a quorum, and one Cockerham absent. He took his seat on the fifth day. This included the three members from the Seventh ward, who are shown by abundant testimony to have been legally elected. But whether they were or not, whether the Nicholls house organized with a quorum or not, it had one of undoubted members by the twelfth day of its session, Messrs. Kenneday, Estopinal, and Barrett having taken their seats and withdrawn from the Packard gang. Afterward, when Mr. Barrett returned to the Packard mob, Mr. Barron, of Natchitoches, took his seat, so that after the thirteenth day of the session the Nicholls legislature had a quorum of sixty-three members all the time without counting the three disputed members from the Seventh ward. It is seat, so that after the thirteenth day of the session the Micholis legislature had a quorum of sixty-three members all the time without counting the three disputed members from the Seventh ward. It is immaterial, however, whether the Nicholls legislature organized with a quorum or not; I have shown that the Packard legislature never had one, and never had legal existence or life.

In this place, Mr. President, I will take up the challenge offered by Mr. Kellogg. The other day, after the close of the speech by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. Balley,] he said:

It is a matter of fact that I think will not be disputed that the Nicholls legislature had not at the time it organized in January, 1877, a quorum of members in the lower house who were elected upon the face of the returns, and even by the showing of the democratic party itself, nor during the whole term of sixty days—the constitutional session of the legislature.

I will admit that the three members elected from the Seventh ward were not returned on the face of the papers; but I say that after the twelfth day of the session and during the whole balance of the sixty days and during the extra session the Nicholls government had in their legislature a legal quorum of legally elected members until the day of its adjournment.

It was admitted-

He says-that the republicans had chosen sixty out of that number.

I deny that. It was never admitted. It was admitted that the republicans elected fifty-seven members, and no more. In order to give them sixty it is necessary to count the three members from the Seventh ward, whose election was not only never conceded but the Nicholls legislature actually seated their opponents. He also says:

Moreover, the extra session, the session called after the MacVeagh commission went to New Orleans, I think, at no time had a quorum in their house without counting the three members from the Seventh ward.

Mr. President, the honorable gentleman is laboring under a strange hallucination if he thinks that the extra session was called after the MacVeagh commission went to New Orleans. The regular session expired on the 3d of March, and the extra session commenced on the 4th of March, on the very day that Mr. Hayes was inaugurated; and it probably had been in session from three to six weeks before the MacVeagh commission ever made their appearance in New Orleans; and during all that time, as I have shown, the lower branch in the Judge Spofford was not elected until the 24th day of April, after the Legislature had been in session over a hundred days. It had at that time not only an undisputed quorum, but comprised all of the members legally elected to the Legislature. It was the only Legislature in Louisiana.

In the house, Spofford received 110 votes—61 democratic and 49 republican. Seven republicans voted blank. Singleton, democrat, and Seveigne, republican, absent. Cockerham, democrat, was dead. also voted for Spofford.

This Legislature passed the acts which I have before me, (acts of 1877 and 1878,) some three hundred in number, which form part of the statute law of Louisiana, and are enforced every day, both in the State and Federal courts.

The question had been settled quietly and peaceably by the people themselves. The Packard government had disappeared, and the legally elected members who sat in his legislature had given in their adhesion to the lawful government.

Mr. President, what arguments, if any, are to be deduced from this 7 Let me borrow (and use without full indorsement) once more from eminent republican authority commenting upon what is described as a similar state of facts. In March, 1875, Governor Morton

Now I come to speak of the recognition of Kellogg. I will first speak of the recognition in fact. He has been the governor of Louisiana in point of fact, exercising all the authority belonging to that office. He has made recommendations to the Legislature and it has acted upon them. The Legislatures that have assembled since that time have submitted all their enactments to him. More than two hundred laws have been submitted to him for his approval or rejection—

Most of them he has approved, but some of them he has vetoed. He has been recognized by all the courts of Louisiana, the supreme as well as the subordinate courts, continuously. The laws enacted by the Legislature electing Pinchback, some hundred in number, have been enforced throughout the State from the time of the meeting of that Legislature up to the present day, and have been recognized by all the courts, high and low. This has been his actual and positive recognition by the different departments of the State government; there has been but one government in Louisiana; there has been but one governor; there has been but one Legislature. What was called the McEnery government existed only on paper; it never had any other existence; McEnery was never governor for a single minute. The Legislature that he assembled never assumed to pass a law, never assumed to act as such except to send a man to this body to ask for admission as United States Senator.

And by the by the weember sent by the Kellogg legislature which

And by the by the member sent by the Kellogg legislature, which had so much power and so much recognition, was never seated here by the party in power.

The actual government in Louisiana has been the Kellogg government, and it must be received as such until both Houses of Congress acting as a Congress, and not separately, shall decide that it is not the lawful government of Louisiana. I said the courts in Louisiana had recognized KeLLogG as governor, had recognized the Legislature that elected Pinchback as the Legislature of Louisiana, and that this government had the sanction of the State tribunals created for the express purpose of deciding all questions, whether in regard to elections or anything else, that might arise under the constitution and laws of Louisiana.

Again, in answer to the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. Ferry,] Mr. Morton said:

Morton said:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Ferry] the other day made an argument that somewhat surprised me. Why, he said, here was the certificate of McMillen elected by the McEnery legislature, and the certificate of Pinchback elected by the Kellogg legislature, one certified by Kellogg and the other certified by McEnery, and they stood on the same level, that one was a prima face case as much as the other. I was surprised to hear the Senator make that remark. The McEnery government never existed for a moment. It was only on paper. It was never recognized by the courts but repudiated by them all; never exercising power for a single instant. It was a mere government on paper, a humbug, a sham from the very beginning. As well might it have been said when the Senator from Connecticut came here with his last credentials that if somebody else had presented a paper signed by someother Legislature, that would have occupied the same plane with his credentials and should have kept him out until the question was tried. There is no comparison at all. Here is a Legislature, in fact, recognized by all; and you cannot compare that with a mere sham which never had authority and has been a laughing-stock from the beginning.

On page 3197, volume 2, part 4, Forty-third Congress, first session,

On page 3197, volume 2, part 4, Forty-third Congress, first session, Congressional Globe, I find these remarks by Mr. John Sherman, interpolated into the speech of Mr. BAYARD:

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, I desire to present one matter to him. The point upon which he is now speaking, the acquiescence of the people and the McEnery legislature in the present government of Louisiana, is one which has controlled my opinion and will control my action in this matter, and I desire to submit to him some information which I have, upon which I have relied in the course I have pursued and intend to pursue in regard to Louisiana. I have here a statement furnished me from the governor of the State, Governor Kellogg, and I wish to see whether it is contested. This statement certifies to me that eighteen members of the house of representatives of the legislature elected on the McEnery ticket, acting in the origin of this controversy with the McEnery party, admitted to be elected by both sides, have since the original controversy takez their seats in the present Kellogg legislature and acted with the Kellogg legislature and contributed to the passage of laws, and have by their acts expressed their acquiescence not only as citizens but as representatives duly elected by the people of Louisiana in the Kellogg legislature. The names are given. I have also a list of six who are said to have been thus elected legally and who have refused to acquiesce, and only six. I am informed that there are but six of those admitted to be elected to the house of the McEnery legislature that have not participated in the laws passed last winter by the Kellogg legislature. The names are given to me here with the districts they represent. I have also the names of sensors elected on the McEnery ticket, certified to be elected and returned by the McEnery party, and who have participated in the legislation of the last session, and the names of two or three now contesting for seats in the Kellogg legislature who were elected on the McEnery ticket.

If rankly say to the Senator from Delaware that I believe there has been gross irregularity, gross fraud, gross wrong in Louisiana on bath sides; but I desire to submit to his judgment the legal effect of this acquiescence, not merely by citizens who have the right to do as they please and whose action only affects themselves, but by the chosen representatives of the McEnery party who have participated and shared in the legislation of last winter and have acquiescence not merely by citizens who lave the right to do as they please and whose action only affects themselves, but by the chosen representatives of the McEnery party who have participated and shared in the legislation of last winter and have acquiescence in the legality of the Kellogg government. That with me is a controlling fact. If this statement I have made is disputed, I should like to know the basis upon which have the proof.

There was, however, a marked dissimilarity between the two cases which seemed so similar. The McEnery government had indeed disappeared, but it had been subverted by Federal bayonets. The peace appeared, but it had been subverted by rederal bayonets. The peace and order which prevailed in Louisiana was similar to that which reigned "at Warsaw" under the merciless rule of Suwarrow.

But the arguments of these two great republican leaders are strikingly applicable to the Nicholls government, which was recognized and acknowledged by the people of Louisiana throughout the length and breadth of the State, and without interference, force, bloodshed on the everying of arbitrary power.

or the exercise of arbitrary power.

The courts, to whose decisions both Mr. Morton and the honorable Senator from Illinois [General Logan] ascribed so much authority and Judge EDMUNDS so little, (when deciding political questions,) had

I beg to read from the decision in the case of State ex rel. Jumel vs. Johnson, in 29 Louisiana Annual Reports. I will state that this case

Johnson, in 29 Louisiana Annual Reports. I will state that this case was actually decided by the supreme court of the State of Louisiana in May, 1877, six months before the Senate seated Mr. Kellogg. It was an application for a mandamus by the auditor elected on the Nicholls ticket against the former auditor, who was a candidate for reclection on the Packard ticket, calling upon him for the delivery of the books and papers of the office. In this decision the court say:

We shall make the writ peremptory, and in doing so it is obvious that we recognize the relator as the auditor of public accounts of this State. There are persons and facts of which a court takes judicial cognizance. This court takes cognizance of the fact that Francis T. Nicholls is the chief executive of this State, and regards his commission as furnishing a prima facie title to an office. We take judicial cognizance of the persons who hold the principal offices of State—of the attorney-general who represents the State in this proceeding; of the relator as the auditor. Government could not exist, under our form, without thus taking certain things for granted. Government must have a beginning, and it is an elementary and a necessary principle that the courts constituted by and organized under a government must recognize the authority under which they act.

To the same effect was the decision of the same court in the case of

To the same effect was the decision of the same court in the case of State ex rel. Lisso vs. Peck, in 30 Louisiana Annual Reports, page 280. The supreme court which rendered these opinions was recognized, and has been from January, 1877, until April, 1880, when it was superseded under the new constitution as the highest court of appeals in the State of Louisiana. A writ of error was taken from the decision of the supreme court of the State in case of The State ex rel. Jumel vs. Johnson. This case came to the October term of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1879, and on the 5th of April last, 1880, it was decided by the Supreme Court, reaffirming the judgment of the court below. Mr. Chief-Justice Waite pronounced the judgment of the court. The judgment in this case is affirmed. The bearing the court below. Mr. Chief-Justice Waite pronounced the judgment of the court: "The judgment in this case is affirmed. The showing made by the plaintiff in error for a removal of his cause to the circuit court of the United States was not sufficient to oust the State court of its jurisdiction."

If presidential recognition was necessary, as argued by Governor Morton, (and presidential recognition and arbitrary action maintained Kellogg in his usurpation for four years,) the Nicholls government and the Nicholls legislature received it. The commissioners ernment and the Nicholis legislature received it. The commissioners sent by the President reported in favor of its recognition, and the President in accordance with their recommendation removed the troops. Packard was appointed consulto Liverpool. You gentlemen, over the way, confirmed him. He never resigned the office of governor nor pretended longer to claim it. There is no reminder of that attempted usurpation left except Mr. Kellogo, for whose benefit it was inaugurated. Its olly receivilian was the set of this health is was inaugurated. rated. Its only recognition was the act of this body in seating him, and that act was so inconsistent with law and precedent, and so unjustified by the evidence that the Senate owes it to itself (even if under no obligations to the Constitution, to Louisiana, or to the country) to review its decision, if for consistency's sake alone.

The Senate is inconsistent, because in seating me without objection it recognized the Nicholls government. I came here with credentials signed by Francis T. Nicholls. If Packard was governor and his legislature a legal body, I was neither elected nor properly certified, and yet no one in Louisiana or the country denies that I was both.

Mr. President, in discussing this question I have almost ignored the elected was an illegal mob, I care not whether he bribed its members, cajoled them, or in what manner he obtained his pretended election by their votes. He might as well have come accredited from a mass meeting or a mob of negro roustabouts on the Mississippi levee, and it would have been as profitless to inquire by what means he obtained such indorsement. The testimony is principally valuable as showing the character of the instruments through whom the sitting member operated. They are perjurers by their own confession, they are liars, they are scoundrels, they testify unblushingly to their own infamy, but it does not lie in the mouth of Mr. Kellogs to discredit them. They have been his agents, his friends, his legislators, his policemen, his detectives, his subordinates, those through whom under the protection of Federal bayonets he governed Louisiana; and I say again it does not lie in his mouth to discredit them, though, like Acteon's dogs, they should seek to rend and tear their master. They are the class of men who in the early days of reconstruction sent him to the United States Senate. They are the class of men who composed his by their votes. He might as well have come accredited from a mass United States Senate. They are the class of men who composed his fraudulent legislature in 1873, occupying seats, by the grace of President Grant, to which the best men in Louisiana had been elected. They are the class of men who composed his fraudulent legislature in 1875, and who were installed by President Grant and General Description of the president Grant in 1875, and who were installed by President Grant and General De Trobriand at his request. They are the class of men who composed his pretended Legislature in 1877. The perjury of Louisiana political witnesses has become a by-word in the land, but these witnesses are such as I describe, ignorant, debased negroes, or corrupt adventurers, most of whom have been the agents or employées of the sitting member and his associates in his desperate political ventures.

The sitting member and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts

The sitting member and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] have had much to say in denunciation of witnesses gathered from the slums of great cities. Mr. President, I cannot permit these witnesses to be slandered in the house of their own friends. They were gathered from the New Orleans custom-house and the Louisiana Legislatures of by-gone days, where, with the consent and to the knowledge of the cultured Senator from Massachusetts, they were installed in the seats of the representatives of property and intelliinstalled in the seats of the representatives of property and intelligence, and allowed to run riot so long as they were necessary to the exigencies of party. They came from the slums originally, but it has been the policy of the republican party to place the South under the domination of the slums, and these men, degraded and loathsome, as they confess themselves to be, are the peers of the average republican legislator in the South during the reconstruction régime. I am glad that the glare of public light is at last turned upon them, and to this end, if no other, the evidence has been valuable.

Where are these witnesses and legislators now? The evidence shows that nearly every one of these legislators, nearly every one of these witnesses, perjured as they are by their own confession, false as they are by their own confession, debased as they are by their own confession, hold offices now under the Federal Government, and are in the public employment, most of them placed there through the influence of the sitting member, namely :

In discussing this case I have been compelled to go back to the election of 1872, and to quote from the debates which arose in reference to the results of that election. I have done this in order to demonstrate that the title of Mr. Kellogg is founded in fraud. His election as governor in 1872 was a fraud. This body never seated the Senator elected by his legislature.

In that way being inconsistent to the last degree with every other action in that case, for according to republican testimony the Kellogg government was a real government; it had existence all the time, it represented the people of Louisiana. The Legislature they claim was a legal Legislature. At least it was a de facto Legislature, which passed laws which I and every other citizen of Louisiana were compelled to obey; it sent a Senator here and this Senate, after four years' debate testimony taken by the present committee, and especially that part of it relating to the means by which the sitting member obtained his seat. Holding as I do that that body by whom he claims to have been myth, which never had existence in Louisiana, and which I have shown had only such existence, as you ascribed to the McEnery government in 1873.

The republican House, however, seated the Congressman elected on the McEnery ticket from the State at large to the Forty-third Congress, although his vote was the same as McEnery's. As governor, Kellogg controlled the election machinery of 1874, by which that election was subverted by fraud. As governor he again controlled the election machinery in 1876, and sought to change the results of that election by fraud. He failed, except so far as his occupancy of a seat in this body for three years has been a success, and justice requires that this usurpation should be ended.

In his remarks the other day the sitting member said that a com-

In his remarks the other day the sitting member said that a committee of the Legislature of which I was a member had investigated his acts as governor and found nothing against him to complain of. There was such a committee, Mr. President, but it made but partial investigation and no report. I was opposed to it myself. I desired to obtain no evidence upon which to seek the expulsion of Mr. Kel-LOGG, for a motion to expel him would have been a disgraceful admission of his election.

He says that the committee searched his papers and letter-books and found nothing damaging to him. Is Mr. Kellogg, may I ask, the sort of a man to leave any accusing papers behind him, if any such ever existed? The expert of the committee searched among such papers as he found, but the search was about as profitable as such papers as he found, but the search was about as profitable as that generally made by the purchaser of unclaimed express packages in order to find something valuable in his purchase. The expert frequently came upon a trail, grew hot, (as children say,) but there was always a "missing link" which could not be discovered.

Mr. President, it has been charged in dispatches and paragraphs scattered through the press, evidently in the interest of Mr. Kellogg, that some bargain was entered into at the time he was seated, sait to late some bargain was entered into at the time he was scated, and the late Senator from Florida [Mr. Conover] is quoted as authority for the assertion. Mr. President, the statement is unworthy of belief. It is impossible that members of the United States Senate, who properly represented their people, could have made a seat in the Senate a matter of barter or arrangement. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and Mr. KELLOGG were seated at the same time, but on the 25th of February, 1879, fourteen months afterward, an attempt was made to unseat Mr. BUTLER and seat his contestant, and every republican vote cast except three was in favor of the proposition thus lican vote cast except three was in favor of the proposition, thus showing that the republican side of the House did not consider that the South Carolina case was finally settled any more than we to-day consider the Louisiana case to have been finally determined.

But, Mr. President, it is sufficient to say that Mr. Spofford made no bargain, that the State of Louisiana made none, and that no man living was authorized to barter, trade, or compromise the rights of either. The minority of the committee, in the bitter philippic which they are pleased to call their report, say:

The minority of the committee, in the bitter philippic which they are pleased to call their report, say:

The act which is demanded of this party majority would be, in our judgment, a great public crime. It will be, if consummated, one of the great political crimes in American history, to be classed with the rebellion, with the attempt to take possession by fraud of the State government in Maine, and with the overthrowof State governments in the South, of which it is the fitting sequence. Political parties have too often been led by partisan zeal into measures which a sober judgment might disapprove; but they have ever respected the constitution of the Senate.

I am at a loss, Mr. President, to perceive the connection between this case and the rebellion, but it would be impossible for the author of the minority report to discuss any question in which any portion of the South is interested without reviving the ancient ghost of the rebellion, and awakening memories of the war. If he imagines he can arouse any sympathy from the people by raising his ancient and well-worn war-whoop, I certainly shall not disturb him, but I imagine he will find that the people who put down the "rebellion," the gallant soldiers who fought the war of the Union, and those who honor them and hold their glorious deeds in grateful recollection, will have little sympathy to spare for the camp-followers and political adventurers who staid behind in the conquered country to misgovern and oppress an impoverished people. They will be glad, if I mistake not, to see the last representative of this class driven from his usurped honors to long-merited obscurity.

With the attempt to count in a State government in Maine, which was not elected by the people, I have never had any sympathy. It was too much like the Louisiana case to command my approval. But it was purely a State matter, with which Congress had no concern, and the people settled it themselves. No President interfered on behalf of either side; no general of the United States Army, with this Senate.

As for the alleged overthrow of governments in Southern States, none have been overthrown in the past save by the republican party and a republican President. None exist there now except those legally chosen by the people themselves and which have been recognized by Congress and a republican president. This recognition of the political equality and freedom of the people of the South may be a crime, according to the ideas of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I tell him that it meets with the approval of an enormous majority of the American people, as he and his party will discover should they ever seek to make that issue.

The minority of the committee say:

That political parties have too often been lead by partisan zeal into measures which a sober judgment might disapprove; but they have ever respected the constitution of the Senate.

What solemn hypocritical mockery is this, coming as it does from the party which refused Vance, and Thomas, and McMillan their seats, which kept Louisiana with only one Senator for five years, which ousted John P. Stockton from his seat in order to secure the necessary two-thirds to override the veto of an obnoxious President, which endeavored to seat the adventurer Corbin as a Senator from South Carolina, when he had never been elected, and which seated Kellogg as the representative of Louisiana without investigation, without credentials, without a shadow of right, claim, or title, as was well known at the time to nearly every man who voted for him?

The constitution of the Senate will ever be respected when it con-

The constitution of the Senate will ever be respected when it conforms to the requirements of the Federal Constitution, not otherwise.

In these latter days, Mr. President, other men have misrepresented States of the South on this floor. Men who were not elected by Legislatures nor accredited by governments chosen by the free voice Legislatures nor accredited by governments chosen by the free voice of the people. But they at least represented force and power. The Legislatures which sent them here, elected as they were by disfranchisement, and supported by the Federal Army, had authority within the States, and passed laws which we were compelled to obey. They represented the State sovereignty, even if wrested by force or fraud from the people, and, for the time being, there was no conflicting authority. But this is the first case, Mr. President, in which a Senator has been seated, chosen by no Legislature, accredited by no governor, and representing no State government which is known or recognized. ernor, and representing no State government which is known or recogmized by any people or authority in the land.

Mr. President, in conclusion I desire to say that for three years the State of Louisiana has been misrepresented on this floor by WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG; that for seven years she has suffered from his usurpation, misgovernment, and misrepresentation; that during most of that time his official tenure has been protected by the republican that time his official tenure has been protected by the republican party, and supported by the military power of the Government; that all of the wrong, all of the trouble, all of the bitterness, which has been visited upon my people during that time, can be laid at his door and to his responsibility. All of the calumny and misrepresentation which has been poured upon Louisiana and her people has been his work, and for the purpose of perpetuating his power.

These charges may fall upon ears, deafened by partisan zeal, on the other side of this Chamber, but I ask the representatives of the democratic party, who compose the majority here, who know the truth whereof I speak, to do justice to Louisiana, and to seat in this body the honorable and distinguished gentleman who has been chosen in a legal and constitutional manner to represent her here.

I ask my republican friends on the other side of the Chamber, (who a legal and constitutional manner to represent her here.

I ask my republican friends on the other side of the Chamber, (who by the exigencies of this case are compelled to empty the vials of their wrath and to shower denunciation and abuse upon the heads of our devoted people,) when the hour of passion shall have passed away and the voice of partisanship shall have become still, to visit for themselves our beautiful State and make the acquaintance of our people. They will find that their ears have been poisoned by falsehood and deafened by misrepresentation. They will find in Louisiana a generous, kind-hearted, and intelligent people, devoted to liberty, law, and good government, energetic, virtuous, and hospitable. They will find the most amicable relations prevailing between the races, and will find the sounlight of prosperity once more shining upon that beautiful land, and its people, white and black, marching shoulder to shoulder to gather its harvest of wealth, content, and happiness.

Mr. BLAINE and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator from Louisiana give way in order that I may call from the table the deficiency appropriation bill to request a committee of conference?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly. I desire to say nothing only to call attention to an extract printed in a volume quoted by my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Whyte in the chair.) The Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly I yield to the Senator from Virginia. I ask my republican friends on the other side of the Chamber, (who

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the Senate non-concur in the House amendment to the first amendment of the Senate, insist on its other amendments disagreed to by the House, and request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes upon the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. EATON, Mr. BECK, and Mr. BOOTH were appointed.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the seat held by WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as a Senator from the State of Lou-

Mr. BLAINE. There was scarcely necessity for my yielding, because I shall not occupy more time than the honorable Senator from Virginia has himself occupied in having the conference appointed. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate, and through the Imerely desire to call the attention of the Senate, and through the Senate of the country, to the extraordinary proposition now pending before this body and so elaborately advocated by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Jonas.] I think it will go into history, into the political annals of the Senate of the United States, as one of the most astounding propositions which have ever been submitted for the consideration of this body; astounding in violating all the precedents and principles of the organization of this body from the first Senate that exampled under George Weshinster's Precidence. that assembled under George Washington's Presidency; astounding from the evident motive that underlies it; astounding from the fearful, and I was almost about to say shameless, assertion of sectional government in this country which this movement implies and foreshadows.

We hear the republican party accused of sectionalism; and here are

We hear the republican party accused of sectionalism; and here are sixteen States either in the rebellion or in greater or less degree supposed to have sympathized with it, who have to-day on this floor thirty democratic Senators out of a total number of thirty-two. To succeed the thirty-first, my honorable friend from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCK,] a democrat closely identified with the rebellion against the Government of the United States has already been chosen. For the thirty-second, the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Kellogg,] a successor has likewise been elected. It is but a fraction, a figment of a single term of one of thirty-two Senatorships that represent the States that were in rebellion or sympathized with it, and the intolerance of the party which seeks to sway the destines of this Republic States that were in rebellion or sympathized with it, and the intolerance of the party which seeks to sway the destinies of this Republic is so great that they cannot permit an honorable understanding made on the floor of the Senate to be carried out. Such is the demand of the power that wields the destinies of this body to-day, and seeks in the interest of the same political sectional power to wield the interests of the Republic. When I say "an honorable agreement," I do not state it on my own authority; I do not state it on republican authority; I state it on the authority of a leading democratic paper in the South; and there is not a Senator within the hearing of my voice who does not know that the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] could not have been seated in the chair he now occupies except at the same time the honorable Senator from Louisians. pies except at the same time the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Kellogg] had been seated in the chair he occupies; and the Senator from South Carolina was seated only upon a prima facie claim to the seat, whereas the resolution seating the honorable Senator from Louisiana was upon a special declaration that he was entitled to it upon the merits of the case.

There is not the first symptom of a sign of a further investigation into the case of the honorable Senator from South Carolina. I do not into the case of the honorable Senator from South Carolina. I do not hear a suggestion that that prima facie case, pronounced so in the resolution which seated him, is even to have the dignity of an investigation; but the Senator, the offensive Senator, the Senator from the South who holds the last possible flag of republicanism over the sixteen States, although seated upon the merits of his case, with a successor elected, with a fraction only of his term fast running out, shall not be allowed to serve to the end. I hope the country will understand it. I hope the country will take note of the intolerant spirit that characterizes this proceeding. I hope the country will observe that of all the transactions from the foundation of the Government to this hour that ever pertained to the seating or unseating of Senators in this body, this is the most extraordinary, and the most indefensible.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have nothing to say in regard to what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] nor indeed have I much to say in reply to what has been said by my colleague, [Mr. Jonas.] I listened to him with great pleasure, for I feel quite sure his speech was intended for home consumption. Still I do not think it was intended for the planting interest, certainly not for the commercial interest of Louisiana, for they take little note, they care very little what is said here in regard to this case, I am sure; but my colleague saw fit to call in question what I said the other day in reply to the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BALLEY,] and it is proper for me to set myself right. And as it is a fair illustration of most that has been said by my colleague in regard to matters in connection with this case so far as the record evidence is concerned, as it will serve fairly to illustrate the anthenticity and genuineness. connection with this case so far as the record evidence is concerned, as it will serve fairly to illustrate the authenticity and genuineness of his statements, I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that my colleague in reply to some remarks made by me on Friday said that it never was admitted by his party friends that the three republican members from the seventh representative district of New Orleans were elected. He admitted, however, I believe, that if my statement was correct as to this matter that then there was really not a quorum in the Nicholls house. I now send to the Secretary's desk and ask the Clerk to read the part that I have marked.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 9th day of December, A. D. 1876.
WM. H. HOLMES,
Second Justice of the Peace, Parish of Orleans.

Mr. KELLOGG. It will be observed by this sworn statement or compilation of votes made by Messrs. Zacharie, Burke, and others, representatives of the democratic party of Louisiana, and styling themselves "a sub-committee appointed by the democratic conservative executive committee to witness the canvassing and compiling of the returns" of the Seventh ward, concedes that the three republican representatives, Gardere, Moore, and Blackstone, were in fact elected.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Admitted by the leading democrats in the State.

Mr. KELLOGG. Oh, yes; promulgated in all their papers.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Not only admitted but sworn to, if that would make it any stronger, about which there may be some

Mr. KELLOGG. I stated further that at the convening of the exra session during which session the MacVeagh commission visited New Orleans, there was not a quorum in the Nicholls house, except as the three defeated members from the seventh representative district and others admitted not to have been chosen upon the face of the returns were counted.

Now, I hold in my hand the journal of the extra session of the Nicholls legislature, so called. On the first day there were present sixty-seven members. If my colleague will take the trouble to examine this journal I think he will see that my statement was correct. Of those sixty-seven members these three persons admitted not to have been elected from the seventh representative district were included, and also one William Ridgley of Concordia, L. Barbin of Avoyelles, J. S. Berry of La Fourché, and H. P. Kernochan of Plaquemines. Here are the three members admitted not to have been elected from the are the three members admitted not to have been elected from the are the three members admitted not to have been elected from the seventh ward, and as an evidence that the others were not elected a few days after the others withdrew and the four republican members took their places in the Nicholls house under the MacVeagh arrangement, and thus were admitted to have been duly elected. Now, Mr. President, have I not made my assertion good? It was traversed by my colleague. I said that the democratic party admitted that the three republican members from the seventh representative district were in fact elected. My colleague denied it. Have I not made my assertion good?

Sir, I think this about the most material assertion that my colleague has made in reference to the election of 1876. What he had to say in regard to the election of 1872, and in regard to the election of 1874, I have no disposition to go into, at least at the present time, for I do not regard it as germane to this case. I might, I think, effectively reply to him in reference to Mr. Blanchard and also to other points made by him especially in recent to the number of recent them.

reply to him in reference to Mr. Blanchard and also to other points made by him, especially in regard to the number of men in the custom-house and the majority of supervisors asserted by him as sent to the country parishes, but I forbear for the present.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I was not in my seat when the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] whose attention I should like to have for one moment, made a statement as to some agreement having heavy made when I was supervisors this hold.

having been made when I was sworn into this body. Do I understand the honorable Senator to say that I made any agreement by which I procured my seat on this floor?

Mr. BLAINE. No, sir; I could not have referred to the honorable Senator because he was not a member of the body. I stated that a leading paper of the South, to be specific I will say a paper in the Senator's own city, in an elaborate editorial which I thought was written with endowed by the Procure ten with candor and great clearness, stated and showed by the RECORD that the honorable Senator never could have been seated except for an agreement made by Senators in the body.

Mr. BUTLER. Ah!

Mr. BLAINE. It could not have referred to the honorable Senator because he was not a member, but it bound, as the paper representing the Senator's political views in South Carolina states it, honorably bound the democratic side of this Chamber. That is what I stated.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know anything about it whatever. I remember having seen the editorial, but I know nothing about who wrote it or who inspired it, and therefore am not responsible for what the editors of the contract of th impression was made on my mind, as the impression was made on the mind of all who sat in the immediate part of the Chamber where I do, either that there had been a violation of good faith or that there do, either that there had been a violation of good faith or that there had been a breach of some engagement. An engagement between whom and made by whom? The Senator from Maine was a Senator at that time, I believe, from the State of Maine. He sat upon this floor. Was he a party to any engagement? Did he make an agreement by which a Senator should be admitted to a seat on this floor, who had not been elected by a proper constituency? Does he know of any of his associates who made any such agreement as that? Was there such an agreement? He says he refers to a newspaper in South Carolina or some paper published in the South. Certainly if an agreement was made somebody here would know something of that agreement, its nature and its terms, what would be its binding effect, and to what extent gentlemen would be in honor bound by the arrangement.

You had the majority at that time. Does not the Senator know the facts full well? Was he present or was he not present? Does he not know that the arrangement made was simply in regard to the voting, or at least that was the impression made here? Was it an agreement that the Senator from Louisiana should be seated, and that he should continue undisturbed in that seat? Was that the agreement? Certainly the statement made by the Senator from Maine produced that impression, or naturally would produce it upon the mind of the country. I rise, Mr. President, to say for myself, and so far as I am acquainted with Senators upon this side of the Chamber for all of them, that no agreement was made to that effect. Will the Senator say that he ever heard of such an agreement upon his side? There must have been parties to this alleged contract. Who were the parties? What was the contract? What was the agreement? Was it that in consideration that the Senator from South Carolina should be seated, the democratic Senators should forever be silent in regard to the seating of Mr. Kellogg? Was that your understanding of the agreement, and did you submit to it? Did you bind yourselves to it? Are we bound? Are you gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber bound by it? For myself I say that no such agreement was ever made. I do not believe that upon either side of this Chamber, republican or democratic, there can be found men so lost to honor, so lost to a sense of their duty to their constituents and to their country as to have made such an agreement.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the charge made by the honorable Senator from Maine is so surprising and unexpected to me that I am disposed to ask, simply on account of the gravity of that charge as affecting each member of the Senate, and peculiarly leveled against those upon this side of the Chamber, that the Reporter may read the remarks of the Senator from Maine in which he avers that there was an agreement—I think he said an honorable agreement—in reference to the seating of these Senators. I ask that the Reporter read that portion of the Senator's remarks in which that charge is contained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Reporter will read the remarks referred to.

The Official Reporter, Mr. D. F. Murphy, read from his short-hand notes of Mr. Blaine's remarks as follows:

notes of Mr. Blaine's remarks as follows:

The intolerance of the party which seeks to sway the destinies of this Republic is so great that they cannot permit an honorable understanding made on the floor of the Senate to be carried out. Such is the demand of the power that wields the destinies of this body to-day and seeks in the interest of the same political sectional power to wield the interests of the Republic. When I say "an honorable agreement" I do not state it on my own authority; I do not state it on republican authority; I state it on the authority of leading democratic papers in the South; and there is not a Senator within the hearing of my voice who does not know that the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] could not have been seated in the chair he now occupies except at the same time the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Kellog] had been seated in the chair he occupies; and the Senator from South Carolina was seated only upon a prima facte claim to the seat, whereas the resolution seating the honorable Senator from Louisiana was upon a special declaration that he was entitled to it upon the merits of the case.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President if is certainly a years remarked by fact.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is certainly a very remarkable fact that so grave and I may say so gross a charge should have been made in this body by a gentleman who was a member of the Senate at the time the transaction referred to must have taken place, and who yet professes no better authority than the anonymous columns of a newspaper not named. I do not think there is enough in such a statement to put members of the Senate upon their vindication; and yet at the same time I do not propose for one that such a statement made in the Chamber by a member of the body should go by without proper answer from me. And now I say that there was to my knowledge no arrangement, no bargain, no understanding upon the part of any member of the Senate, and certainly none on the part of any member of the then minority of the Senate, that the Senator who now occupies the seat from Louisiana [Mr. Kellogg] and who was admitted on the 30th day of November, 1877, ever came to his place by any consent, direct or indirect, or without the most vigorous protest, the most earnest protest of every member of the then minority of this Chamber.

I do deny, and I deny scornfully, the suggestion that a seat in this Chamber was ever made by the democratic party or by any member of the democratic party the subject of a bargain or an arrangement or an understanding. Talk of it being an "honorable understand-ing!" How can there be an honorable understanding that puts in the scales the right of one State against the right of another State when we are deciding upon their rights separately? The thing cannot be; and rather than have been a party to it, I would have left this Chamber and never have returned to it. There was no such understanding, no such agreement; there is no respectable authority for it known to me, and none has yet been quoted.

I am amazed that a newspaper article should have been made the basis for such a charge, if not directly aimed, surely directed against the present majority and the then minority in the Chamber, but which must of itself have embraced every member of the Senator's associates and himself as well.

There is in this question before us enough to challenge our deepest enough to bring men gravely to think upon the passage of these resolutions enough to bring men gravely to think upon the passage of these resolutions, and I propose to address my mind to them in a proper spirit; but I do not propose that such insinuations or such charges shall pass by, when I am personally embraced by inference, without my simple but at the same time my most indignant denial and denunciation.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the article that I referred to contains so full an account that it is needless for me to look up the CONGRESso fill an account that it is needless for me to look up the CONGRES-SIONAL RECORD. As respects my own participation in it, I was dur-ing the autumn of that year for a long period confined to my home, seven hundred miles distant, and was not in the Senate for two months. I was paired at that time with the Senator from Missis-sippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] I wish to read the authority that I quoted, and it shall go for just what it is worth; but I may make an annotation here and there:

Upon the assembling of the Senate at seven p. m. on the same day-

Which was November 30, 1877, the paper states

the resolution to admit Kellogg, upon the merits of the case, to a seat in the Senate was brought up again. Senators Bayard, Hoar, Wadleigh, and Thurman freely discussed the resolution; and as there seemed to be no likelihood that a satisfactory conclusion would be reached, a motion to adjourn was made. There being but one secular day remaining before the session must end, Mr. Conkling urged the necessity of taking a vote upon the pending resolution. At this juncture Mr. Thurman said—

Now the quotation comes from the RECORD:

"I am very sorry that the Senate should adjourn until one more effort is made to see whether we cannot come to some agreement that shall save us from the necessity of sitting here all night. I think myself that such an agreement can be arrived at if we can keep in session for a little while longer."

The discussion was resumed, and was participated in by Senators Hill, LAMAR, THURMAN, EDMUNDS, and others. Senator HILL then introduced the following resolutions.

The discussion was and others. Senator Hill then introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana on a prima facie title, and subject to the right of William Pitt Kelloge to contest his seat."

After another lengthy discussion of this resolution, Mr. Edmunds said:

"I ask unanimous consent be given to an understanding among the Senators:
First, to vote on the Kellogg-Spofford case at or before two o'clock and thirty minutes a. m. to-day, the chairman of the committee or any one allowed by him to have the last hour to sum up if desired. Second, to vote on the Butler-Corbin case at or before the expiration of one hour after the Kellogg-Spofford case is disposed of, the time to be equally divided, the chairman of the committee or some one for him to have the last thirty minutes to close the debate."

Mr. Thurman, upon this proposition being made, said:

"I hope the proposition will be agreed to, and I ask my democratic friends on this floor to agree to it, and to trust to me that it will result in an arrangement perfectly honorable and fair to both parties."

Mr. BAILEY. To vote.
Mr. BLAINE. "An arrangement." There is no use in our ignoring Mr. BAILEY. To vote.

Mr. BLAINE. "An arrangement." There is no use in our ignoring plain facts. The balance of power at that time was held by two Senators not now in these seats—the Senator from Florida [Mr. Conover] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Patterson]—and it is as well known as any fact is known in the past history of this body that those gentlemen would not have voted to seat prima facie the Senator from South Carolina unless at the same time the resolution seating Mr. Kellogg on his merits had been passed. I am reading now what comes from the Charleston News and Courier, a recognized authority in the democratic party. It recites these facts; it gives them pith and point; it shows with clearness all that surrounded it, and while I am not attacking any Senator—and there was no particular need of any extraordinary sensitiveness—I repeat that the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] never could have been seated on that prima facie resolution, unless at the same time it was understood, and understood fairly and honorably, that the resolution on its merits, seating the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Kellogg,] should pass also.

Whether that balance of power was exclusively held by the two Senators who are not in their seats, or what was the arrangement to which the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] not now in his seat referred, I know nothing. Probably I know less than any other person. I had not been in the Senate for two months, and was not in the Senate for some days after that; but I am perfectly correct in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in quoting the Charleston namer, and in saying that the Converged in the convergen not in the Senate for some days after that; but I am perfectly correct in quoting the Charleston paper, and in saying that the Congressional Record bears out all that it says; and I fepeat here and now that throwing aside this question, putting it behind, there cannot be found I believe in the history of the Senate of the United States in the well-nigh century that it has existed, one case in which the Senate distinctly had upon a call of the yeas and nays upon the merits of a case after reference to a committee, as it had been for six meris of a case after reference to a committee, as it had been for six or eight or nine months—there cannot be found a precedent in the history of this body for uprooting and overturning a decision as to the right of a Senator to his seat.

That is what I assert; and I repeat what I have said as to the thirty-two Senators from the sixteen States that were allied either directly or by supposed sympathy with the rebellion in some form greater or less. No Senator need get up to disclaim that, for I mean only the simple history of the case. The sixteen States, eleven that were in actual rebellion and five other slaveholding States that were were in actual rebellion and two other slaveholding States that were in greater or less degree in sympathy there with, are entitled to thirty-two Senators on this floor. They have thirty fast wedded to the democratic party; they have the thirty-first elected to take his seat on the 4th of next March. There is but this little remnant, seated here as regularly as any Senator called upon to vote is seated—seated you might say more regularly than those of us who have never had our title questioned, for his title, after having been questioned and laborated regression. our title questioned, for his title, after having been questioned and elaborately examined, was affirmed—seated here by all the laws that should govern permanency to a seat. The proposition now by the democratic party, at the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Jonas] and other southern Senators—I acquit northern Senators of a desire to go into it; I acquit the northern democratic Senators of a desire to go into it; it is a bitter pill southern Senators are giving to their resolvent friends. to their northern friends

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to correct the Senator as he goes Mr. BUILER. I should like to correct the Senator as he goes along. He had just as well be accurate. He says this is the only case. The Senator is entirely mistaken. There is one case within my recollection, a very recent case, and that was my own case.

Mr. BUAINE. What was your case?

Mr. BUTLER. What was my case? After I was seated the case was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and I was hauled before that committee for weeks and weeks and months after I had been costed.

had been seated. Mr. BLAINE.

Mr. BLAINE. But you were only seated on a prima facie case.
Mr. BUTLER. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon. He might just as well conform his statements to the facts as they exist, as he says was made, my State was hauled up again in the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and a report was made against me by a majority of that committee, but the majority of the Senate refused to take it up.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well. Mr. BUTLER. And therefore I should like the honorable Senator to state all the facts as he goes along.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the honorable Senator from South Carolina wish to be understood as stating that his original seating on this floor was upon a resolution affirming his right on the merits of the case?

Mr. BUTLER. I say that my original seating upon the merits was just as well established as that of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not so understand it. I have not the resolution here on which the honorable Senator was seated; but I leave the honnere on which the honorable Schator was scated; but I leave the honorable Schator from Wisconsin [Mr. Cameron] to settle that.

Mr. BUTLER. The record shows for itself. The difference, as I understand it, was that the word "merits" was used in the resolution scating Mr. Kellogg, but it was omitted in my resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the whole difference and the whole case.

Mr. BUTLER. I beg pardon.

Mr. BLAINE. That is the whole difference; the very difference I have been exterior.

Mr. BUTLER. The honorable Senator is mistaken about that.
Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The facts of the case of the Senator from South Carolina are simply these: The credentials were presented and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Before that committee considered his case at all, a motion was made in this Chamber by a democratic Senator, the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman,] I think, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the case of M. C. Butler. After debate that motion of the Senator from Ohio was agreed to, and thereupon the Committee on Privileges and Elections was discharged from the further consideration of the case of Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. BUTLER. One moment—
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Allow me to get through. Before the committee had taken any further action upon the question of the credentials of the Senator from South Carolina, or upon the question of his right to a seat in this body, he was sworn in. So that he was sworn in upon his credentials alone; in other words upon a prima facie case and nothing more. It never has been held, either in this body or in the House of Representatives, that a member seated upon a prima facie case could not afterward have his title questioned.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Maine permit me a moment?

Certainly.

The Senator from Wisconsin is entirely correct as
The Senator from Wisconsin is entirely correct as Mr. BUTLER. to his statement of what was done with my credentials. They were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That Committee neglected—I will not say refused—to make a report. The Senate itself took charge of those credentials by discharging the committee from the further consideration of them and considered the mittee from the further consideration of them and considered the credentials itself upon their merits. For days they were considered in the Senate instead of being considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and were considered upon their merits, were discussed for days, for weeks, and every imaginable and every conceivable pretext that could be urged, even to the extent of personal calumny, was raked up and brought here; and all these things were considered, as the RECORD shows, and upon that discussion on the merits in full I was seated upon this floor under a resolution resulting from that discussion.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from South Carolina substantially states the whole case just as I stated it. He never was sworn in upon a declaration of the merits of his case at all. He was worn in upon a simple motion. He was sworn that very day, on the 30th November, of which I have been speaking; he was sworn in when it was in the power of any Senator on either side of this body to have prevented it; he was sworn in when it was in the power of any Senator, I repeat, on either side of this body to have closed that session without permitting a vote on the case.

It was nothing in the world that brought about a vote except the arrangement, whatever that was, that the honorable Senator from Ohio stated on the floor; and when a Senator is simply permitted to take the oath, the Senator from South Carolina must be very forgetful of all the rules of this body and all the principles of parliamentary law to pretend that that is seating him upon the "merits" of the case. That day the agreement, or if that be an offensive word to case. That day the agreement, or it that be an oliensive word to sensitive ears, the transaction was to seat the honorable Senator from South Carolina prima facie and to seat the honorable Senator from Louisiana on the merits. There is the distinction in the two cases. The records of the body show it, the Journal of the Senate shows it, every fact connected with the occurrence shows simply and only that the Senator from South Carolina was permitted to be sworn in subject to future contest and future dispute, whatever that might be, and that the Senator from Louisiana was sworn in after a full examination on a specific declaration of the merits of the case, conclusively and finally. Now why the democratic majority of this body have never seen fit to investigate the case of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, and have been so busy investigating the case of the Senator who was declared to be seated on the merits, I leave to the senator who was declared to be seated on the merits, I leave to the majority of this body to say. And as to the agreement of which I speak, I refer Senators to the Charleston News of March 24, 1880, and to the RECORD of the Senate's proceedings of November 30, 1877.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine refers us to the Charleston News for authority in regard to "the agreement."

What was the nature of that agreement? The Senator is surrounded by gentlemen who were present on the floor of the Senate that eventful night when Mr. Kellogg was admitted to the seat. Will any one among them rise and state the nature of that agreement?

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Tennessee one question.

Mr. BAILEY.
Mr. BLAINE.

I am asking a question; answer mine first. You are not asking me a question. I am asking all your associates and colleagues; I am Mr. BAILEY. asking all the gentlemen who were here upon that occasion to which you refer. You have introduced the authority of a newspaper here upon the floor of this Chamber as to a certain agreement, and intimated, as I understood it, very strongly that there was something in the nature of that agreement which makes the conduct of Senators here to-day dishonorable to them as men, and dishonorable to them as occupying great positions; and I call upon the Senator from Maine instead of relying upon a newspaper report to call upon his associates to answer, upon men who are honored with great positions here, who were present at that time, filling their seats and discharging the duties of their positions. If there was such an agreement they being in the majority certainly must have had some knowledge of it. If there was any agreement binding upon the conscience and upon the conduct of Senators, certainly somebody here in this Chamber knows something about it; and before the Senator asks me to answer a ques tion, I ask, Mr. President, that my question shall be responded to. Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator addresses his question gen-

mr. BLAINE. The hohorate Senator actices in question gor-erally. I will address one, however, to him, if he will give me the liberty to do so, specifically. From my recollection— Mr. BAILEY. I would with great pleasure but for the fact that the Senator chose first to catechise us. We have answered that we know of no such agreement. I choose now to become the catechist, and to ask who knows of any agreement on the floor of this Cham-

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Tennessee is quite mistaken when he says I asked anybody if there was such an agreement. Idid not address that inquiry to any other gentleman, and if he chooses to put the epithet "dishonorable," which I did not use, or in some way to distort my language into a personal offense, I beg to say to him that it is a gratuitous use of the word. I never used the phrase at all. But I beg to ask the Senator this specific question: On that night when this vote was taken these two Senators were sworn in, and, if my memory serves me, Mr. Kellogg was sworn in first, and I ask the honorable Senator whether he ever heard that there was an agreement at that time that Mr. Kellogg should not vote on the question of Mr. Butler's admission?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator asks me a question. I will do what he and his associates will not do or have not done. I will answer that never heard of such an agreement.

Mr. BLAINE. It is not my purpose to catechise Senators, nor is it my right. Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. BAILEY. KELLOGG did not vote. Mr. HEREFORD. Will Mr. KELLOGG answer if ever he made such an agreement that as the price of taking his seat he would desist from woting? He is here.

Mr. BLAINE. The RECORD shows that he did not vote.

Mr. HEREFORD. Does the Senator make the charge?

Mr. BLAINE. The RECORD shows that the Senator from Louisiana

Mr. HEREFORD. He is here to answer the question whether he made a bargain. Let him answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia should address the Chair.

Mr. BLAINE. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that the real question cannot be evaded that way, for I give to him in respect to the Senator from Louisiana the precise answer I gave to the honorable Senator from South Carolina with respect to himself when he asked me if I accused him of making a bargain. He was not a member of the Senate, and Mr. Kellogg was not a member of the Senate, at the time there was an arrangement made. Neither of them can be brought to the bar of the Senate and asked; but I ask—no I will not, I will not assume a right to catechise, but I state—that the RECORD according to my memory shows-I have not had time to look at it—that when the roll was called on the admission of the honorable Senator from South Carolina on his prima facie right, the Senator from Louisiana, who had already been sworn in, did not vote.

If I am wrong about it I am ready to be corrected. I see the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] shakes his head.

Mr. PENDLETON. I would say that the Senator from Maine is wrong in saying that the resolution authorizing the Senator from South Carolina to be sworn in passed after the resolution authorizing the Senator from Louisiana to be sworn in. That is all.

Mr. BLAINE. Was that first?

Several SEMATORS. No.

Mr. BLAINE. I am speaking wholly from memory.

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

Mr. BLAINE. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in order to have this question perfectly understood just as the Journal shows it, I will read from the proceedings of the 30th of November, 1877—the Journal of that session, page 108:

The question recurring on agreeing to the resolution in the following words:

Resolved, That William Pitt Kellogg is, upon the merits of the case, lawfully entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877, and that he be admitted thereto upon taking the proper oath.

Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford is not entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States,

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 30, nays 28.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The yeas and nays being taken,

On motion by Mr. Thurman, that M. C. Butler be now sworn as a Senator from the State of South Carolina,
It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 29, nays 28.

So the motion was agreed to,

Mr. WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG then appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. M. C. BUTLER then appeared, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the Vice-President he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I was wrong just to this extent, that after Mr. Kellogg was declared entitled to his seat he was not sworn in until Mr. BUTLER was declared entitled to his seat, for if he had then taken the oath and voted, Mr. BUTLER could not have come in. the oath and voted, Mr. BUTLER could not have come in. I will ask the Senate to observe that Mr. Kellogg was admitted and declared to be entitled to his seat by a majority of two. He was on the floor. Immediately after that motion was carried, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] rose and moved that M. C. Butler of South Carolina be admitted to his seat, Mr. Kellogg standing here and not having taken the oath; and on the motion in favor of Mr. Butler the yeas were 29, and the nays 28. Ergo I think that with the aid of the whole democratic side of the Senate I might draw an inference. I think if the memory will go back just far enough to call up the votes of the 30th of November, 1877, the historian might evolve the theory that Mr. Kellogg sat back there on some sort of an understanding, and if he had come forward and been sworn in the honorable Senator and if he had come forward and been sworn in the honorable Senator from South Carolina would not have been sworn in, for it would have been a tie vote, and he would have been rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. How can the honorable Senator know that?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, as I was in the Senate at the time, and was speaking just before the vote was taken, and offered myself a resolution which has been quoted in the paper read by the Senator from Maine, I ought to say something, I suppose. The Senator from Maine has either made a charge or he has not made one. If he has made a charge, he will find it easier to make than to get rid of. If he has made no charge, there has been a good deal of sound or. If he has made no charge, there has been a good deal of sound and fury signifying nothing.

If I understand human language, the Senator has made a charge, a charge which involves the honor of this Senate and of every member of the Senate who was at that time a member. He has charged that there was some honorable agreement, and he has said it would be a dishonorable thing to violate that agreement. I cannot understand human morals if to violate an honorable agreement is not to do a dishonorable thing, and the Senator has charged here that there was something like an honorable agreement. He said distinctly—his language has been read as reduced to writing—that there was an honorable agreement, and it is dishonorable in any man to disregard an honorable agreement.

Now what was the result of the honorable agreement that he charges? He has stated it. It is that but for that honorable agreement the Senator from South Carolina would not have been admitted to his seat on this floor unless the Senator from Louisiana was also admitted. Then there was a bargain, "an honorable agreement," the effect of which was that one Senator from South Carolina should not be admitted to his seat unless the Senator from Louisiana should also be admitted to his seat.

Mr. President, I have heard rumors in the air before of such a charge. I read the article to which the Senator has called attention. I have everywhere and on all occasions denounced it as an utter cal-umny upon both sides of this Chamber as far as my knowledge, sus-picion, or belief extended. I denounce it now as an utter calumny which it was neither honorable to make nor honorable to submit to. But I will say that if the gentleman or his authority can produce any evidence to me that any member of this Senate, whether he be demoevidence to me that any member of this Senate, whether he be democrat or republican, did enter into any bargain or understanding or agreement, express or implied, which should have the effect of seating a Senator from one State on condition that a Senator from another State should be seated on this floor, show me the man who made that agreement, and I stand before the country pledged to vote for his expulsion instanter, and I think I can give the pledge for every man on this side of the House. If that agreement was made the country ought to know it. An honorable Senator has stated it on this floor. It matters nothing that he has brought in the authority of a newspaper for his charge. He has made it. His language cannot be misunderstood; he cannot evade it. He owes it to the Senate to make his charge specific and say who were the parties to this barmake his charge specific and say who were the parties to this bar-gain, who made it. He intimates that one man agreed to refrain from voting on condition that he was admitted to his seat. That man is on the floor. Let him admit it. If not, let any other gentleman prove it; and whether he be on that side of the House or on this side of the House, I for one stand ready to vote for his expulsion. It certainly has been denied here; we know over here that it is not true; it is utterly untrue. This is too grave a matter to be allowed to pass in this kind of style, and if the Senator knows anything of it, it is his duty to have it investigated. If he does not know anything about his duty to have it investigated. If he does not know anything about it, he has not treated the Senate with the proper respect due by a member of the body in bringing forward this charge.

The Senator says that the Senator from South Carolina was seated on a prima facie case, and the Senator from Louisiana on the merits. That is a remarkable statement. Turn to the record and what are the facts? The Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which I happened to be a member at the time, had before them three cases: one, that of Senator Eustis from the State of Louisiana; another that of Henry M. Spofford and W. P. Kellogg, from the State of Louisiana; and also at the same time the credentials of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina—

Mr. EDMUNDS. And Corbin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And Corbin.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, Butler and Corbin. Butler and Corbin were contestants; Spofford and Kellogg were contestants; Eustis had no contestant. These were the cases. There was evidently a long contest, involving a grave in estigation into disputed facts in the case of Spofford rs. Kellogg. It was expected that case would take a long time. There were no disputed facts in the case of Eustis. The case of Mr. Eustis involved nothing on earth but a purely legal question which could have been determined at any time in twenty-four hours, but the Committee on Privileges and Elections refused to take it up. They held it for a long period of time; they held it for months and refused to consider it, though there was no investigation to be

Then there was the case of Butler and Corbin. That case was be-Then there was the case of Butler and Corbin. That case was before the committee. Senators say it was not considered. Elaborate briefs were printed and filed before the committee by both contestants. The case was very elaborately argued by written briefs; and that is not all. Mr. Butler submitted a brief; Corbin submitted a brief, and counter-briefs were submitted. The case was thoroughly submitted on printed briefs. Copies of all these briefs were put on the desks of members of the Senate as well as before the committee. On an examination of the arguments submitted by Butler and Corbin it was ascertained that there was no issue of fact between them. The was ascertained that there was no issue of fact between them. The facts of the South Carolina case were agreed on; there was not a single investigation to be had. There was not a witness to be examined. The parties agreed upon the facts. There was nothing to be determined in that case, after thorough examination, but a simple question of law. That was all, and the records will show that abundantly. Mr. BUTLER wanted no witness, for Mr. Corbin agreed to what he pro-

Mr. BUTLER wanted no witness, for Mr. Corbin agreed to what he proposed to prove, the facts stated by Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Corbin wanted no witness, for Mr. BUTLER agreed to the facts that he stated.

And yet notwithstanding there was no issue of fact in the Eustiscase and no issue of fact in the Butler and Corbin case, the Committee on Privileges and Elections determined to keep them both behind, both unreported to the Senate, until they should go through the investigation of the Kellogg-Spofford case, which might take months. That was unjust, and in that state of case there was a motion made in the Senate to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Senate to discharge the Committee on Privileges and Elections from the consideration of the Butler case, giving as an express reason that there was no fact for the committee to find; there was no testimony for the committee to take. The case was argued here on that very proposition. Get the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and examine it and you will see that it was so. It was argued in the Senate on the merits, every feature of the merits. It was elaborately argued here in the Senate on the merits, every fact conceded, with nothing in issue but a law question.

Do Senators say that that case was not considered on its merits? What do you mean by "merits?" Do you mean that there is no merit in a case unless you put the word "merits" in a resolution? That is exactly the idea the majority of the committee in 1877 seemed to have. As I said to them in committee when they adopted the celebrated resolution in the Kellogg case and reported him entitled on the merits, they found it necessary to put "merits" in the resolution because they knew there were no merits in fact, and if they did not put "merits" in the resolution it would have no merit at all. That was the whole of it, and the word "merits" was put in that resolution as a catch-trap for the very purpose for which it is now being used, to make it a conclusion, to make it a case of res adjudicata, which I will deal with hereafter. I will not go into that now. I shall deal with that very

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia permit me to remind him that the order directing the committee to report who was entitled upon the merits was introduced by Hon. Mr. Merrimon, a democratic member of the committee from North Carolina, and the report used verbatim the language of the original directions to the committee, of which Mr. Merrimon was the author. I think I cannot be in error in my recollection of that fact.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It is unnecessary to go into that now. The records will show for themselves.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Georgia certainly would instantly retract what he has just said if he believed the fact which I state to be true, and therefore I should think he would deem it extremely important to go into it now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I cannot retract what I have said as having occurred at the time, which the Senator cannot have forgotten. Whether the charge was correct or incorrect, it was my opinion at the time. It was a mere opinion. Mr. Merrimon did introduce a resolution, I think proposed as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts himself, in which the word "merits" occurred.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Georgia pardon me? The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Merrimon] introduced in the Senate the direction to the committee in these words:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the contested cases of WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, * * * be authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title, respectively, on the merits of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate.

That is the authority with which the committee were charged. Then the committee on that authority report that—

 $W_{\rm ILLIAM}\,P_{\rm ITT}\,K_{\rm ELLOGG}$ is, upon the merits of the case, entitled to a seat in the Senate of the United States, &c.

Now the Senator from Georgia—
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not give way longer, for there is no issue of fact between us.
Mr. HOAR. I should not think you would.
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There is no issue of fact between us. That was the resolution Mr. Merrimon offered, and it was adopted by the Senate, instructing the committee to send for persons and papers and investigate that case, and I stand here to say before this Senate and before the country that the committee distinctly refused to do that before the country that the committee distinctly refused to do that wery thing, which I charge here—

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President—
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. No, sir; I do not give way. You can reply to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I state here what the gentlemen will not dare to deny, that they did not send for a witness for Mr. Spofford;

As the record will show, Spofford they did not examine a witness. As the record will show, Spofford begged for summonses for witnesses, offering to prove the complicity of Kellogg in the frauds in Louisiana. He asked it under authority of the resolution which the Senator has read, and the committee refused it.

The honorable Senator from Maine talks about precedents. He says we are about to establish a precedent here unknown in the records of this country and in the records of the Senate since the days of Washington. Who ever before heard that a committee ordered of Washington. Who ever before heard that a committee ordered by the Senate to investigate a case, with the parties before them asking investigation, with one of the contestants begging for summonses for witnesses, refused to summon a witness, refused to examine a witness, closed up the case without investigation, and reported that the other party was entitled on the merits? I did say to the committee at that very time that they put the word "merits" in the resolutions because they knew there were none in the case. That is what I said, and the facts on the record show it to be true, every word of it.

Take that record. We got the parties before us, Spofford and Kellogg, by their counsel. We heard them elaborately on arguments upon certain questions involved. A proposition was made by me, as read by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Jonas,] that we accept the of Washington.

decision made in Louisiana on this question. That was voted down 6 to 3. Then a proposition was made to investigate, and authority was gotten from the Senate to investigate, just as the Senator from Massachusetts has read. Then we commenced pretending to investigate, but for the purpose of narrowing the field of investigation and gate, but for the purpose of narrowing the field of investigation and for the purpose of completing the investigation as soon as we could, it was agreed that the parties should be consulted to see to what extent they could agree upon facts. BUTLER and Corbin had agreed upon facts and saved the country from any investigation at all, and there was no issue of facts, as I have said, in Eustis's case. We desired to see to what extent Spofford and KELLOGG would agree upon facts. We commenced. facts. We commenced. After some bickering among themselves or their counsel they agreed that certain reports taken by congressional committees should be considered in evidence as far as they went or committees should be considered in evidence as far as they went or as far as they were pertinent. Not one of them, at least certainly Judge Spofford, had ever any opportunity of attending to that testimony or examining the witnesses. Then the parties made an agreement, agreeing to certain other facts which the sitting member wanted very much. Then the question came up, how much do you disagree? There were five propositions upon which they still disagreed. They were stated distinctly in writing. The propositions upon which they could not agree were put down in writing and printed, and upon those propositions Spofford asked for witnesses.

Mr. MAXEY. They were material?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Very material, for one of them involved the personal complicity of Kellogg himself in the returning-board frauds.

Mr. MAXEY. Issue was joined?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir, issue was joined; and we challenged them in committee to show a single witness who had been examined on the questions which were particularly pointed out. After the issue on the questions which were particularly pointed out. After the issue was joined, and when the disputed ground was distinctly ascertained, was joined, and when the disputed ground was distinctly ascertained, when the committee, six to three, refused a single summons, I never will forget Spofford. There he stood, bewildered almost. He was willing to take six witnesses. He would have limited the investigation to six. They would not give him six. Finally he said, "Give me three, I will be content." They would not give him three; they would not give him one. I can point out three witnesses in this record now, as the testimony has since been taken, who show beyond question that Kellogg never had a title to a seat in this body, testimony that never was taken by any committee or in any investigation that that never was taken by any committee or in any investigation that has ever been had until taken by this committee recently. Yet there stood Spofford, saying, "Give me three witnesses," and they would not give him any, we pleading for it. Then, when they refused, the Senator from Massachusetts offered a resolution to the effect—I will not quote the language, the record will show it-that the case had been fully considered and investigated, and they passed it six to three one evening. I do not know whether they slept well that night or not; I do not think they did; but anyhow, they came back the next morning greatly troubled, and moved to amend their own resolution, so as to say that the case had been fully investigated so far as material, and having so amended the resolution they finally passed it in

You talk about fraud and rebellion, and charge men over here with Here was a committee ordered by the Senate to investigate, with a contestant standing before them pleading for the privilege of having six witnesses, five witnesses, four witnesses, three witnesses, and I will be content," and you refused to give him any. You talk about precedents. We might as well have a plain understanding of these matters. I state these facts from the record, and am responsible for the statement.

I say they never examined a witness, and I say that that case as it stood in 1877, when reported upon from that committee and voted upon by the Senate, does not show one line of testimony, which Spofford had the opportunity of cross-examining, or which was taken by the examination of a single witness before that committee. It shows no evidence in the world, except from reports from other committees ordered by Congress, which were accreated to be considered only so far ordered by Congress, which were agreed to be considered only so far as pertinent, and then certain agreements or certain admissions made by the parties simply for the purpose of narrowing the field of investigation. It was only done for the sake of convenience and to narrow the field of investigation. I say not a witness was subpensed before that committee; and when the committee passed the resolution that they would make no further investigations but would retion that they would make no further investigations, but would report that the sitting member from Louisiana was entitled on the merits lawfully to the seat, Spofford said, "I do not know the customs of the body, but if I have the privilege I desire to enter a protest against that ruling." The chairman said there was no precedent for allowing him to enter a protest that he knew of. You would not give him a summons; you would not give him a witness; you would not give him an investigation, and you would not give him a protest, and in this condition of things the case was reported to this body.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes.
Mr. CARPENTER. After the matter came from the committee before this body, were the proceedings which the Senator now complains of in the committee reported or made known to the Senate in debate?
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. They were, sir.
Mr. CARPENTER. And were fully in the mind of the Senate when they passed on the question and decided the case in favor of Mr.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That only made the Senate as bad as the committee; that was all.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The majority of the Senate proved as bad as the committee.

Mr. CARPENTER. In other words, it brings your legal case down to this: You file a bill of review upon the ground that the court was corrupt

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Oh, no, I do not do any such thing. I bring it down to this, that the Senate did what they had no jurisdiction to do, and passed a void resolution which all parties and all courts everywhere will treat as a nullity. That is what I am going to establish when I come to argue the points in this case. There never has been a judgment pronounced by the Senate that involved the merits of the case that would be regarded as valid in any court of law on earth. It was a void judgment. Yet we have been taunted with doing something the property of the property and they because the property and they because the property and they be the property and they because they are the property and they because they because they are the property and they because they are the property and they because they are the are they ar was a void judgment. Yet we have been taunted with doing something extraordinary, taunted with making bargains and then breaking bargains, and there is some wild talk about sixteen States, eleven in the rebellion and five in sympathy, brought in here in this connection. I have faith that the people of the United States are intelligent. The Senator from Maine says he hopes the people will understand this thing. So do I. The minority of the committee say the people will not be likely to be deceived again. I hope they will not. They have been deceived often enough, the Lord knows.

Why is it that these sectional references are to be made upon a sim-

Why is it that these sectional references are to be made upon a simple question of the records of the Senate as to whether there has been a dishonoring bargain in the Senate or not, as to whether a case has been passed upon on the merits or not? I say that the case of Corbin and Butler was investigated by that committee upon the merits. Printed arguments were filed on both sides. Arguments and replies were all filed and the issue was reduced down to a question of law.

There was not an issue of fact between Corbin and Butler, not one.

In that condition, after that investigation, after the issue was thus reduced to one of law and the committee ascertained that there were reduced to one of law and the committee ascertained that there were no facts in dispute, the case was brought before the Senate, and it was discussed in the Senate upon that legal question and decided on the merits, although the word "merits" was not put in the resolution, I grant. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Cameron] is right about that. My recollection is there was no resolution; I think it was a motion simply.

was a motion simply.

Mr. BAYARD. It was decided in the Senate.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, it was decided in the Senate. The motion to discharge the committee was decided distinctly upon the motion to discharge the committee was decided distinctly upon the ground, as stated at the time, that there was no issue of fact for the committee to investigate. Now, could it be possible for a case to be considered more emphatically on the merits? Assume, then, that the bargain alluded to was made. I beg pardon of the Senate for supposing that it was made, but even supposing it was possible that the Senate could ever have been guilty of the enormous crime of degrading itself by agreeing that one man elected to a seat should be admitted on condition that one who was not elected should also be admitted, agreeing that one man covered with bribery might be admitted on the condition that one who was not even charged with bribery should also be admitted, who first violated the bargain? A strange bargain you would have to make that BUTLER should come in prima facie and Kellogg on the merits. There was no mutuality in that facie and RELIGIS on the merits. There was no mutuality in that agreement. We ought to plead failure of consideration, as the lawyers say. But the truth is both cases were considered on the merits, whatever that word is worth, which I hope to be able to show means nothing, absolutely amounts to nothing in law or in fact, but certainly one was as much on the merits as the other; and yet in the very next session of Congress a resolution was introduced upon the memorial of Corbin, by which his case was reopened, and he and BUTLER were both referred back to the committee for another inves-

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will permit me to correct him, as a mere matter of fact the committee were never discharged from the consideration of Corbin's credentials. The motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] was to discharge the committee, having both sets of credentials before them for consideration, from the Butter expectations.

both sets of credentials before them for consideration, from the Butler credentials, but did not include the Corbin credentials.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And the Corbin credentials were left under the consideration of the committee so far as any action of the Senate went except in having Mr. Butler sworn in all the time.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Literally the Senator is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I mean to be literal.

Mr. HILL of Georgia Beth Corbin and Butler in man administration.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Both Corbin and BUTLER were claiming one and the same seat, and when the Senate decided that BUTLER was entitled to it I rather think that Corbin was not entitled to it, unless the Senator from Vermont can reverse the well-known law of natural philosophy that two bodies cannot occupy the same space at the same time

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In this case the Senate has decided that Kellogg is entitled to the seat, and according to the reasoning of the Senator from Georgia it follows that Spofford is not entitled to

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. We will come to that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. By the same reasoning now applied to the Corbin and Butler case.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That is what you decided in 1877 without investigation. That is what you decided in 1877 by concealing the facts. That is what you decided in 1877 by refusing to know the truth. In the Corbin-Butler case there was no issue of fact; there was no concealment of fact; there was no refusal to investigate; there was no closing the door for the entrance of the truth in order that a man might come in who had no right. Nothing of that sort was in the case; but you did come here, as I have explained, and you did bring from the committee a resolution declaring that Kellogg was entitled and Spofford was not entitled, which resolution you framed and passed after refusing to know the facts.

Talk about honor; talk about an honorable Senate; the question is, is the Senate bound by a judgment confessedly and openly in derogation of the very honor of the Senate, in contravention and disregard of the honor of the Senate, the committee distinctly refusing to make the investigation that the Senate had ordered to be made and that one party was begging a period to the reader to be made to make the investigation that the Senate had ordered to be made and that one party was begging should be made.

I beg pardon; I did not intend to go into that question now. I only say that both cases were decided on the merits; that is, if either was decided on the merits; neither was prima facie, in other words. But I have said more than I intended to say when I rose. The question as to whether the Senate has authority to refuse to review the decision made in 1877 I propose to consider at another time. I simply got up to set the Senate right upon the question of a bargain.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate more than a moment. I have seen in the course of my experience in life instances of persons who have attempted to delude other people. I do not propose to express here any opinion as to which of these two classes the extraordinary statement which has been made by the honorable the extraordinary statement which has been made by the honorable Senator from Georgia falls in. It is absolutely amazing to any person who knows the actual facts in regard to the transaction which he has undertaken to narrate to the Senate—

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me just one

Mr. HOAR. The Senator refused to allow me to interrupt him.
Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I allowed you once; but very well; go on.
Mr. HOAR. I will make my statement consecutively; and I should like the attention of the honorable gentlemen on the democratic side of the Senate to what I propose to say.

Two charges have been made against the action of the committee in 1877 and the action of a majority of the Senate which followed; one, that the words "on the merits" in the resolution reported in regard to Mr. Kellogo's case were put in there to entrap or mislead gard to Mr Kellogg's case were put in there to entrap or mislead somebody, to get an advantage which was not apparent from the vote to the understanding of the persons who passed it; and the other, that the committee refused to take testimony for the contestant as they were instructed and desired by the vote of the Senate. The fact is exactly this: The honorable Senator from North Carolina, Mr. Merrimon, then a democratic Senator and a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, introduced the order upon which the committee acted. Whether he consulted with any of his democratic associates in this body or on the committee, of course nobody knows. He introduced this order:

Resolved. That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in the contested case of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, and whose credentials have been referred to such committee, be authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title, respectively, on the merits, of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate.

Does anybody suppose that Mr. Merrimon designed to entrap or Does anybody suppose that air, informing designed to entrap or mislead or deceive anybody? A more honorable Senator and a more honorable gentleman, so far as I know, never breathed than the democratic Senator who then had a seat on this floor from the State of North Carolina. It was his purpose so to pen that resolution as to finally and forever end, by the final judgment of the Senate, upon the merits of the case, the question of the disputed title to a seat from the State of Louisiana. When the committee reported what they had done in accordance with that resolution they took the phraseology the State of Louisiana. When the committee reported what they had done in accordance with that resolution, they took the phraseology of their instruction, as is the usual and proper course in such cases. What I say appears upon the Journals of the Senate. The Senator from Georgia said he did not know whether this was a vote of the Senate or of the committee, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Which? On Merrimon's resolution?

Mr. HOAR. The vote on the resolution I have just read.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I did not say that.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I said the Senate authorized the committee to send for persons and papers. The Senate gave the authority.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator does not know, it is very strange in the light of what he has said. I think it would be more creditable to that Senator to believe that he did not know than to believe that he

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The resolution shows on its face that it was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts declines to yield.

Mr. HOAR. Now I come to the second charge, and a statement as brief will dispose of that. It will dispose of that in the minds of the honorable democratic Senators who have attended to it. The committee in pursuance of that instruction sent for the parties and their counsel and inquired of them what facts were in dispute, and whether the hearing could be shortened by an agreement in regard to the undisputed facts. Mr. Spofford's counsel and Mr. Spofford himself, both taking part in the discussion before the committee, and Mr. Kellogg's counsel said, one by one, this fact is agreed to, that fact is agreed to, that other fact is agreed to, disclosing all the facts which appeared upon the records of the Legislature of Louisiana, all the unquestioned facts of the history of the case, and they brought the case to one very simple issue, the question of the validity of the election of that Legislature. A majority of the committee believed that the certificates of the Louisiana returning board were conclusive as to the right of every member who had its certificate to sit and vote; and if that were true, that ended the case. You might as well delege an extra of this Congress invalid which passed by one well declare an act of this Congress invalid which passed by one majority because some Senator who sits here was illegally elected, he sitting and voting and holding the seat. That ended the case in our judgment and in the judgment of a majority of the Senate.

But further, there were various matters which the counsel desired to discuss and to consider. All the matters which related to the composition of that Legislature and the conduct of that election had been elaborately and fully investigated by committees of the Senate and the House. Two, I think, republican committees of the Senate had taken testimony on one side, and two democratic committees of the House of Representatives had taken it on the other, as everybody knows, and it was agreed by the parties that the evidence taken by the committees of the House on the one side and the committees of the Senate on the other should be received as competent upon the issues raised in that case by the committee and by the Senate, and ten thousand pages of that evidence were put into the case. It was familiar to every old Senator and old Representative, who had gone over it and debated it and discussed it again and again.

The parties there rested their case, but after the case had so closed, or if not closed after that had been put in without an intimation that anything more was wanted, it is true that Mr. Spofford did ask to be permitted to send to the State of Louisiana and get some more evipermitted to send to the State of Louisiana and get some more evidence. That would have postponed the decision of the case for months, certainly for weeks. The committee were of the opinion that the evidence which Mr. Spofford proposed to offer was wholly cumulative, that all that would be accomplished by granting him that liberty would be to have on some of these points fifty-one witnesses and not fifty, or thirty-one witnesses and not thirty, as the case might be, and that it would make no difference in the final opinion of the committee.

There was a struggle going on also, but I have no right to impute and I do not impute that that was the purpose of Mr. Spofford's application, to get Mr. BUTLER into the Senate first, if he were to be seated, in order that his vote in the even division of the Senate might count in the Kellogg case, and of course it was not the object of the majority of the committee to make a postponement for that purpose.

majority of the committee to make a postponement for that purpose. I do not impute that motive to anybody. The historic facts are known to the men who had seats in this body at that time.

Mr. President, that is the narrative of this transaction. The committee held and the Senate held, for the reason which I have briefly indicated, that this evidence was totally immaterial. Whether rightfully or wrongfully, they passed upon that question of constitutional law. The committee held, and the Senate held also, that whether that evidence were or were not material, it was not the exercise of a sound discretion to delay the decision of the case for weeks or months merely to get in a little cumulative evidence in addition to the 10,000 pages of testimony. That is the state of it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I want to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] calls my attention, turning to the Journal, (I took my statement from the printed pamphlet which I hold in my hand,) that the instruction offered in the Senate was offered by the honorable Senator from Oregon, [Mr. Mitchell,] a republican Senator, but it was offered in the committee by Mr. Merrimon and unanimously agreed to by the com-

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I want to say a word. Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to read the resolution which was unanimously agreed to in committee.

Mr. HOAR. I will read it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I understand it perfectly; there is no question between us on that point.

Mr. HOAR. I am addressing the Senate and not the Senator from Georgia

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I thought you were through and I was waiting.

Mr. HOAR. When the Senator from Georgia takes his seat, I will proceed.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I thought the Senator was through, and I simply wanted to say a word.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind Senators that they must address the Chair. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor, and cannot be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. HOAR. I had not intended to yield the floor. I stopped what I had to say, and the Senator from Vermont called my attention to the original record; and I desire to read it exactly as it is. This is the resolution passed by the Senate:

Resolved. That the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the contested cases of William Pitt Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana, and whose credentials have been referred to such committee, be authorized to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths, with a view of enabling said committee to determine and report upon the title respectively on the merits of each of said contestants to a seat in the Senate.

That was October 25. The committee at its meeting on the same day, on motion of Mr. Merrimon, passed a resolution, and I am not able to state now from memory whether the committee passed it in the morning before the meeting of the Senate, or after the meeting of the Senate. At the meeting of the committee on the same day I proposed this resolution:

Resolved, That it becomes necessary in determining the validity of an election of Senator, held in January, 1877, to inquire who were the lawful Legislature at that time, and that no other authority is competent to determine that question for the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to. Then Mr. Merrimon proposed the following resolution:

Resolved. That the committee proceed to examine and ascertain the substantial merits of the respective claims of Hon. W. P. Kelloge and Hon. H. M. Spofford to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, and to this end to inquire particularly which, or whether either, of the two rival bodies claiming to be the Legislature of said State.

That was unanimously agreed to by the committee, as I understand. Then the committee further resolved—

That the chairman furnish to the contestants (W. P. Kellogg and Henry M.

Spofford) a copy of the resolutions passed this morning—
Which would imply that this resolution was passed by the committee at its morning session before the Senate met-indicating what course the committee will take in the hearing, and request them to appear before the committee at ten and a half o'clock to-morrow morning, and then state in writing what evidence, if any, they desire to present, and when they desire to be heard.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Some Senators and some gentlemen have a very happy faculty of making speeches upon what they choose to assume as imaginary questions when there is really no difference or issue of fact at all. The resolution which the Senator made a noise about as to whether I knew it was passed by the Senate or not, shows on its face that it was passed by the Senate, for it was a resolution by the Senate instructing the committee. Who could instruct the committee to take testimony but the Senate? Everybody in the Senate understood perfectly and knew that that resolution was passed committee to take testimony but the Senate? Everybody in the Senate understood perfectly and knew that that resolution was passed by the Senate; yet the Senator wants to know of me whether I knew it was passed by the Senate. Everybody knew that, even the Senator from Massachusetts. He was discovering a mare's nest with wonderful facility.

Then, as to the other facts, I have made my remarks as to what occurred before that committee, and I say the facts are shown by the curred before that committee, and I say the facts are shown by the records of the committee. Every fact I stated before is shown by the records of the committee. I shall not revise my remarks; they will appear to-morrow morning in the RECORD as I have spoken them; and I challenge the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator to point his finger on a single fact that I have stated that I will not be able to show is taken from the record. I am familiar with the facts of this case, and we shall see who is right and who is wrong in the facts connected with the case.

I say that there never was a witness examined by that committee. I admit that the word "merits" was put in the resolution adopted by the Senate; but the Senate by its previous resolution ordered the committee to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to take testimony. Now, I say they did not send for a person; I say they did not administer an oath; I say they took no testimony, except that which the parties except to for the simple average of the says that the says the says that the says the says that the says that the says that the says that the says the says that the says that the says that the says that the says the says that the says the says that the says that the says that the says that the says t they did not administer an eath; I say they took no testimony, except that which the parties agreed to for the simple purpose of narrowing the field of investigation. I say you made no investigation at all. That is what I say, and I say it explicitly, and I stand prepared to make it good. You never administered an eath; you never examined a witness; and I do say that Spofford was standing there begging for permission to send for witnesses, and you would not grant him one. You assumed that the witnesses would prove nothing if they came except what you said was cumulative. That was an assumption. How could you know until the testimony was taken? This is nothing new; let me read from the record some remarks I made in the committee at the time, and no man disputed them. Here they are printed. On one meeting in the afternoon the committee passed a resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts declaring—

That it is the sense of the committee that the matters proposed by Judge Spof-ford have been fully considered by them in their previous action.

When they had not considered them at all. He came in next morning and made a motion to amend his own resolution which had already been adopted, and he moved to reconsider the adoption of that resolution for the purpose of putting in as an amendment the words "as far as material," so that the resolution would read:

That it is the sense of the committee that the matters proposed by Judge Spofford, so far as material, have been fully already considered by them in their previous action, and are fully covered, either by the admissions of Mr. Kellogg or the evidence already before the committee.

There are facts stated by Judge Spofford which Kellogg would not admit, which were not referred to in a single piece of evidence that was taken; and yet, in spite of that, they passed that resolution. Then I made this remark, to which I call the attention of the Senate to see whether I have been extravagant in my statements or not, to to see whether I have been extravagant in my statements or not, to see whether I am deluding myself or seeking to delude anybody else. I made as strong a remark before that committee as I have made this day upon the character of the proceeding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What page does the Senator read from?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Page 96 of the proceedings of the committee—not testimony. It is all talk; no testimony was taken there at all, except what the parties agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I must have a different document from the Senator.

the Senator.

the Senator.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. There were two printed, I will say to the Senator from Vermont, and there is a difference between them. This is the first one printed of the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly read the title of the document he has so that I can get the same document?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. "Proceedings of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, United States Senate, on the contested cases of William P. Kellogg and Henry M. Spofford, claiming seats as Senators from the State of Louisiana."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough. I have some other document.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough. I have some other document. Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I read from page 96. The Senator from Massachusetts next morning moved to reconsider his own resolution in order to qualify it by saying, "so far as material."

That was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was again adopted. Then I made this remark:

Senator Hill. I think we are acting a little hastily. The resolution states that the matters, as far as material, to which our attention was called by Mr. Spofford this morning, have been previously considered by the committee. I respectfully submit that we have never considered them at all, and the journals and records and proceedings of this committee will not sustain that allegation.

If I was seeking to delude anybody then, I did not delude the majority of that committee.

We have called upon these gentlemen to appear before us and to state upon what points they desire to take testimony, and we have had their statements from time to time for the purpose of making up the issue. The whole proceedings of this committee—

Mark this language-

The whole proceedings of this committee have been directed heretofore to making up the issue between these contestants. We have never once considered the issue as made up. Our attention has never been called to the fact directly whether these particular points were covered by the testimony already in or not, and no man can point to the testimony that is in that covers them. I think we are acting hastilly. I do not think we have considered these things.

But the committe went on and acted. Then Mr. Spofford was called in, and here is what he said:

Mr. SPOFFORD-

After being informed by the chairman that the committee had

Arter being informed by the chairman that the committee had closed and would take no more testimony—

Mr. INGALLS. What date was that statement of Mr. Spofford?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The same day. I think it was about the 23d of November. We had a long meeting. November 22 is the date I see here in the print some pages before this; and I remember that we met that afternoon at two o'clock. So it would seem to have been November 22, 1877. After Mr. Spofford was informed that he could not seem to the print seem bor the seid to be seen to the seem to be seen to the seid to be seen to the seem to be seen to the seem to be seen to the seem to the seem to be seen to the seem to be seen to the seem to be seen to get no witnesses by the chairman, here is what he said:

Mr. Spofford. I would inquire whether the practice before this committee (having had no experience in these matters I ask for information) would justify my entering any protest or exception against this last ruling of the committee with regard to the evidence upon the matters that I read this morning? If there is any justification or precedent for the practice, I should like to have it entered that I protest against the proposition, that it may be put of record.

The CHAIRMAN—

Who was Mr. Wadleigh-

I am not aware of any precedent of that kind.

Did I not state that they refused to take testimony, that Mr. Spofford himself was so shocked that he asked the privilege of entering a protest, and the chairman told him he knew of no precedent for it. He was denied a summons for a witness, denied any witness at all, denied the privilege of a protest, but closed down on, and the case was reported.

Talk about Corbin's case not being considered on the merits when we voted him $10,000 here for his contest! We voted him $10,000 for exwe voted him $10,000 here for his contest! We voted him $10,000 for expenses incurred in coming here to contest his seat. I merely mention that as a reminder. I surely want to put myself right. I have great respect for the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I do not mean to reflect on any of them personally. They know the indignation I felt at the time this transaction took place; I did not conceal it from them; I expressed it to them frankly there; and if ever there is a returning sense of justice in the Senate, the wrong will be corrected. Isaid it was an outrage. They may have had good motives for it. I cannot make a mistake in relation to the facts of the case. The resolution of the Senate was just as the Senator from Massachusetts read tion of the Senate was just as the Senator from Massachusetts read it, ordering us to take testimony and determine on the merits who was entitled to the seat. I do not say the word "merits" was put in the resolution to entrap anybody or to deceive anybody, but it was to instruct the committee what to do, to take testimony and to determine the case on the merits. The committee determined the case, as they said, on the merits, without taking the testimony. All in the world of testimony that was taken was that agreed to by the parties for the purpose of narrowing the field of investigation. Here is another remark I made at the same time:

Senator Hill. Judge Spofford has said, and it is his statement this morning to the committee, that the testimony on these points that he desires to take, and to which he called the attention of the committee, has not been covered by any admission of Mr. Kelloge, nor by any of these reports, nor by the testimony taken.

It never appeared at all. The gentleman cannot escape it. I will not impugn his motives or the motives of the committee. I dare say they acted from their stand-point from what they thought was right. They persuaded themselves it was right. It was a distinguished illustration of the truth of the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, that some people have a faculty of deluding themselves and imagine that thereby they delude others, when they delude nobody but themselves.

This committee did put the word "merits" in their resolution after having refused to take testimony as ordered by the Senate. Whether they can justify themselves or not is a question for the Senate. I think they cannot. It is said the testimony was immaterial. Here it is now, taken since by the present committee, over twelve hundred pages. Let us go into it and see whether it is material. If it be material, then the resolution to which I have called the attention of material, then the resolution to which I have called the attention of the Senate was incorrect, and the wrong ought to be corrected.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I desire one moment. A good deal has been said about the editorial in the Charleston News and Courier of March 24, and from that paper an editorial is read as charging a bargain upon the Senate in regard to the admission of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Kellog] and myself. I see nothing in the editorial in this paper to justify any such charge, either directly or impliedly. The editors of the paper, whom I take great pleasure in saying I know very well, are both honorable gentlemen and are incapable of making any reflection upon the honor of this body. pable of making any reflection upon the honor of this body.

After giving a brief history of the discussion when the credentials of Mr. Kellogg and myself were before the Senate, this editorial refers to an agreement and quotes from the Record and says this:

After another lengthy discussion of this resolution Mr. EDMUNDS said:

Now what did the Senator from Vermont say:

I ask unanimous consent be given to come to an understanding among the Senators : First-

Here is the understanding and that is all there is in it:

First, to vote on the Kellogg-Spofford case at or before two o'clock and thirty minutes a. m. to-day, the chairman of the committee or any one allowed by him to have the last hour to sum up, if desired. Second, to vote on the Butler-Corbin case at or before the expiration of one hour after the Kellogg-Spofford case is disposed of, the time to be equally divided, the chairman of the committee or some one for him to have the last thirty minutes to close the debate.

Mr. Thurman, upon this proposition being made, said:

"I hope the proposition will be agreed to, and I ask my democratic friends on this floor to agree to it, and to trust to me that it will result in an arrangement perfectly honorable and fair to both parties."

Now, here is what the editor says: Now, here is what the editor says:

No objection being made, the vote was taken on Mr. Hill's motion to seat Spofford on a prima face title and subject to the right of Kellogs to contest his seat. This amendment was lost—yeas 27, nays 29. Mr. Merrimon then moved that Spofford be allowed to produce at the bar of the Senate the testimony he offered to produce before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until such testimony could be taken. Mr. EDMUNDs immediately stated to the Senate that such a course would be "a plain violation of the understanding which had just been had, that the Senate would vote square and straight on the case."

Mr. Merrimon upon being reminded of this agreement stated that he withdrew his motion. The Wadleigh resolution originally submitted by the committee was then voted upon directly and adopted.

The Charleston News and Courier simply makes extracts from the The Charleston News and Courier simply makes extracts from the record of the proceedings of the Senate; it recites what the agreement was; what was said publicly, and what agreement was submitted by the bonorable Senator from Vermont, which I understood to be a simple question of personal convenience to Senators. That was all. They had been at a dead-lock here for several days and nights, and as I understood this understanding was had between the honorable Senator from Vermont and the honorable Senator from Ohio simply to come to a vote at a certain time. That is the agreement to which the News and Courier refers; and it charges no bargain on the Senate, but it recites in detail what the agreement was. I submit that even in the view of the News and Courier there could be no derthat even in the view of the News and Courier there could be no dereliction of duty, and no heinous offense committed by anybody. It simply recites what the Senate itself did, and I submit that whatever simply recites what the Senate itself did, and I submit that whatever has been said in newspapers or in the heat of debate reflecting on the editors of that paper certainly was unwarranted, because they have simply taken the RECORD as they found it and made their comments on it, and do not pretend that any other agreement was made than that set forth in the editorial itself. I think this much is due to the gentlemen who edit that paper.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I regret that when I first referred to the matter I had not before me the RECORD of Congress, because it is more authentic than newspaper reference. Every Senator who hears my voice knows that there is nothing more common in this body than after a debate has been progressing for some time to come to an understanding as to when the vote shall be taken. It is the Senate's mode of enforcing the previous question by unanimous consent. It is one of the most common occurrences in the body and attaches to every question here that is debated at length. It is a frequent occurrence in the Senate. I think I state that instantiating But now currence in the Senate. I think I state that just as it is. But now the honorable Senator from South Carolina endeavors to make the Senate understand that after the body had been at a dead-lock for several days, as he states, all that there was and all that occurred here was a simple understanding that we should vote at a certain

Mr. BUTLER. I only state what I myself understood. I do not know what other people understood.

Mr. BLAINE. I will read the Congressional Record, which I regret I had not read before. And I will not tax the Senate more than a few minutes. I read from the Congressional Record of November 30, 1877, page 796, volume 6, and Appendix. This occurred at the end of what the Senator from South Carolina states had been several days of dead-lock. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made his proposition to vote at a certain time:

Mr. Thurman. That would give him all the time now.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but your side has had all the evening on the Kellogg

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but your side has had an the evening on the Kenoge case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Second, to vote on the Butler-Corbin case at or before the expiration of one hour after the Kellogg-Spofford case is disposed of, the time to be equally divided, the chairman of the committee or some one for him to have the last thirty minutes to close the debate."

I ask unanimous consent to come to that understanding, Mr. President.

The Vice-President. Is there objection?

Mr. Garland. Is there nothing, I ask the Senator from Vermont, of the other

Mr. EDMUNDS. I propose nothing. I ask unanimous consent for that I have named, nothing more, nothing less.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think it is an improper proposition at all.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I hope the proposition will be agreed to; and I ask my democratic friends on this floor to agree to it and to trust to me that it will result in an arrangement perfectly honorable and fair to both parties.

What meant all this talk of the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. Garland,] who now occupies the chair, and whose sense of honor I would trust as far as any man, and of the senior Senator on the other side of the Chamber, [Mr. Thurman,] who is recognized as the democratic leader—all this talk by the Senator from Arkansas the democratic leader—all this talk by the Senator from Arkansas about the proposition not being an improper one, and his invocation to his brother democrats on the part of the Senator from Ohio to trust him, to go it blind as it were, "trust to me that it will result in an arrangement perfectly honorable and fair to both parties," and it will come out all right? All this talk, this extraordinary language, had reference simply and solely to fixing an hour at which the Senate would vote on the question, we are told! That is the whole of it! That would be the most extraordinary preface, the most extraordinary prelude to so short and inconsequential a play that the Senate records could show anywhere.

I do not desire to push this matter at all. I only desire to say that everything I stated and more than I stated is borne out on the very face of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on the very face of the words face of the Congressional Record, on the very face of the words themselves. Then the voting began, and Mr. Merrimon came into the Senate, and not having heard the honorable Senator from Ohio pledge his democratic associates on the floor that it would all come out right if they would only trust to him, Mr. Merrimon in a rash and unguarded moment plunged in with an amendment, and his coat-tail was gently pulled and it was intimated to him that that was not according to the agreement, and he was sat down upon and then himself sat down, and the whole thing went on and went forward and went through on that arrangement, and the honorable Senator from went through on that arrangement, and the honorable Senator from went through on that arrangement, and the honorable Senator from South Carolina but for that arrangement would not have been seated. That was the last night of that session of Congress. ["No!" "No!" It certainly was the last night of that session, the 30th of November. Mr. BUTLER. The legislative day of the 25th of November continued. We were sworn in actually on the 2d of December. Mr. BLAINE. This was the 30th of November. Mr. INGALLS. Congress adjourned on the 3d of December. Mr. BLAINE. Then I am wrong as to its being the last night of the session.

Mr. ANTHONY. The proceedings were journalized as of one day, but extended over the next day.

Mr. BLAINE. I was absent myself at that time, and I am probably the only Senator who can avail himself of an alibi so as to prove ably the only Senator who can avail himself of an alibi so as to prove that he had no part in this transaction at all. [Laughter.] I am again an exculpated cruiser. [Laughter.]

This is journalized as of the 30th of November, just as a dead-lock that runs over several days will bear the impress on the Journal of the Senate and on the Record of the day it began. But I am correct in stating that this was the last night of the session and that it was in the record of the Chamber to a state of the Chamber to was in the power of any Senator on either side of the Chamber to have prevented that arrangement going into effect. It only needed a small proportion of brass and a good pair of lungs to have talked that question clear out, and therefore when the honorable Senator from Arkansas says there is nothing improper in that proposition the honorable Senator from Arkansas rises up to the height of the occahonorable Senator from Arkansas rises up to the height of the occasion, when standing as the representative of a great sovereign State, to assure the Senate that fixing an hour for taking the vote was a proposition that could not have anything "improper" in it, and then the Senator from Ohio clinched the opinion of the Senator from Arkansas that there was no impropriety in it, as if the Senator's remark, as I supposed it had, made a little suspicion, he says: "Trust to me, and the arrangement will be one that shall be honorable and fair to both parties." Now, whether the "both parties" were the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from South Carolina, or whether they were the political parties that sit on either side of this Chamber, is quite immaterial. I do not know. The language would not be specific on that point, but it would have the same meaning in either construction, and therefore I maintain that, despite all the sensitiveness we see here and all the disposition to avoid implication, the record itself shows that there was something underneath that settlement of that question that night in which every Senator here was consenting What it was the absent Senator, seven hundred miles away,

But I maintain, Mr. President, on the more serious side of this question, that the proposition now made is a new one in the history of this Government. It is one that unsettles every title to a seat on this this Government. It is one that unsettles every title to a seat on this floor. It is one that absolutely destroys the representation of what that side of the Chamber is so fond of calling the sovereign States. It is trampling upon the certificate of a State. It is saying that when political necessities arise you will decide here who are Senators, and that in that decision you will disregard the previous recorded decision of the Senate when made upon a solemn declaration that it is done and entered upon your Journals as upon the merits of the case

I have heard it ontside-of course I never heard it inside, and I do not intimate that it ever entered into the pure mind of a democratic Senator—I have heard outside that there was a political necessity for casting ahead in this matter; that in political convulsions and revo-lutions it might be necessary to have the solid thirty-two Senators from the South, because out of the forty-four in the free States it was difficult, if not impossible, to get more than seven, and that, if seven only could be had from the North, it would require the solid thirty-only could be had from the North, it would require the solid thirtytwo from the South to make a governing power in this body.

Next year the honorable Senator from Louisiana may be an obstructive element. He may hold on some important occasion and on some very important question just as decisive a vote as the late honorable Senator from Florida and the late honorable Senator from South Carolina held on that night of November 30, 1877. If my honrable friend from Conventiont [Mr. F. evol cheeped he relieved from orable friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] should be relieved from orable friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] should be relieved from service, it would give me great personal pain, however I might rejoice politically. If other Senators should be relieved by their constituencies in the North by a political revolution that should change democratic into republican Legislatures, I have heard it said that it might be a necessity to the democratic party to have a South so absolutely solid as to be unanimous against all possible intrusion from might be a necessity to the democratic party to have a South so absolutely solid as to be unanimous against all possible intrusion from any possible republican representative whatever. Of course no vote in this Senate would be influenced by that consideration, but the party that is urging it outside—I may happen not to offend against propriety or rule if I say—are largely inspired with the desire and as they esteem it the necessity of controlling this great co-ordinate branch of the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment. I cannot forbear saying that I have no part or lot whatever in this controversy, and I wish it distinctly understood that so far as I am concerned there was no bargain or trade connected with my admission that I was a party to. Sir, I bespeak the candid attention of the Senate, especially of the Senators on the other side, for one single moment, while I say that so far as I am concerned I rest my claim, my title to a seat upon this floor, upon the ground that I was seated after a full and fair investigation of the facts involved in the case. And when the Senator from Georgia tells the Senate, as I understood him to tell them a short time since, that in regard to Mr. Spofford's "five points," as they are termed, there was on the original hearing no evidence before the committee regarding these points, he states that which is not correct.

I assert that in regard to all of those five points that so much ado has been made about, the evidence in the record covered every point. This evidence was before the committee under an agreement between Mr. Spofford and myself the committee under an agreement between Mr. Spofford and myself the committee under an agreement between Mr. Spofford and myself the committee under an agreement between

This evidence was before the committee under an agreement between Mr. Spofford and myself made at the instance and in conformity with Mr. Spoilord and myself made at the instance and in conformity with the resolution of the committee appointing the chairman of the committee, Mr. Wadleigh, then Senator from New Hampshire, and a member of the committee, Mr. Merrimon, the then Senator from North Carolina, to confer with Mr. Spofford and myself to see upon what points we could agree. They did confer with us, and we finally agreed that certain evidence taken by different committees of the two Houses of Congress should be considered in order to save the expense and delay of a long and protracted investigation and sending for persons to Louisiana. This was done because it was well known and conceded that the entire matter of the election in Louisiana in November, 1876, that the entire matter of the election in Louisiana in November, 1876, had been considered in detail by these committees, and that evidence full and complete had been taken regarding this election covering many thousands of printed pages. It was also agreed that the journals of both Legislatures should be considered in evidence—other statements of fact were also mutually agreed upon.

Mr. President, the evidence agreed upon covered all the five points, and I secont that the appropriate agreed upon agreed upon agreed upon the secont that the second that and I assert that the committee were fully justified in resolving as they did that the evidence agreed upon and the admissions made respectively by Mr. Spofford and myself covered the five points upon which evidence was thus suddenly and evidently for delay asked to

Moreover, Mr. President, I desire to say, that after the Senate had opened its ears to Mr. Spofford upon his five points, after it had given him opportunity to take evidence, the committee took no evidence upon three of these points, and took the evidence I think of only three witnesses upon the other two, and the evidence upon these is cumulative. A portion of it I caused to be read by the Secretary, and it establishes, if there was any doubt before regarding it, that the three republican representatives from the Seventh ward of New Orleans were in fact elected by the admission of the democratic conservative committee, made under oath. The greater part of the evidence was on the questions of bribery or lack of quorum.

And now, sir, it is asserted that the committee misbehaved, that the Senate misbehaved, because they did not take more evidence than they already had before them, although what they had covered the five points, and when the doors were thrown open then they did not take it!

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and forty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, for reference to their appropriate committees. Under this call memorials and joint resolutions from State and territorial Legislatures, and also resolutions calling upon the Executive Departments for information, are in order for reference.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM IN ARIZONA.

Mr. HERNDON introduced a bill (H. R. RIGHTS OF CERTAIN SETTLERS IN KANSAS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent and the indulgence of the House for about five minutes to pass a bill, a substitute for House bill No. 2310, to protect the settlers in the extreme western part of my State in the enjoyment of their homes during a temporary and necessary absence therefrom. Unless the bill is passed promptly these settlers, or many of them, will lose their homestead and preemption claims, and I hope there will be no objection to its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

[Substitute for House bill No. 2310.]

A bill for the relief of certain homestead and pre-emption settlers in Kansas.

A bill for the relief of certain homestead and pre-emption settlers in Kansas.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands, or pre-emption settlers upon Indian reservations, in the State of Kansas, west of the last line of the counties of Harper, Kingman, Reno, Rice, Ellsworth, Lincoln, Mitchell, and Jewell, where there has been a loss or failure of crops from unavoidable cause, in the year of 1870 or 1880, to leave and be absent from said lands until the 1st day of October, 1881, under such rules and regulations as to proof and notice as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe; and during said absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlement as though no such absence had occurred.

SEC. 2. That the time for making final proof and payment by such pre-emptors is hereby extended for one year after the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section of this act; but in cases where the purchase-money is by law payable in installments, the first unpaid installment shall be held not to be due until one year after the expiration of the leave of absence aforesaid.

Mr. PVAN of Kenses, The bill is an expire and the present defensed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The bill is unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill from the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. In the extreme western portion of my State there has been exceptionally dry weather during the last fourteen months. In that section of the State there are many homestead and pre-emption settlers who have sustained a loss of crops in consequence. These settlers are obliged now to go away from their claims temporarily to earn a subsistence for their families. When they leave their homes, unless they are protected by this legislation the first stranger that comes along may take possession of their claims and invest himself with all their rights, including the improvements they have put upon them. This bill is simply to protect them in the enjoyment of their rights, their improvements, in a word, their homes, as fully as if

Mr. COBB. I now insist upon my motion to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

Mr. COBB. I now desire to report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCOID. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCOID. My point of order is that the morning hour having been dispensed with for to-day, under the rule, the House must proceed to consider the unfinished business coming over from last public-bill day. That business is the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] being the bill (H. R. APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. Mr. COBB. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriations for the District of Columbia. Pending that motion, I move that all general debate on the bill be limited to five minutes, unless gentlemen on the other side desire a longer time

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lap-Ham] make the point of order that debate cannot be limited until the Committee of the Whole has commenced the consideration of the bill 1

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not know of any one who desires to discuss the bill; but I think members should hear it read, so as to be aware of its provisions, before debate is limited upon it.

Mr. BURROWS. I think time will be saved by raising the point that debate cannot be limited on this bill until its consideration has been commenced in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Harris, of Virginia, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. If there be no objection, the first and formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cobb] in charge of the bill is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up much of the time of the Committee of the Whole in discussing the provisions of this bill. Its provisions are substantially the same as those contained in the bill of last year which was passed by the House appropriating money to carry on the District government for the present fiscal year. The bill is the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations. The amount appropriated by the bill is in all $3,421,297.35.

In preparing this bill it was the desire of the committee (so far as we were able) to strike off whatever we considered to be appropriate.

we were able) to strike off whatever we conceived to be unnecessary. We have not reduced the amounts required for such purposes as we believed to be necessary. For instance, in regard to the improvement of streets and permanent improvements of the city, we have reported what we conceive to be a liberal appropriation for this purpose. The appropriations for public schools have been necessarily increased in consequence of the increased number of pupils. It is estimated by the trustees and the superintendent of public schools that the attendance for the next fiscal year will be 10 per cent. greater than for the present year. Last year the appropriation for school purposes was $475,000, $75,000 of which was for school-houses, and $400,000 for what may be termed the ordinary expenses of the school system. The appropriations in this bill for school purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, amount to $504,834.80, as against $475,000 appropriated for the present fiscal year. In this sum $504,834.80, as a school purposes the published $100,000 for the building of the present school between $504,834.80, as a school purpose the published $100,000 for the published $100,000 f we include $100,000 for the building of three school-houses as against $75,000 appropriated last year for the same purpose. This increased expenditure for the erection of school buildings was believed by your committee to be necessary. There are now occupied for public school purposes in this city more than one hundred rooms, for which we purposes in this city more than one numered rooms, for which we have been paying rent amounting to $30,000 or $35,000 a year. Many of these rooms are totally unfit to be occupied by school children. I have visited some of them myself, and I am very certain that there is not a member of this House, who, if he would take the pains to examine many of these school-rooms as I have done, but who would pronounce them unfit for the purpose of public schools; they are unfit to be occupied by the school children of the District. So far as this branch of the bill is concerned, the real increase is only $29,834, which shows that the net increase for the ordinary running expenses of the public schools in the District is only $4,834 in excess of the present fiscal year, the increase being, as I have said, in building of the three school-buildings.

We have attempted to curtail what we conceived to be unnecessary expenses, wherever we could, and I think we have done so without injury to the service. In most cases I believe this has been done with the consent of the school officers; not in all, but after a full considerthe consent of the school officers; not in all, but after a full consideration, as I believe, it was believed that the public schools can be carried for this amount provided for in the bill, thus saving in the ordinary expense of the system the sum of $20,587 as against the present year. The last bill appropriated $12,000 for fuel. It was thought by all that $10,000 would supply the necessary fuel for the next fiscal year; thus saving $2,000 on this item. Last year there was appropriated for the present fiscal year $25,000 for repairs of school buildings, ated for the present useal year $25,000 for repairs of school buildings, most of which belong to private parties, as I am informed, and were simply rented by the District for school purposes. The last bill appropriated $25,000 for this purpose; this bill only appropriates $15,000, and it is thought by those who have control of the subject that this sum would be sufficient. This arises in part out of the fact that we will have erected out of the $75,000 appropriated, made by the last bill, two new school buildings which will be ready for use at the commencement of the next school year.

We have made in other respects reductions which seem to be proper. In illustration of this I may speak of one fact. Heretofore the school trustees had under their control a mechanical janitor as they called him. The board of commissioners took from the control of the school trustees this mechanical janitor and placed him under their own control. The board of trustees together with the superintendent agreed that if this mechanical janitor should be again placed under their control, the expenses could be reduced on that account $5,000. And upon consultation with the commissioners of the District and with the legislative committee of the board of school trustees, it was agreed that this mechanical janitor should be restored to the trustees and save this $5,000. The further reduction of $5,000 on the repair account was thought proper because of the erection of the two new buildings which are now about completed.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] whether these three school buildings are in addition to the two school buildings authorized by the act of last year?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir. Forty-five thousand dollars of the money appropriated in this bill is to be used in the purchase of a site and the construction of a building in the second division, $45,000 in the purchase of a site for the erection of one in the sixth division, and $10,000 for the purchase of a site for the erection of one in the sixth division, and $10,000 for the purchase of a site for the execution of a school building in the second of a site for the execution of a school building. chase of a site for the erection of one in the sixth division, and $10,000 for the purchase of a site for the erection of a school building in the county; making $100,000 for erecting three school-houses—two at $45,000 each and one at $10,000.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Is there any provision for putting either of these buildings upon land belonging to the United States?

Mr. COBB. No, sir. The legislative committee of the trustees of the public schools came to the conclusion, upon consultation with the committee that we had better insert in the bill a provision allowing the public schools came to the conclusion, upon consultation with the committee, that we had better insert in the bill a provision allowing this fund to be used for the purpose of purchasing sites "where necessary" and for the construction of the buildings; hence we have put in such a provision. They say that in their judgment there is no site at the proper place which is owned either by the Government or the District. That is the explanation of that provision. It will be found set forth fully on page 14 of the bill.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CORR. Ves. in

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir. Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Will these three new school-houses provide for all the purils in the District of Columbia that now have to go to these hundred rooms you speak of?

Mr. COBB. No; not near one-half of them.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Then why not build new school-houses instead of renting rooms at this enormous rental?
Mr. COBB. For the reason we have not the money.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But you pay $30,000 rent, and that is the interest on $600,000 at 5 per cent., and $600,000 will build eighteen school beyong. school-houses.

Mr. COBB. That may all be true.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. If you build nine school-houses at a cost of only $15,000 interest annually you save one-half the money you now pay for rent.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to say a word to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COBB. Certainly. Let me first answer the gentleman from New York. This is an appropriation bill simply making appropria-tions to carry on the government of the District of Columbia, and the Appropriations Committee has no authority under the rules of this House to put a provision in this bill appropriating that amount of money unless the revenues of the District were sufficient to justify it, which is not the case. We cannot appropriate money in the way suggested by the gentleman from New York. We have appropriated up to about the limit of the revenues which will be produced for the next fiscal year. As the District of Columbia pays one-half of the appropriations made by this bill and the United States the other half, we cannot, of course, go beyond the revenues of the District; and $100,000, together with the other appropriations provided for in the bill, is as much as we can appropriate for the construction of school

I will, however, say to the gentleman from New York that in my judgment it would be a matter of economy for the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States if Congress would provide a law authorizing a loan of three or four hundred thousand dol-ride a law authorizing a loan of three or four hundred thousand dollars at a low rate of interest for this purpose; I think it would be good economy to make such a law for the purpose of building a sufficient number of school-houses. We would thereby save the large amount of rent which we are now paying.

But, as I have already stated, this is an appropriation bill and we are bound to follow the law, and, as there is no law for it, the Appropriations Committee did not have the power, under the rules of the House, to put such a provision in this bill and it did not feel it to be the duty of the committee to provide in this bill for such a loan.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I will say to the gentleman from New York that

Mr. CLAFLIN. I will say to the gentleman from New York that we provided for building two school-houses last year and yet they are not done, and one of them is hardly begun. If we appropriate money to build half a dozen more I do not believe they would get them through before another year. I think the three provided for are sufficient for the present.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What is the reason for that?

Mr. CLAFLIN. The three provided for are all the District commissioners will be justified in building this year. I think the committee has been liberal in this matter. I have been trying to see whether two of the school-houses cannot be placed on ground now belonging to the United States or to the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB. It may be that that may be done. The commissioners of the District have full power to do that if they can find a site which is suitable to be used for that purpose. The gentleman from Massachusetts will remember there are nineteen members of the board of trustees, that seven constitute the legislative committee of that board, and it was with that committee I conferred on this subject. They seemed to be perfectly familiar with each school division of the District, in the city as well as in the county. It was their suggestion that this question should be left open, that they were satisfied there was no site in either one of these divisions owned by the Government which could be properly used for this purpose. I understand, however, there is a piece of ground, not now in condition, which can be used for this purpose; it is called, I believe, the Corcoran Square, and is situated, I understand, somewhere in the northern part of the city; I cannot now tell just exactly where. I understand from the board of trustees that piece of ground is not now, as the law stands, in condition to be used for the site of one of these school buildings. But there is a bill pending or to be reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of bringing that piece of ground into requisition for this purpose.

Mr. HUNTON. What statement is that the gentleman makes? Mr. COBB. I have referred to a bill pending, or to be reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, setting apart Corcoran Square as the site for the erection of a public school building. When that is done, it may be that the board of commissioners will locate one of these school buildings on that piece of ground, and thereby save the expense of paying for a site.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I wish to inquire whether the commissioners have that authority

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir; they have authority under the law to locate these buildings at any suitable place within the school division named

Mr. CLAFLIN. There can be no better place than Corcoran Square for one of these school buildings at least.

Mr. COBB. As I was saying when my attention was directed to the question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses for the present year is $21,587.27. We have cut that down in this bill to $20,000.

We have reduced the amount appropriated by the last bill for the increase of teachers' pay and also the increase in the number of teachers to $15,000. Now, so far as other matters connected with the bill are concerned I do not know that I need to go into the details, but if any gentleman desires information I shall be very glad to answer any questions that may be asked. I will state, however, that we have placed restrictions wherever we thought necessary to protect the appropriation and to give proper direction to its use.

I have one provision here which I think important, and that is the proviso on page 19 of the bill in the following words:

Provided, That said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during said fiscal year than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues of said District.

That is to protect the appropriations made by the Government of the United States

Mr. SIMONTON. I find on page 5 of the bill, line 88, this item: For the relief of the poor, $10,000.

Ishould like to inquire of the gentleman how that is to be expended? Mr. COBB. It is to be expended by the officers in charge of these various charitable institutions. Mr. SIMONTON. Those enumerated in the preceding portions of the bill?

Mr. COBB.

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir. Mr. CLAFLIN. I would like to inquire how much, if any, is the increase of the Metropolitan police force?

Mr. COBB. None at all, sir; and I will state the reason.

There is no law, as I understand it, for the increase, and there was no demand for the increase made on the committee, and therefore we have waited the action of Congress upon that subject. There is a slight decrease, not in force, however, but in the expenses.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I would like to inquire why it is that the commissioners do not build the school-houses, or why they have not been built heretofore, if the money was appropriated?

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask a question?

Mr. COBB. As soon as I answer the gentleman from New York, I will with pleasure. I can only state this, for I do not know the reason only as I learned it from others. But I understand the fact to be that the building to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers was let to a contractor who failed. I think the second contractor also failed, and that was the reason it was not completed, as I learn. They claim that it was not the fault of the District authorities, but was a mistake in selecting a contractor who seemed at the time to be a good man so far as they could judge.

Mr. CLAFLIN. That applies, I believe, to only one building, and the other houses were not built, and for no reason that I can ascertain except that they had other business on hand, and the three commissioners are hardly equal to the great duties imposed upon them. Their construction was, therefore, delayed at a great expense to the District; for if they had been built early in the season the contracts could have been let at a much lower rate than at present.

Mr. HUNTON. I find on page 4 of the bill that there is appropriated for the support of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane in said District, as provided in sections 4843 and 4844 of the Revised Statutes, $45,000. This bill-and it underwent examination in the Committee on the District of Columbia—contains an appropriation of only $20,000 for that purpose, and it was considered by our committee ample for the support of the indigent insane chargeable to the District. Now, I ald like to ask the reason for the increase.

Mr. COBB. The reason was this: We did not consider that $20,000 was a sufficient amount to maintain the persons that have been sent from the District to this asylum. There were in September last, according to the report of the superintendent of that institution, some eight hundred and eighteen inmates in this asylum, three hundred and fifty-two of whom were from the District of Columbia. I had a full conference with Dr. Godding, the superintendent, my attention, of course, having been called to his letter to the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the amount that should be paid by the District as its portion of the fund for the running expense of the in-stitution, and he claims in that letter that it would take the sum of $96,480 to pay the expense of the indigent insane placed in this asylum by the District authorities—the number being, if my memory serves me rightly, three hundred and fifty-two—with the presumable additional increase for the next fiscal year.

Now, when I had come to converse with Dr. Godding I concluded that was too much and that his estimate was too high for the support of District inmates in that institution. In that conference with him I learned that he made his estimate on a basis of $5 per week for the support of each of these inmates from the District. I told him that I regarded that as excessive, and that the inmates could be supported in any other institution in the country of the kind for a much less sum than that, and that I did not feel like imposing a burden upon the District of Columbia that I thought they could not and should not bear. He admitted, however, that it was too much, and thought he might possibly be able to provide for them and get along at an expense of $2.50 per head; and thereby the amount was reduced from the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury to the sum of $45,000, as contained in the bill. And I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the amount named was not altogether a deduction from figures, but was the best thing the committee could do in view of the equities of the case.

Mr. HUNTON. How much was charged the District on this account for the last year?

Mr. COBB. Seventeen thousand dollars.

Mr. HUNTON. And now the amount is $45,000.

Mr. HUNTON. And now the amount is $45,000.

Mr. COBB. An increase from $17,000 to $45,000. And if you take $2.50 per week for each patient, counting the increase that Dr. Godding insists will take place, you will find that instead of $45,000 it will cost $71,000. We have given the District the benefit of the difference between the $17,000 and the $45,000, which we thought was equitable but somewhat in favor of the District.

I may say, while I am upon that point, another thing. There are too many patients in this institution. There is no question about that. The original act with regard to these patients prescribed the qualification for admission. This act provided for the admission of those only who become insane while in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, and of persons who become insane who are residents Marine Corps, and of persons who become insane who are residents of the District of Columbia, and such other persons as may have been engaged in the departments of the public service to which I have referred, and who may become insane within three years from the time of their discharge from said service. Now there are many inmates of this institution who do not come within the rules prescribed by the law to which I have referred, and in my judgment should be sent to the States to which they belong.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him, if these reforms to which he has alluded be carried out, would not the $20,000 approved by our committee be quite sufficient?

Mr. COBB. I cannot say. I do not know the proportion that would have to be discharged; but I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the authorities of the District of Columbia are as much to blame as the authorities of the Government of the United States; and I do not know that I need lay the blame at the feet of any one except Congress itself.

When I examined the law to see who were entitled to admission into this institution I found the provisions to which I have referred. I then called Dr. Godding's attention to it, and said to him that he had too great a number of insane in the institution; Isaid, "You have persons in the asylum who do not properly belong there under the law." He said that was not the case, and he turned me to the law making appropriations for this institution and providing the qualification of the inmates; and he claimed that under these appropriation acts he had the right to admit persons who had ever served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, and I think his claim was somewhat plausible. I think myself the rule defining the qualification of the inmates of the asylum was somewhat changed by these enactments. Hence it is I have referred in this bill to the original sections of the law defining the qualification of inmates and requiring that they shall be qualified for admission under the provisions of the original act; and I trust that the officers of the District and of the Government will hereafter be governed by it, thus leaving these appropriation acts, which were only annual in their effect, out of the question, and getting back to the old law.

There are patients there from most all the States of the Union. That results perhaps as a matter of course; but there are too many. And the number of patients from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps (four hundred and fifty or four hundred and sixty) is too great. And three hundred and fifty-two patients from the District of Columbia is too large a number. This Government Hospital for the Insane seems to be a common receptacle for all of the insane of the country. There seems to be a great desire on the part of its officers—and I do not speak disparagingly of them—to build up an immense institution. Dr. Godding, in his report, asks for this institution an appropriation of $300,000 to build additional buildings; then he asks for the construction of water-works $25,000: for what may be termed perman There are patients there from most all the States of the Union.

construction of water-works $25,000; for what may be termed permanent improvements nearly $400,000. I think there is, as I have said, a disposition on the part of the officers of this institution to make it larger than any other in the country, and hence invalid insane have been admitted who ought not to be there. They are not perhaps to blame for this unless it be that through their influence these disqualified persons have been admitted, and would not have been in the absence of such influence. But one thing is clear to my mind that there are many inmates in the institution, both from the District and elsewhere, who should not be there. That is all, I believe, which I care to say upon that subject. If any other gentleman, however, desires to ask me any question in regard to it I shall be pleased, if in my power, to answer it.

Mr. HAZELTON. Can these inmates to whom the gentleman refers be sent back to the States?

Mr. COBB. They could be.

Mr. HAZELTON. That would be your plan?

Mr. COBB. They could be and ought to be. Mr. MONROE. But are not.

Mr. COBB. But are not.
Mr. HAZELTON. That would be your plan of doing it?
Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.
Mr. CLAFLIN. Is there no law by which these patients belonging to other States can be sent home?

Mr. COBB. There is no law except the one we make by appropriating money for the transportation of those inmates; and that is Mr. CLAFLIN. Would it not be cheaper to appropriate more money for that purpose?

Mr. COBB. It might be; but it is a leap in the dark when it comes to making appropriations for that purpose, as the report of the officials does not show us what proportion of these patients comes within or falls outside of the law on the subject.

I may say another thing while on this point, and it may be well to This institution is a close corporation. I do not charge any fraud, but I do charge that it costs an enormous sum of money, and I do charge that we have not any means of knowing the exact amount of money that it does cost for the specific purposes for which the money is used unless we should go to the books of the institution and take months to examine them. For years, I believe, the reports for this institution have been made without specifying the particular expenditures, giving the expenditures only in gross.

I may say that the Government owns four hundred acres of land out there is the bar content of the particular than the the there. It is claimed, not through his report but Dr. Godding states to me, that they cultivated last year about sixty acres of land; that they produced about seventeen thousand dollars' worth of cereals; that they now have seventeen hands out there; many cows, he does not know how many; many horses, he does not know how many of them; quite a number of large wagons, and more than two hundred employés, I believe, about the institution. I do not mean employés doing the work of the institution proper, but taking those who do the work of the institution proper and the employes on the farm they number over two hundred, I understand. No one can tell from the reports what the money is expended for or what amount of property is there or how many hands are employed. There is a dairy on the farm. or how many hands are employed. There is a dairy on the farm. They spend the money appropriated but do not report how much is spent for cows, how much for horses, and how much for improving and beautifying the grounds, &c.

There is a provision in this bill, however, placed there for safety in the future, which requires a report to be made in detail of these expenditures, so that we can tell something about how the money is expenditures, so that we can expended and for what purposes.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COBB. Certainly.

Mr. SAPP. Does the gentleman say that they do not report the amount of money expended and the purposes for which it is expended?

Mr. COBB. They report the amount, but do not specify the par-

Mr. WEAVER. Then, how can you tell that the money is honestly expended?

Mr. COBB. We cannot tell. The accounting officers of the Treasury, in their report, show that the money has all been expended, and I suppose that under the law this is a check upon these expenditures. But it seems to me that Congress ought to have a report made by the superintendent, so that we can read it and, to some extent at least, ascertain how this money has been disposed of in detail.

I have no doubt that we could ascertain that if we were to go to the accounting officers of the Treasury and to the books of the institution and examine them; but we have not time to do that. I could not do it, or, if I did, I would have to neglect everything else. Therefore we have put a provision in the bill, as I have said, which we think will remedy this difficulty in the future, and will save us the trouble of looking after these facts outside of the reports.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to have the gentleman explain what, if any, provision is made in this bill for taking care of the paupers of the District.

Mr. COBB. They are provided for; they go to the Washington asylum. We appropriate a little over $38,000 for the Washington asylum. That is an institution situated east of the Capitol, I believe; I have not had time to visit it. There are some forty acres of ground owned by the Government, with sundry buildings upon it; and I believe there are some three hundred and forty inmates there. The institution is reported as being very well managed; the commissioners of the District say it is, and the report of the officers says

We appropriate $10,000 for making permanent improvements for that institution. I will state that it is claimed by those who seem to know about the facts that there is a necessity for a building in which the females can be kept separate from the males; as it is they are all kept together. Congress heretofore made an appropriation out of which the building was commenced. The foundation is laid, and it is estimated that $10,000 more will complete the building and make it ready for use for the female inmates of the institution

If any other gentleman has any question to ask I will be glad to answer it

Mr. FORT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cobb] whether any provision is made for taking up and providing for the little beggar children that seem to swarm in the streets of this city by night as well as by day. For my part I would be glad to see something done to take care of the little children who are begging in the streets of this city. We do not know whether they are really suffering or are employed by others to beg.

Mr. HAZELTON. The bill for the Reform School covers that whole

Mr. FORT. I am glad to know that there is some provision made; but I am sorry also to know that they are still on the streets in great numbers.

Mr. COBB. We appropriate $10,000 to be used by the commissioners of the District to take care of the poor; that is an appropriation for that purpose. Then there are other charitable institutions here which have been supposed to provide ample relief. I have not heard it suggested that we should do more than we have done. Mr. FORT. The trouble seems to be that these little beggars are not taken care of. I do not say that there is not money enough appropriated for the purpose, but there must be some lack somewhere on the part of some official in seeing to it that these little beggar children are provided for; or else they are employed by some mercenary people to beg for profit; we do not know which. That is the trouble. For my part I do not know that I ever saw anywhere any city that so literally swarmed with little beggar children as the city of Washington. I think it is a crying shame that something is not done to correct this evil. Something certainly ought to be done, because the present condition of affairs is not only demoralizing to the city, but it is utterly so to these little children.

Mr. COBB. I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois in the suggestion he has made. The evil to which he refers has come very distinctly under my own observation, although I live in a portion of the city where, instead of meeting paupers and beggars, I not taken care of. I do not say that there is not money enough ap-very distinctly under my own observation, although I live in a portion of the city where, instead of meeting paupers and beggars, I ought to meet those who would be regarded as in affluent circumstances. I think we have gone as far in this bill in the direction of caring for these unfortunates as we can; and it seems to me that if the funds which we appropriate are properly used there need be no begging upon the streets of Washington City. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in addition to the $10,000 which we of the gentleman to the fact that in addition to the $10,000 which we place under the control of the District commissioners to be used in taking care of the poor, we make appropriations for a number of institutions not controlled by the Government. We appropriate, for instance, for the support and maintenance of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, $15,000; for the Children's Hospital, $5,000; for Saint Ann's Infant Asylum, $5,000; for the Industrial Home School, $10,000; for the National Association for Colored Women and Children, $6,500; for the Women's Christian Association, $5,000. These appropriations are in addition to the specific appropriation of $10,000 to be disbursed by the commissioners, and the appropriations made for institutions controlled directly by the Government. The institutions I have just enumerated are not controlled by the Government, but are charitable institutions managed by private parties in this city with whom I have conversed and for whom I have the highest regard, believing that every dollar of the money we appropriate will be faithfully used in the support of such inmates as they accept into their institutions.

In some instances these appropriations are an increase upon previous appropriations for the same purpose. For instance, for the Industrial Home School we now appropriate $10,000, while last year the appropriation was only $5,000. I have visited this institution, and I find that the inmates are a class of poor children picked up upon the streets and elsewhere, who are taken there and cared for. The District authorities have established in connection with this institution a school, conducted under the regulations of the public-school system, and there is an ample number of inmates to make a good school.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir. place under the control of the District commissioners to be used in

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLS. I have no doubt that this bill makes sufficient appropriations in this direction, and to that the gentleman seems to be priations in this direction, and to that the gentleman seems to be confining himself. But in my judgment there ought to be some provision by which these beggars may be taken out of the streets and put into these institutions. It was to this very point that I undertook to call the attention of the gentleman awhile ago. I agree with my friend from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.] I never saw so many beggars anywhere as we see in this city. They come to your houses at all hours. Some of them are no doubt in indigent and suffering circumtrates of them are no doubt in indigent and suffering circumstances; others are no doubt in indigent and suffering circumstances; others are no doubt impostors. But it seems to me the law ought to require all these persons to be taken up and put into some institution. Those who cannot work ought to be taken care of by the Government, and those who can ought to be required to work.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope that when we reach an appropriate part of our District bill the gentleman will be kind enough to offer an amend-our District bilt the gentleman will be kind enough to offer an amendment on this subject, so that we may consider it.

Mr. HAZELTON. This power to take mendicant children off the streets and place them in some public institution is a police power; and I suppose that in an appropriation bill—

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will wait a moment I will hear him. Such a provision as he indicates would be entirely foreign to an appropriation bill

Mr. HAZELTON. That is precisely what I was going to say.
Mr. COBB. As an Appropriations Committee we have no authority to insert in a bill of this kind police regulations with regard to the District of Columbia; and we have not done it. We can only report aptrict of Columbia; and we have not done it. We can only report appropriations in pursuance of law.

Mr. HAZELTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has simply stated the idea which I started out to express—that this being a police regulation we have no power to control the matter in an appropriation bill. But in order to meet this great public necessity, the Committee on the District of Columbia, whose eyes are turned in every direction to subserve the public interest, have reported to this House a bill to establish a reform school. In that bill power is given to the District commissioners to take up all children who may be begging on the streets and place them in an institution where they will receive care and education. The subject, of course, is not germane at all to this bill. When a law such as I have indicated is established, the duty of the Committee on Appropriations will be simply to provide an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the reform-school act.

Mr. COBB. Of course that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. HAZELTON. Nothing whatever.

Mr. COBB. I understand (though I do not pretend to know with certainty) that the law is now ample if it were executed.

Mr. HAZELTON. All we shall ask is that you appropriate $25,000 to carry that bill into execution.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to concrete pavements, $75,000; for work on New York avenue intercepting sewer, $28,000; for Boundary street auxiliary sewer, $100,000; for lateral sewers, $15,000; for work on sundry avenues and streets, and replacement of pavements on streets named in Appendix P numbered 10 and 11, annexed to the report of the commissioners of the District for 1879, (being schedules of streets requiring immediate attention,) $300,000; for materials for permit work, $20,000; for work on canal to deep water on river front, $18,600; for repairing and macadamizing Seventh street road, $15,000; for surveys of the District of Columbia with reference to the future extension of various avenues to the District line, $5,000; in all $576,600.

Mr. HUNTON. In the twenty-sixth line I move to strike out "5" and insert "10;" so it will read: "For surveys of the District of Co-and meert "10;" so it will read: "For surveys of the District of Columbia with reference to the future extension of various avenues to the District line, $10,000."

The sum of $10,000 was agreed to in the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which this bill was submitted for its approbation. The work is a very important one, and will be attended at least with the cost of $10,000 or more.

Mr. COBB. I cannot hear what the gentleman from Virginia is

Mr. COBB.

Mr. HUNTON. The object of the survey here proposed is to prevent villages in the county, outside of the limits of Georgetown and Washington, so building as to interfere with the Washington streets when extended. The time may come when the city of Washington and the city of Georgetown may cover two-thirds or one-half of the county part of the District of Columbia. If that time should come and these streets have to be extended, they will run across these villages in the county part of the property of the county part of the property of the county part of the property of the p lages and across these farms and across the yards of farm-houses in a manner so as to destroy private property, and will cost the Government an immense sum of money to correct unless provision be now made. Now, the object of this survey is to lay out the roads of the county part of the District of Columbia so as to conform as near as may be to the streets in the cities of Washington and Georgetown. We know in the county part of the District there are now springing up considerable villages, and one object of the survey is to so locate the streets there as to correspond with the streets of Washington when extended. In order to do this it takes a survey of great accuracy and considerable labor, and we are assured by the engineer commissioner of the District, Major Twining, that $10,000 would scarcely do it. And if the committee agrees this work shall be done, as the District Committee decided it ought to be done, then the sum of $10,000 is not more than enough.

Mr. COBB. I had a full conference with Major Twining, who has charge of this portion of the work of the District of Columbia, and he agreed that $5,000 was enough for this year. He thought that it would be all that would be necessary. The truth is that the system of surveys they have commenced here, if completed at once, would cost $100,000, and perhaps more, some estimates being $200,000 to cover all the expense of surveying lots, making field-notes, and everything of the kind.

The original amount as sent to us by the District Committee was, I admit, $10,000. I think it was too much for the extension of streets and roads through the District. I called Major Twining's special attention to it and asked him whether he could not get along this year with one-half that amount. He said he could, and, after all, perhaps it was about as much as ought to be granted. He certainly ought to brow

Mr. HUNTON. I understood Major Twining to say the reverse in the District Committee.

Mr. COBB. I think it is likely he did; but, when he had the question put right down to him as I brought it down, he yielded and said nat $5,000 this year perhaps was enough.

Mr. HUNTON. I think the inclination of his mind in our committee was that it was not enough.

Mr. COBB. He told us that he would make it do.

Mr. HUNTON. He would make it do by making the work inefficient and incomplete.

Mr. COBB. He cannot complete it for $10,000 or $100,000; that is not the question before the committee now, but what is required for the next year.

Mr. HUNTON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUNTON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENKLE. I move, after the word "avenues," in line 27, to insert the words "and establishing grades;" so it will read: "to the future extension of the various avenues and establishing grades."

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of litigation and inconvenience suffered in the District of Columbia by reason of the change of grades in the streets from time to time; and I submit it is exceedingly important, in making these surveys and extending the streets and avenues to the District of Columbia line, that at the same time the grades should be established, as well as the location of the lines of the streets and avenues, so that all difficulty hereafter may be obviated and property-holders may know precisely what will be the grades of the various streets and avenues.

Mr. COBB. That is provided for in another portion of the bill.

The grading comes under a different heading. This has nothing to do with that, as I understand from those who have this matter in

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 35. So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR MAINTAINING INSTITUTIONS OF CHARITY, REFORMATORIES, AND PRISONS.

For Washington Asylum: For one commissioner and intendant, $1,160; one matron, $600; one visiting physician, $1,200; one resident physician, $480; one overseer, $800; one clerk, $480; one baker, $420; five overseers, at $600 each; one watchman, $300; three watchmen, at $180 each; one driver, $120; one hostler, $60; one cook, $120; two cooks, at $60 each; five nurses, at $60 each; and for contingent expenses, including repairs, provisions, fuel, forage, lumber, shoes, clothing, hardware, dry goods, medicines, and miscellaneous items, $28,500; in all, $38,200.

Mr. HUNTON. I move, in the thirty-eighth line, to strike out "one hundred and sixty," so it will read: "For Washington Asylum: for one commissioner and intendant, $1,000." That was determined upon in the District Committee, and the object was to reduce the pay of this officer to what it was last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane in said District, as provided in sections 4843 and 4844 of the Revised Statutes, $45,000. And hereafter the Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane shall make a report to Congress annually at the beginning of each regular session, which shall show in detail the receipts and expenditures for all purposes connected with the hospital for the fiscal year preceding such

Mr. HUNTON. I move in the sixty-fourth line to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$20,000." And I desire to say in support of the amendment that if there are improper persons in the insane asylum, as the gentleman from Indiana has told us, let these persons who ought not to be there be sent home. I do not think it is right to impose a tax upon the people of this District amounting to such a sum as this for the support of the inmates of the asylum under the circumstances alleged.

Mr. COBB. With respect to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, I wish to say that it is the fault of the District authorities

Virginia, I wish to say that it is the fault of the District authorities if they have too great a proportion of inmates—

Mr. HUNTON. Then, let us correct the authorities.

Mr. COBB. Very well; but you ought not to correct them by reducing the amount necessary for the running expenses of the institution until you have applied the proper correction if you want to make the amendment practical. The committee in preparing this bill sought to establish an equitable principle in this respect between the people of the District and the Government of the United States in this expenditure. The $45,000 herein appropriated is lower by $15,000 than it ought to be so far as the total expenses of running that inthan it ought to be so far as the total expenses of running that in-stitution are concerned as compared with the number of inmates chargeable to the District. The authorities of the District themselves are responsible and are to blame for the increased number of inmates that have been sent from the District, because they control under the law the qualifications necessary for their reception there. A justice of the peace, as I remember, in the first instance under the law is required to proceed to hold an inquisition over the person proposed to be sent there, and I believe finally before admission the District commissioners themselves have to sign a requisition to that effect.

I submit, therefore, that it is neither right nor just to the Government of the United States to compel us to pay for the wrongs, if wrongs have been committed, or if errors have been committed by the District authorities, to any greater extent than we have provided for in the bill, because I say, if we make a fair estimate of the cost of keeping three hundred and fifty-two inmates with the average increase that will come, the amount appropriated is no more than sufficient, and yet the gentlemen ways to strike it down to $20,000 crease that will come, the amount appropriated is no more than sufficient, and yet the gentleman wants to strike it down to $20,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to inquire if the Secretary of the Treasury does not estimate it higher than the committee?

Mr. COBB. The commissioners' estimate is $20,000. Their estimates, under the law, had to go to the Secretary of the Treasury for revision. Under that revision the Secretary of the Treasury fixed the amount the District should pay at $96,480. Dr. Godding, Superintendent of the Insane Asylum, recommended by a letter to the committee that $96,000 should be appropriated; but we found that was too much, and we struck it down to $45,000, which we thought was reasonable and just under all the circumstances. sonable and just under all the circumstances.

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUNTON. I move to strike out the last word, and I only desire to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Indiana. If the District authorities or anybody else have been sending persons to this asylum that ought not to be there let the conduct of the District authorities be corrected, and do not give them an additional appropriation to send persons there who ought not to go there. But the commissioners appeared before our committee and stated that $20.000 was enough. $20,000 was enough.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana says that $45,000 is not more than the proportion the District of Columbia ought to pay toward the support of this people.

Mr. COBB. The District incurs only one-half of the total expense.

Mr. HUNTON. I understand that; but when you come to appropriate from the General Government for this purpose, or any other, if priate from the General Government for this purpose, or any other, it it is too much, I want to join hands with my friend to reduce it. I cannot see the necessity for appropriating for the next fiscal year $45,000 when $17,000 was considered ample for the previous year.

Mr. COBB. Seventeen thousand dollars was never enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his pro forma amendment, I wish to say a word on the pending amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the committee will see fit not to agree to the amendment of my friend from Virginia. He says that the true plan, if the District is having too many persons in this asylum at its expense—

Mr. HUNTON. No; I did not say that; the gentleman from In-

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman will wait until I conclude—I understood the gentleman from Virginia to say if it was true that too many persons from the District were placed in that asylum, the true method was to correct the District officials, and not to make the people of the District suffer for the acts of these officials.

ple of the District suffer for the acts of these officials.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know of no better way of reaching the people and of building up a healthy public sentiment here than by allowing them to feel something of the weight of taxation. It has a good effect. It begets reflection. Why, I remember very well when I was on this committee in the Forty-fourth Congress. On a certain occasion we visited this asylum, which was understood to be for the benefit of the insane of the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps. At that time a distinguished gentleman from Virginia was on the committee from the Senate. Here and there as we went through that building the gentleman met and grasped the hands of many constitbuilding the gentleman met and grasped the hands of many constituents from over the line in his own State. They were put in there by the District authorities. We complained of this and endeavored in consequence to cut down the appropriations for the support of the institution. Year by year, instead of recognizing the rebuke we sought to give it at that time, the number of inmates has been greatly en-larged, and is constantly increasing, until at last they have reached larged, and is constantly increasing, until at last they have reached out to such an extent that they claim even to make a new construction of the law in reference to the inmates who shall be received, and now they are going into the States and gathering up every man who has ever been in the Army or Navy at any time past, and putting him into the asylum. All that, Mr. Chairman, is foreign to the object that this institution had in view, and now the question comes, what shall we do with this proposition? The amount appropriated here is $45,000. My friend from Virginia says we are too high.

Mr. HUNTON. The commissioners say it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The commissioners say we are too high. The Secretary of the Treasury says we are not high enough. This House has been in the habit of gathering this information as to the needs of the been in the habit of gathering this information as to the needs of the Government from the Treasury Department itself; and we are suffi-ciently justified in holding on to this amount. Like my friend from Indiana, [Mr. Cobb.] I think the appropriation has been too low. If you let them understand that for every inmate who goes in there in violation of law, the District of Columbia shall pay half the expense, then there will be reflection, then there will be a check; but until that is thoroughly understood, that the people of this District are to pay one-half of those expenditures, not only for this asylum, but for everything else, we will have those extravagant demands made upon us.

The question being taken on Mr. Hunton's amendment, there were—ayes 15, noes 54.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move to amend by striking out "$45,000" and inserting "$30,000." If my amendment is adopted, that will be an increase of 50 per cent. in this item in one year. We paid $20,000 last year, and if we put on an increase of 50 per cent., making it $30,000, it seems to me that should be sufficient.

Mr. HAYES. In view of what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Clafilm] has stated, I wish to say that the question should not be as to what we appropriated last year, but as to what are the wants of the institution this year. That is what should guide us in making an appropriation of this kind. I wish to know, therefore, from the gentleman from Massachusetts, if there is not a necessity for this appropriation of $45,000 this year, regardless of what we appropriated last year? Do not the men who have investigated this matter and who know the facts say there is a necessity for $45,000 this year

Mr. CLAFLIN. The complaint is the institution is too expensive. I say if it is too expensive the expense should be put upon the nation; and when we come to make an appropriation for the support of the institution, we should not put it on the District of Columbia and allow the whole thing to go in that way as it has done in the past.

Mr. HUNTON. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois I wish to say that the parties who have investigated this thing most carefully, according to my understanding of it, are the District commissioners, and they say this amount is not necessary.

Mr. COBB. I desire to say a single word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

The question being taken on Mr. CLAFLIN's amendment, it was not

Mr. COBB. I offer the following amendment:

In line 63 strike out the word "and," after "4843," and insert after "4844" the words "and 4850;" so that it will read:
"As provided in sections 4843, 4844, and 4850 of the Revised Statutes."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and Mr. Orth having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 5524) to establish post-routes.

The message further informed the House that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint research.

to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) to print extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Reform School: For salaries, fuel, and incidentals, repairs and improvements, and payment by the District of Columbia for support of the boys sent to the school, under act of May 3, 1876, $25,000.

The Clerk also read the following amendment, reported by the Committee on Appropriations:

Insert after the word "incidentals" the word "and," and strike out after the word "repairs" the words "and improvements;" so that it will read:

"For Reform School: For salaries, fuel, and incidentals and repairs, and payment by the District of Columbia," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I send to the desk an amendment to come in at the end of the clause just read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The trustees of said Reform School are authorized to use of the money due them from the trustees of the Freedman's Bank, or from any other source, the sum of $8,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase the remainder of the Peter farm for the use of said school.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say in support of that amendment that there is due to the trustees of this Reform School a sum of money larger than the amount named in the amendment; and it is desired by the trustees that the sum of $8,500 be appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to increase the area of the land belonging to the school. I have a letter from the president of the trustees of the school stating to me it is an important matter that this piece of land should be bought and added to the farm of the Reform School. It was originally a part of the same estate and adjoins this; and if it be not purchased by the school it will be sold to strangers, and a road will have to be made through the land now belonging to the school in order to reach it. This is probably the last opportunity the school will have to purchase that land unless this authority be given to them.

Mr. COBB. I understand the fact to be it will require $50,000 to buy this land. The superintendent of the institution, in his report, asks that we appropriate $50,000 for that purpose. I had a conversation with him on the subject and inferred from what he stated that the $50,000 was to buy the very tract of land which the gentleman from Virginia states can be bought for $8,500. Now, if it cannot be bought for less than $50,000 it seems to me futile to make this appro-

Mr. HUNTON. How much land does the gentleman understand to be embraced in this piece of ground?

Mr. COBB. I understand two hundred acres.

Mr. HUNTON. The quantity is one hundred and sixteen acres, ac-

Mr. COBB. Perhaps the gentleman is right.

Mr. HUNTON. That is my recollection. I have tried to find the letter of the president of the trustees relating to this subject, but have mislaid it.

Mr. COBB. Fifty thousand dollars are asked by the superintendent of the institution for that purpose. In his estimates he claims $111,000 for running the institution, $50,000 of which are to buy this

Mr. HUNTON. How much is due the institution from the Freed-

Mr. HUNTON. How much is due the institution from the Freedman's Bank?

Mr. COBB. I do not know. When the gentleman from Virginia mentioned it, it was the first I had heard of it.

Mr. HUNTON. The letter to me was one asking authority of Congress to appropriate their own money to buy this land.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that I think it would be better not to appropriate this money now. There is nothing in the report of the officers of this institution indicating that this should be done, and this is the first time I have heard of it. I understand that it will take $50,000 to buy this farm.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to ask one question of the gentleman from Virginia.

from Virginia.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well.

Mr. HAYES. I would inquire of the gentleman if he is informed of the amount of land which this school already has?

Mr. HUNTON. I think about one hundred acres.

Mr. COBB. Oh, no; only about twenty acres.
Mr. HUNTON. In the farm now?
Mr. COBB. Not exceeding thirty acres; I think it is twenty. I am sure it is not over thirty.

Mr. HUNTON. Then the more necessity for enlarging the grounds. Mr. HAYES. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment as modified, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The trustees of said Reform School are authorized to use of the money due them from the trustees of the Freedman's Bank, or from any other source, the sum of $8,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase the remainder of the Peter farm for the use of the said school.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Virginia what claim the trustees have upon the Freedman's Bank?

Mr. HUNTON. I understand it is for money of theirs which was deposited in the Freedman's Bank.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it depending upon future settlement?

Mr. HUNTON. It is depending upon dividends already declared or determined to be declared, as I understand.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I would like to ask the gentleman what "other money" there is. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment. amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I am under an impression that there is none other.
Mr. BLOUNT. Then I would ask my friend to strike out the words "or other money."
Mr. HUNTON. If they have any other money they should be allowed to use it.

Mr. BLOUNT. We ought to understand just exactly what that means, "or other money."

Mr. HUNTON. I suppose it does not matter from what source it

Mr. HUNTON. I suppose it does not matter from what source it comes, if there is any other money.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it does matter a great deal, if it is to come out of the general fund for that institution; and that may be the construction put upon this amendment if adopted in its present shape. It might be construed to enable them to take the very money which we are appropriating in this bill in order to purchase this land. With a view to avoid anything of that sort I move to strike out the words "for from any other source." or from any other source."

The amendment of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.
The amendment of Mr. HUNTON, as amended, was then agreed to.
The Clerk read the following:

For Saint Ann's Infant Asylum, $5,000.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move to amend the clause just read by striking out "$5,000" and inserting "$10,000."

Mr. NEAL. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. NEAL. I take the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SHELLEY. Let the point of order be decided by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. NEAL. My point of order is that the proposed amendment raises the appropriation in the bill from $5,000 to $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law that authorizes this appropri-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law that authorizes this appropriation to be made for this purpose?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SHELLEY. This appropriation is asked for by the managers of that institution, not to carry on the institution generally, but for the purpose of discharging a debt with which its building is encumbered. The probability is that after that debt shall have been discharged they will not see the Carry of the probability of the probability of the probability is that after that debt shall have been discharged they will not see the Carry of the probability in the probability in the probability is that after that debt shall have been discharged they will not see the Carry of the probability in the probability in the probability is that after that debt shall have been discharged they will not see the probability in the probability in the probability is that after that debt shall have been discharged they will not seen the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in the probability in the probability in the probability in the probability is the probability in th bered. The probability is that after that debt shall have been discharged they will not come to Congress for any additional appropriations. I understand that by increasing the amount of this appropriation to $10,000 it will enable them to discharge that debt, and then by means of the ordinary charitable contributions and collections the institution will be able to support its inmates.

They have now in that institution from a hundred to one hundred and fifteen or one hundred and twenty infants all the way from three weeks old to five years of age. After arriving at the age of five years they are transferred to another asylum where they are instructed in the rudiments of an education. By increasing this amount to $10,000 we will enable the managers of that institution to get rid of the incumbrance now resting upon their property, and they will no longer be a tax upon the Govern-

The gentleman ought to modify his amendment so as to make it obligatory on the officers of this institution to apply this increased amount to the discharge of the debt.

Mr. SHELLEY. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. HAYES. If we simply give $10,000 they may use it for any purpose whatever.

Mr. SHELLEY. The original indebtedness was about $20,000. We have heretofore appropriated $10,000, and $10,000 more is needed to have heretofore appropriated $10,000, and $10,000 more is needed to discharge this debt.

Mr. COBB. I desire to make a suggestion in regard to this amendment. If my memory serves me right, I had a conversation with the lady controlling this institution, and she asked for only $5,000. I understand $5,000 will be enough, and certainly we should not spend money in this way unnecessarily. This is all a donation. We have no control over the expenditure of this fund. We give it for the purpose of aiding in charity—to enable these associations of charitable people in this city to do more than they could do otherwise.

Mr. HAYES. I will withhold my amendment till this amendment

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me, from the statement of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Sheller,] that this amendment should be adopted on the score of economy. If by increasing the appropriation to $10,000 we can relieve the institution of debt and obviate the necessity of future appropriations it is certainly wise to do so, rather than go on appropriating indefinitely in the future.

Then, on the score of charity, I apprehend that a more charitable institution than this can hardly be conceived. Its inmates are exclusively infants below the age of five years. The institution confines its operations to the care of "waifs" who have neither home nor friends. It does seem to me that no charity on earth can appeal to our sympathies more strongly than this institution. Hence, I submit that this amendment recommends itself to us on the score both of economy and charity.

Mr. NEAL. It is my opinion, founded upon the best information I can obtain, that there is no law authorizing appropriations for any of these charitable institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
Mr. NEAL. I made the point of order that the amendment was not in order because it raised the appropriation. It was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] that the appropriation was in accordance with existing law, which I understand is not the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was overruled, and the gentleman did not take an appeal.

Mr. NEAL. But I suppose that if the Chair was misinformed in regard to the facts he will reverse his ruling, as evidently it was not correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman ought to have appealed from the decision of the Chair. He did not do so. The amendment hav-ing been entertained and discussed the Chair must submit it to a vote of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is my understanding that the existing law provides for appropriations to all these charitable institutions; and I so stated. I may be mistaken in my understanding; but if my friend from Ohio [Mr. Neal.] denies my proposition the onus is upon him to show that the proposition is not authorized by existing law. existing

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not go back to reopen the question of order, but will submit the amendment to the committee.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish only to call attention to the statement of the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr.Cobb] that the par-

Mr. COBB. That is true.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If that is the fact what propriety is there in our adopting an amendment to give them $10,000 instead of

One further remark. My impression is that all these appropria-tions are subject to a point of order; in other words, there is nothing on the statute-book that provides for the establishment of these institutions or for their support by the Government. I did not make the point of order myself, because I have no doubt that this institu-tion and perhaps all the others are admirable charitable institutions. Nor have I any doubt that there are a great many other admirable charitable institutions in this District, as well as all over the country.

As a general rule I do not believe in making appropriations for charitable institutions which are not under the control and direction of the Government, for the reason that the Government cannot super-intend the spending of the money which may be appropriated, or ob-tain a report touching its expenditure. For instance, here in this bill is an appropriation of $5,000 to the Women's Christian Association, an institution designed, I understand, to extend help to destitute females coming into this District—to obtain for them homes and employment. Yet it is the fact that under the law the commissioners have appropriated to them a fund for a like purpose. Now in the one case the expenditure is under the supervision of the law; it is disbursed by officers who are under bond, and who make a report of the In the other case there is nothing of the kind. have no doubt that all these institutions are magnificent charities.

But I do say that if the point of order be not made or sustained upon these appropriations—if it is the sense of the committee (at which I do not grumble) that these appropriations should be made, we at least should not make haste upon our own motion to give any institution 100 per cent. more than it asks for.

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress the managers of this institution came here asking for an appropriation of $20,000 to relieve their establishment from indebtedness incurred in its erection. They could not obtain an appropriation of that amount, the Committee on Appropriations being willing only to give them $5,000. In the second session of the Forty fifth priation of that amount, the Committee on Appropriations being willing only to give them $5,000. In the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress they received an additional appropriation of $5,000. They have been content with appropriations of this amount, knowing that by this process their indebtedness would be paid in the course of time. The object of my amendment is simply to expedite the payment of the debt and relieve the institution from this incubus. The "Sisters" who are appropriate in the handable work of earing fact the sixty of the contract of the contrac who are engaged in the laudable work of caring for these infants feel the annoyance and anxiety imposed upon the m by this debt, and are anxious to be relieved from it. Congress having appropriated already $10,000 for that purpose by two separate appropriations, $5,000 each, I think it is perfectly legitimate and right and equally commendable for Congress to double that appropriation this time to relieve this indebtednes

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I withdraw my formal amendment.
Mr. HAYES. I renew it. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, to an institution of this kind I am willing to vote all the money necessary to carry it on and make it a success, but I want to emphasize the point which was made by my colleague from Illinois, and it ought to be emphasized, because officers of this institution came here and only asked for $5,000. If that is all they asked for, and they are content with that amount, it seems to me to be all we should vote to them. I did propose to offer an amendment, but I retain it in order that a vote may be had on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. If that amendment carries, then I want to offer an amendment I have here making provision that $5,000 of this money shall be appropriated

Mr. SHELLEY. It was intended for that purpose.

Mr. HAYES. I hope the amendment of the gentlemen from Alabama will be voted down. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. SHELLEY's amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Industrial Home, $10,000.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Appropriations recommend after the word "home" to insert the word "school."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES.

For salaries and contingent expenses:
For executive office: For two commissioners, at $5,000 each; one secretary, $2,160; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $1,500; one messenger, $600; one driver, $480; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, $3,000; in all, $20,040.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move in line 102 to strike out "20" and insert "10;" so it will read $10,040." I make this motion, sir, for the purpose of indulging in some general observations about the management of the government of the District of Columbia. I know, as a matter of fact, since the organization of the present District government under commissioners there has been a very large pruning and cutting down of salaried officers, and I am very glad that the Committee on Appropriations have adopted this form of a special bill, thereby bringing to the attention of the country how the money appropriated bringing to the attention of the country how the money appropriated here is expended; and a large number, as it seems to me, of needless officials are still kept in employment in this District.

I have gone over the number of officials in the several departments of the District government employed for the purpose of carrying on the general business of those departments, and I find they number nearly one hundred; more, I undertake to say, than can be found in any city, and I might say, double as many as in any city of the same population in the United States.

Let me ask the Committee on the District of Columbia as well as the Committee on Appropriations why it is necessary we should expend $13,000 for auditing the accounts of the District of Columbia, employing some six, eight, or ten men for that purpose? Go to the State of Georgia, or the State of Virginia, or the State of Missouri, or any other State in this Union where the same business amounts to millions when this amounts to thousands, and you will not find the same number of officials required.

Let me refer to the bill:

For auditor and comptroller's office: For one auditor and comptroller, $3,000; one book-keeper, $1,800; one clerk, $1,600; three clerks, at $1,400 each; one clerk, $1,200; one messenger, $600; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, and miscellaneous items, $600; in all, $13,000.

For auditing what? For auditing the claims against the District of Columbia, amounting all told to $3,000,000, everything included. That is the whole of it. Why all these supernumeraries should be kept up at the expense of this District Government, I cannot understand. I do not believe it is necessary at all. I say there are about one hundred of these officers. Take the attorney's office of the District of Columbia. We have one attorney, one assistant attorney, one special assistant attorney, one clerk, one messenger—those are officers in the District attorney's office provided for by this bill.

Now, this large number of one hundred officials does not include the police force, superintendents of schools, and so on.

Why, you have twenty-one men engaged here in the engineer's de-partment, twenty-one officials paid for by the year in that one depart-

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, these officers are recommended, not only by the commissioners but by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be important to the present operations of the District Government. The Committee on the District of Columbia felt, as my friend has expressed himself, there were too many officers to carry on a small city government, and they had the commissioners before them to see if there could not be a reduction of the number of officers and a consequent reduction of expense. We were informed by those commissioners that they had already made very heavy reductions. In one department alone, the water department I think, twenty-eight inspectors have gone off duty, and there are only three or four now where there were some thirty before. Similar reductions have been made since the form of the District government has been changed.

But I will call the attention of my friend from Missouri to the fact that, in this process of change from one form of government to another, the affairs of the District were found in utter confusion, and the comthe anairs of the District were found in atter confusion, and the committee have assured us and have assured our committee for the next fiscal year, it was next to impossible to get along with fewer officers than are provided for in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask my friend from Virginia—and I appreciate all that he says in reference to this change of government, the new relations it will have to the General Government, the same of this behavior of the same of the same all that-if he does not think this is merely a temporary difficulty, and that we can reduce such organization hereafter?

Mr. HUNTON. Unquestionably. I was coming to that if my friend from Georgia will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not see at the time the drift of his remarks.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, in reference to one single item: that is as to the revisal of assessments. This work has imposed upon the District government an immense amount of labor, so great in fact that the officials who have been engaged in it have been at work night after omicials who have been engaged in to have seen at work hight and required an interpretation of the work connected with this revision has been excessive, and required an immense deal of time and attention.

Mr. BUCKNER. That is these special assessments?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes; the revision of the assessments.

Mr. HUNTON. 1es; the revision of the assessments.

Now, it has been communicated to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I have no doubt the Committee on Appropriations have the same information from the commissioners, that this force now engaged in that work will not be necessary after the next fiscal year, or in other words, that after the next year they can reduce the force from 20 to 25 per cent., and pledge themselves to do it. I trust, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that there will be no interference with the official force of the District for the next fiscal year at all events for therefore, Mr. Chairman, that there will be no interference with the official force of the District for the next fiscal year at all events, for these persons are all needed to perform the work at present.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. HAYES. I want to vote understandingly on this subject. I perceive on pages 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, there are very large amounts appropriated. What I want to get at is whether the United States is to pay this whole amount or whether one-half of it comes out of the District? the District?

Mr. HUNTON. Of course the amount that we appropriate is only one-half of the total. The remainder is paid by the District.

I was going to say another thing, and I think the Appropriation Committee have followed the District Committee in that particular, that we have increased scarcely an officer or a salary, if indeed any increase at all has been made.

Mr. WARNER. That is a question I wanted to ask in this connection as to these officers, provided for in the first place by law, whether the salaries are governed by law?

Mr. HUNTON. There is no increase in the salaries or any of these

Mr. WARNER. But are the salaries fixed by the Appropriation Committee or by the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to say this—
The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.
Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking if the gentleman from Missouri might not be answered to some extent by stating that the comparison he has made would apply to other branches of the Government as well as this. I confess there to other branches of the Government as well as this. I confess there seems to be some reason for it. I have no doubt there is much truth in the suggestion he made, and that if we could get at the bottom facts as to the necessity for these various officers it would be found that not only in the District of Columbia, but in every other department of this Government, without exception, from alpha to omega, every single one of them has a larger percentage of force employed to-day than is really needed. I believe this to be a fact, and that a large percentage of the force could be cut down without impairing the efficiency of the service. I have no doubt that if section 162 was observed we could cut down 25 per cent. of the force in all the departments. But section 162 is not observed in one single department of this Government and never has been. of this Government and never has been,

Mr. NEAL. And never will be.
Mr. ATKINS. No; it never will be, and it should be repealed or the department authorities be rigidly held to it in the administration of the Departments.

Mr. HUNTON. Wait till we get a democratic administration.

Mr. ATKINS. Well, I never talk politics. [Laughter.] What I

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to know whether I am going to have a chance to say something about this matter?

Mr. ATKINS. My friend is a young man yet and can afford to wait.

Mr. ATKINS.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT. I have been waiting for a long time.

Mr. ATKINS. Then my friend can afford to wait a few moments longer. Some apology given for this particular matter, which the gentleman from Missouri criticises, is this: that the municipal government as well as I may say the territorial relations the District of Columbia sustains, not only as the city of Washington in its municipal capacity, but in its relation as a territory, or a corporation, or whatever it may be called to the Government—I say in these two relations it requires perhaps more force to run it than it would to run a city belonging to a State governed by State laws and operating under the ordinary circumstances attaching to it as such.

For a city which is under State laws has certain State officers, but this District must provide its own municipal arrangements, and also bear its territorial relations to the Government of the United States besides.

Mr. BUCKNER. Even under the circumstances that the gentle-man states, I do not see any necessity for these six or seven officers

Mr. ATKINS. I really think that the criticism of the gentleman from Missouri is a good one, and I find no fault with it. The gentleman from Virginia has given some explanation, but I hope that some other explanation more favorable will be derived in future from the action of this bill than has been received up to this time. There has not yet been much to justify it here; but there is no objection at present if it shall come in hereafter.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As I understand it there is no "last word," the amendment having been withdrawn.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there is no use in disguising the fact that this bill is one of monstrosities in the way of appropriations of money. I notice here with reference to the attorney's department it provides for one attorney, $4,000, one assistant attorney at $1,900, a special assistant attorney at $960, and a clerk at $960, as well as a messenger at $192, making, with the rent of the office and some contingent expenses, the sum of $9,000 that they wish to appropriate for the purpose of employing legal counsel. Now, sir, I say it is monstrous to talk about putting such things as that on the Government.

Let me refer to another item. Here is an item for "repairs of

Let me refer to another item. Here is an item for "repairs of pumps." That I suppose refers to those old wooden pumps around the streets. It appropriates for that item the sum of $3,000. Is not that monstrous? Here is another item: For the removal of garbage, $10,300. Now, I know there is a great deal of filth, but three thousand dollars ought to be enough for the removal of that filth, or one thousand in fact.

Mr. Chairman, you may take up this bill from the beginning to the end and there are salaries appropriated and offices created there that are unknown in any other city of the size of Washington in the United

Mr. KITCHIN. Is that any greater monstrosity than your tariff on steel rails? [Laughter.]

teel rails? [Laughter.]
Mr. WRIGHT. That is not a matter that is involved in this discussion. If the design of a question of that sort is to divert attention cussion. If the design of a question of that sort is to divert attention from or for the purpose of covering up a great cheat or a great fraud, then the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] may have the benefit of it. What I contend is that where money is appropriated out of the Treasury in making the appropriations we ought to have some reference to economy. I do not charge upon the gentlemen who have this bill in charge that they want to pay for extravagance; but I do say a more extravagant bill than the one presented for consideration have sould not well have been got up or presented to this body. ation here could not well have been got up or presented to this body— $8,000 for attorneys' fees, $10,000 for removing garbage, $3,000 for re-pairing old wooden pumps! I only refer to these as glaring instances. But take the bill—Mr. Chairman, do not let that hammer fall yet— take the bill as it is from beginning to end and I do assure this com-mittee that it is marked not only by extravagance but by extravagance of the very worst kind.

gance of the very worst kind.

Mr. HATCH was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. WRIGHT. Ithank the gentleman from Missouri for his courtesy.

Generally in my votes in this House I have been disposed to be liberal in my views with regard to appropriations. I do not want to be called a parsimonious man. I want to be liberal. I want to give to the people generally, and especially to the people of this city, what they ought to have. But I do not think it is my duty as a Representative to vote for an appropriation so immense in its proportions as that which is contained in this bill. It ought to be cut down.

I do not suppose that this city will ever see the time when it can walk alone; that it will ever get out of its condition of infancy so as to alone; that it will ever get out of its condition of infancy so as to support itself. But when the Government of the United States comes to its support and offers to pay half of the expenses of the city then they ought to be satisfied and not place upon us the support of men who are out of employment and require us to put them in a position to be fed and clothed out of the Treasury. It is wrong in every respect and we ought not to vote these sums that are presented for our consideration.

Why, sir, in this item of charities which I have footed up there are $71,000 appropriated in this bill for that purpose. We had better take care of some of our own poor at home instead of putting our hands into the national Treasury to maintain charities for the support of people here.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will pardon me, I wish to say that he knows just as much about the appropriations for charities in this bill as he knows about everything else he has been talking about. There is twice that amount for charities in the bill. But if the gentleman would look at the number of institutions of charity in this city he would think $71,000 a small sum to be given for their support.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have footed up the items and I know that the items under the head of charities in this bill that we now have under consideration amount to $71,000. I am not mistaken about it. I do not include the Reform School and several other institutions of that class. But there are eight or nine items in this bill under the head of charities which foot up $71,000.

I suppose there is occasion perhaps for pretty liberal legislation upon our part in order to provide help for the necessitous people in this District; men who come here and get office and when they are thrown out of office in consequence of the change of administration, or otherwise, stay here and are a charge for the rest of their lives upon the city authorities or the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. NEAL. As a member of the sub-committee of the Committee on the District of Columbia having in charge this bill I gave it a the District of Columbia having in charge this bill I gave to a very careful examination and so far as it was possible we reduced the expenditures to the very lowest possible limit.

It should be borne in mind by the committee that we have here a twofold form of government. In the first place there is a government analogous to the State governments and in the second place there is a government analogous to the city governments; and both these forms are provided in this bill.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the treasurer's office might be dispensed with and should I be a member of the District Committee at the next session of Congress it will certainly be my object to simplify the administration of the government in such a way as to diswith that office.

Mr. HUNTON. But my friend from Ohio will bear in mind, as I know he will, that if that office was abolished it would not diminish the number of offices, because one man is now assessor and treasurer.

Mr. NEAL. It might not diminish the number of offices, but it would reduce the salaries somewhat.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] has called the attention of the committee to the appropriations made for the attorney's office. Why, Mr. Chairman, that is an office as cheaply run as any office in the District of Columbia. There are hundreds of suits brought against the District annually for special assessments, for damages, and for enjoining the collection of taxes, which make the duties of the attorney very onerous in their character. In one suit—I allude to the Strong case—which has been decided in favor of the District within the last two months, if the District had been com-District within the last two months, if the District had been com-

District within the last two months, if the District had been compelled to employ special counsel it would have paid not less than $10,000 to the attorneys for defending that suit alone. And if special counsel were hired in every suit brought against the District of Columbia the attorneys' fees would not be less than $50,000.

I say, therefore, to the committee, that while this may seem to be a large and perhaps extravagant appropriation for the ordinary expenses of the government, they must bear in mind the twofold form of government which the District has; and that the Committee on the District of Columbia have resorted to every means to reduce expenditures, and have not been able to do it any lower than has been done in this bill.

Mr. RUCKNER. I am anthorized by the gentleman from Penn-done in this bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. I am authorized by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that the District of Columbia occupies a peculiar position in its relations to the Federal Government. It does not have exactly the form of a State government, yet the functions of a State government are lodged, so far as the District is concerned, with the Federal Government. Necessarily everything which relates to the government of the District must find its origin in the two Houses of Congress. There is not a State Legislature which does not appropriate money for the support of its insane, for the support of Houses of Congress. There is not a State Legislature which does not appropriate money for the support of its insane, for the support of its deaf and dumb, for the support of its blind. There is not a State, hardly a county, that has not its poor-house. The charities of this District must depend entirely upon the liberality of Congress. Therefore it is, in my judgment, that when you compare these appropriations with the amount of private charities bestowed by the citizens of this District they will not be found to be excessive.

There is hardly any gentleman here who will not believe that I

There is hardly any gentleman here who will not believe that I have always favored and advocated economical appropriations. Yet, when I occupied the position of chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I never found it good policy or expedient to cut down the appropriations for charities, or the appropriations in behalf of science. I was ready to cut down appropriations in every other direction. If you wish to reduce the aggregate of appropriations, my judgment is that you ought to do it by reducing the number of needless employés under the Government and within the District of Columbia, and not by reducing your appropriations for charities, but keep them at what they are.

The truth is, these charitable institutions in this District, unless The truth is, these charitable institutions in this District, unless the Federal Government itself rendered them aid, would fail absolutely of their purpose. The population of this District is not large enough to keep them up by private charity; that is, the population possessing means. The population of this District is made up in a great part of people who are employed by the Government, and who live upon yearly salaries, and cannot in justice to themselves and their families contribute much to charities. I therefore differ entirely with my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT,] if I understood his remarks correctly, as condemning the appropriations for charities contained in this bill. Those appropriations are not larger than they have heretofore been for that purpose, perhaps not so large; and they are essential to the well-being of the people of this District.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask my friend, the Speaker, if he can tell the rate of taxation in this city as compared with the rate of taxation in Philadelphia, New York, and other cities? It is not one-

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The taxation in this District is enormous, and grows out of the extravagant expenditures which were made during the few years of the rule which prevailed here not long since. I do not want to condemn anybody, but the fact is that there was an effort made on the part of the then government of the District, known as the board of public works, to do in one year what ought to have been done in five or six years. That government undertook to cut streets in every direction, and almost confiscated property to pay for improvements. As I have said before, they fastened upon the people of this District a debt which they can ill afford to bear.

I have nothing to say in regard to the municipal government of my own city; it has nothing to do with the question before the House.

Mr. COX. My friend [the Speaker] misapprehends the tenor of my

Mr. COX. My friend [the Speaker] misapprehends the tenor of my question. I hold that the rate of taxation in this city, on the inhabitants thereof, is comparatively low compared with that of Philadelphia, New York, and other places.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) But the Government pays one-half of the expenses of the District.

Mr. COX. The Government should have to pay only that portion

Mr. COX. The Government should have to pay only that portion indispensable for the transaction of Federal business.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) You cannot escape from the law and from the past practice of the Government.

Mr. COX. I know the law, and therefore I am consistent. I think my friend [the Speaker] ought to assist me in reducing that proportion.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have opposed many laws before they were passed; but when they have become laws I am bound to which but them. abide by them.

Mr. COX. And I would repeal bad laws. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I withdraw the amendment.
Mr. BUCKNER. I renew the amendment. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] as a justification for the large number of officials we are paying for in this District, speaks of the necessity for them in the vast amount of work growing out of these special asse ments. I admit that to some extent he is correct. But there are not only the eight officers provided for in the comptroller's office for the purpose of auditing the accounts of the District of Columbia but there is the "old records division," with two clerks, and the "special-assessments division," with three or four more.

The point I made was, and no gentleman has attempted to answer it, that all these officers are not needed for the purpose of auditing the demands against the District of Columbia, amounting at the outside to about $3,000,000, and $1,100,000 of that is interest on the debt; so you may say there are demands against the District to be audited not exceeding $2,000,000 or $2,200,000. I say there can be no necessity for the employment of this large force. The peculiar relation of the District to the Government of the United States and to the people can furnish no justification for it. I am not complaining of anybody because—

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend will indicate what offices may be abolished. I would like to vote with him for an amendment of that kind. I agree with him that there are too many of these officers; but it was not the duty of the Appropriations Committee to reorganize the District government.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not know how many of these offices can be abolished. The District commissioners, I am informed, say that none can be abolished at present.

Mr. BLOUNT. In the absence of definite information upon the subject, I was willing to wait another year and let the Committee on the District of Columbia suggest reductions in this respect.

Mr. BUCKNER. Allow me to say a word on the subject of taxation in this District. I undertake to say that the rate of taxation paid here is less than in any other city of the same size in the United States. One and a half per cent. upon all the property of the District is the entire amount of tax levied. There is no city of the same size in the United States where the rate does not run up to 2 or 3 per cent. or more. In Chicago and Saint Louis the rate is considerably higher than here; in Philadelphia it is 3 per cent., in New York probably 4. Yet the people of this District are complaining of the burden of taxation. In view of the immense debt—$23,000,000—resting upon this city, I think it was right for the Government to assume ing upon this city, I think it was right for the Government to assume a certain proportion of the expenses of the District; but the proportion ought not to have been so much as 50 per cent. We ought to relieve the people by cutting down some of these expenses.

Mr. COBB. It is hardly necessary for us to have any contest over these officers, unless it be in regard to the salaries paid to them. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] will give me his attention, I can explain why these officers are provided for in the bill. It is because they are provided for by existing law. Hence it was the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to report provisions for their payment.

their payment.

Let me add one remark. The gentleman from Missouri, if I remember correctly, was, in the Forty-fourth Congress, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, whose duty it is, whenever reforms in District affairs may be necessary, to introduce bills here and urge their passage. These offices have not been created here and urge their passage. These offices have not been created since the gentleman from Missouri occupied that position. The Committee on Appropriations have not in this bill created any office. The law provides for all these offices; and there are fewer now than four years ago. Besides, they receive less pay to-day than they did four years ago. These offices being provided for by law, the Committee on Appropriations did not feel justified in going outside of the law and proposing to abolish these positions, a measure which gentlemen here would have objected to. We have reported these appropriations in pursuance of law; and unless the gentleman from Missouri can show that some of these offices are unnecessary and ought to be abolished, it occurs to me that no complaint can be made against this

Mr. BUCKNER. I withdraw the formal amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of sites (when necessary) and the erection and completion of three school buildings, $100,000, to be apportioned as follows, namely: For the second school division, $45,000; for the sixth school division, (county.) $10,000; for the seventh school division, $45,000; amounting in all, for school purposes, to $504,834.80.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move to amend by inserting in the paragraph just read, after the words "one hundred thousand dollars," these words: "provided that they shall be contracted for before the 1st of next September, and finished before the 1st of May, 1881."

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that we provided last year for the erection of two school-houses. One only was contracted for before the assembling of Congress, the other is hardly under way yet. If we are now to appropriate for the erection of three school-houses, I think we ought to make provision that the attention of the commissioners may be promptly brought to the matter, so that the schoolhouses may be promptly brought to the matter, so that the school-houses may be erected during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman will modify his amendment by striking out "May" and inserting "July," so as to provide that the buildings shall be completed within the next fiscal year, his amendment will, I think, be eminently proper.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I modify my amendment as suggested by the gen-

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Metropolitan police:
For 1 major and superintendent, $2,610; 1 captain, $1,800; 1 property-clerk, $1,800; 1 clerk, $1,500; 3 surgeons, at $450 each; 6 detectives, at $1,320 each; 10 lieutenants, at $1,200 each; 20 sergeants, at $1,140 each; 7 acting sergeants, at $1,000 each; 120 privates, class two, at $1,080 each; 16 station-keepers, at $516 each; 8 laborers, at $420 each; 3 telephone operators, at $780 each; 1 messenger, $900; 1 messenger, $360; 1 major and superintendent, mounted, $360; 1 captain, mounted, $240; 50 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; 1 inspector of licenses, $1,095; 2 drivers, at $300 each; 1 ambulance driver, $600; rent of police-station houses and police headquarters, $5,960; for fuel, $1,500; repairs to station-houses, $1,500; miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, books, telegraphing, printing, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, and detection of crime, and repairs to van, $6,460; in all, $300,120.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to amend by striking out "seventy-three" and inserting "one hundred and twenty-five," so as to provide for one hundred and twenty-five privates, class 1, of the Metropolitan police,

I desire to inquire whether the police force is in-Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. HUNTON. That is the object of the amendment, as I was about

Mr. McMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on the amendment.
Mr. HUNTON. I hope no point of order will be made upon a proposition like this. No man can read the daily papers of this city without absolute knowledge of the fact that an increase of the Metropol-make a point of order? It so, it ought to be made at once and decided before the debate proceeds.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was willing to hear the gentleman's statement; but if I must make the point of order now, I do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it, with his reasons.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that the amendment changes existing law, and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will show the contribution of the Materiality of the state of existing law providing for the number of these Metropolitan police.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point more readily because I happen to remember there is a bill pending for the purpose, and when it comes up on its merits it can receive that discussion and consideration which a measure ought to receive appropriating the amount of money this will require.

The CHAIRMAN. As there is a pending bill on the same subject before the House the point of order is good and the Chair sustains it and rules the amendment out.

Mr. FINLEY. I move, in lines 379 and 380, to add the words "when employed;" so it will read: "two bailiffs, at $3 per day each, when employed."

Mr. HAYES. We have long since passed that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only go back by unanimous con-

Mr. NEAL. And I object. The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

For 1 health officer, $3,000; 6 sanitary inspectors, at $1,200 each; 2 food inspectors, at $1,200 each; for clerks, $7,000; 1 messenger, $480; 1 poundmaster, $1,000; and for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, laborers under poundmaster, repairs to pound, and wagon and horse for poundmaster, meat for dogs, disinfectants, and miscellanous items, $3,860; in all, $24,940.

Mr. HUNTON. I move, in line 420, where it reads "one pound-master, $1,000," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,200." I remember when this matter was before the District Committee the health officer, Dr. Townshend, a most excellent and efficient officer, came before us and satisfied us this poundmaster ought to have $1,200 a year, and we so reported to the Appropriations Committee. We thought it proper to give that officer $1,200 a year, as he has not only to furnish his own services but a horse at his own expense. The duty of a poundmaster here, as explained to us by Dr. Townshend, is quite onerous.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Interest and sinking fund:
For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, including $2,400 interest on the Linthicum Institute loan, and $90 outstanding coupons upon the city of Washington ten-year 6 per cent. loan, under act of Congress approved July 27, 1868, $1,155,583.55.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Appropriations recommend an amendment striking out, in line 428, after the word "debt," down to the word "one" in line 433. The words stricken out are:

Including $2,400 interest on the Linthicum Institute loan, and $90 outstanding coupons upon the city of Washington ten-year 6 per cent. loan, under act of Congress approved July 27, 1868.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I move, in line 426, to add $200, made necessary by the amendment adopted in committee increasing the salary of the poundmaster from $1,000 to $1,200 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCOOK. I was about to say, while I do not object to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, I think the gentleman having charge of the bill should explain to the committee the reason

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been agreed to, and it is too late to go back and discuss an amendment already adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general contingent expenses of the District of Columbia not otherwise suffi-ciently provided for, (including not exceeding $7,500 for pay of temporary employés,) $20,000.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to strike out that paragraph in order gentlemen may explain why it is that after having provided in this bill for all possible contingencies, pay of all the employés in the District, schools, health department, interest on the sinking fund, courts, marschools, health department, interest on the sinking fund, courts, markets, and everything else—and that liberally—why it is there should be added this omnibus clause for contingent expenses not otherwise provided for, including $7,500 for pay of temporary employés. I do not think it is proper in an appropriation bill to put in a general sum in that way. Such bill should provide specifically for every known appropriation. Probably the gentleman in charge of this bill can tell the committee now what it is expected this sum of money may be used for. If there is a reasonable excuse for putting this in, I shall with pleasure, withdraw my amendment.

shall, with pleasure, withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I move a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and that is to strike out "$20,000" and, in lieu thereof, insert "$30,000." Instead of striking out the contingent fund, I want it increased, and I will give my reasons for it.

The District Committee, which had this matter under consideration by the contract of the amendment.

by the courtesy of the Appropriations Committee, recommended a general contingent fund to be appropriated of $50,000. And why? There are contingencies arising in this District which cannot be provided for by special appropriation. A riot takes place in this city, and it costs money to subdue it, and there is no money in the Treasury out of which it can be paid. The small-pox breaks out in the city, or any other contagious disease, and it takes money to suppress it, and there is no money in the Treasury out of which the expense of suppression can be paid. I will say to the committee, when the small-pox became epidemic last fall, without the assistance of the National Board of Health the health department of this District would have been powerless to have kept that disease within proper bounds. reason for that was they had no contingent fund out of which they could pay the expenses of the necessary appliances to suppress the disease in the District.

There are many cases that might arise when this fund would be There are many cases that might arise when this rund would be absolutely necessary. For instance, one of the bridges that crosses Rock Creek from here to Georgetown might fall in. There is no contingent fund out of which that could be repaired or such an accident provided against if it was threatening. We all know in a recent case in the city the sewer which passes through the botanical grounds fell in, and that there was no contingent fund out of which it could be repaired; and the sole object of this appropriation is to cover just such emergencies as I have related. My friend says that contingent such emergencies as I have related. My friend says that contingent funds have been appropriated for each department of the city government. But those funds which are so provided are to be used for different cases other than are contemplated in this section. The contingencies there are enumerated specifically and confined to the enumerated items in the deficiency which might arise; but here is a general fund at the control and under the disposal of the District commissioners to meet such emergencies as I have specified. I trust that the committee instead of striking out the fund will agree to increase it.

Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. COBB. I move to strike out the last word.
Mr. FINLEY. There is an amendment pending, a substitute for my amendment, as I understand.

Mr. BAYNE. There can be an amendment pending at the same

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, so far as this appropriation is concerned I have no special interest in it at all. I will state this, however, that the estimate of the board of commissioners was $50,000. We struck down $30,000 of that, leaving $20,000 to stand as the contingent fund.

Now, they gave as the reasons for this the very reasons assigned by my friend, the gentleman from Virginia. I am inclined to think that my friend, the gentleman from Virginia. I am inclined to think that $20,000 is very much; and as far as I am individually concerned I should have made it only $10,000. But after a conference with the commissioners and hearing their views on the subject it occurred to me that there might be just such emergencies as the gentleman has specified; for instance, an epidemic, a riot, the destruction of a bridge, or something that would require immediate attention. But I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to legislate in advance to meet such emergencies as might arise, and I am perfectly willing if the Committee of the Whole feels so disposed to strike out this amount and insert $10,000.

Now, so far as the bridges to which the gentleman from Virginia has alluded are concerned, it will be found that we have provided for that in another portion of the bill; for instance, we provided $6,000 to repair M street bridge, over which we have to cross in going to

Mr. HUNTON. But that provision was only made after the bridge had become unsafe. There was no appropriation to meet that dif-ficulty before it occurred or while it threatened.

Mr. COBB. That is true.

Mr. HUNTON. But when the bridge gave way or threatened to cave in, then the appropriation was made and used.

Mr. McCOOK. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if the appropriation last year for contingencies has been exhausted?

Mr. COBB. I presume so. I think it was.

Mr. McCOOK. Is the gentleman from Indiana able to give any of the large items for which that fund was used, or the general character of the items?

ter of the items?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir; of course a statement was made showing the items; but if Congress was to appropriate $10,000, or $20,000, or any amount, it would be all expended.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman think that if the Government gave $100,000 it would be all expended?

Mr. COBB. I think it very likely, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg leave, Mr. Chairman, to draw the attention of my friend from Indiana for a moment to the fact that of this $20,000, $7,500 of it is for the payment of temporary employés if needed, leaving, therefore, only $12,500 for the contingent fund.

Mr. COBB. That is true, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but I wish briefly to call attention to the fact that this bill has made very liberal appropriations for the District of Co-

the committee, but I wish briefly to call attention to the fact that this bill has made very liberal appropriations for the District of Columbia in every one of its departments, and now it proposes at the close to insert an item of $20,000 to be used for contingent expenses. This is no appropriation for a specific purpose. Nothing is mentioned in it excepting that a small portion of it may be used, if necessary, for the pay of additional employés.

This is simply "pin money," contingent money, that may be used for emergencies or contingencies that are to come hereafter. When I ask gentlemen the reason for it, I am told that the small-pox might break out here and require an extraordingry expenditure of money.

break out here and require an extraordinary expenditure of money that a bridge might break down, or something of that kind, that shall require the use of this fund.

But I call gentlemen's attention, in reply to that argument, to the fact that in every branch of this government for the District this bill contains items for contingent expenses not enumerated specifically in the bill. For instance, in the "health department" there is provided for miscellaneous items the sum of $3,860. Under the head of "miscellaneous expenses" there is a provision for miscellaneous items, not otherwise provided for, of $6,798.07. In the item for courts there is a contingent fund appropriated is a contingent fund appropriated—
Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to interrupt him for a question ?

Mr. FINLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman has referred to the health department. Now, the contingent expenses under the health department are specified as—

Including books, stationery, fuel, rent, laborers under poundmaster, repairs to pound, and wagon and horse for poundmaster, meat for dogs, disinfectants, and miscellaneous items.

Mr. FINLEY. That is it; that is exactly the point I am making—the "miscellaneous items."

Mr. HUNTON. Does the gentleman from Ohio mean to say that the miscellaneous items mean any such expenses as I have enumerated?

Mr. CLAFLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. FINLEY. Not now. I want to answer the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.] Suppose a case arises of the kind spoken of by the gentleman from Virginia; suppose small-pox breaks out, will he say that this $3,800 cannot be used by the health department for

Mr. HUNTON. It is a small amount for those things that are enu-

Mr. HUNTON. It is a small amount for those things that are enumerated, and must be spent for those contingencies.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that. But as we go through the bill, in addition to the liberal appropriations made everywhere we always find a sum of money for contingent or miscellaneous purposes. And I have my doubts whether there is any necessity for making this appropriation in any way. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLARUN] appropriation in any way. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CLAFLIN.]

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move to strike out the last word.

I think it must be apparent to every member of the House that in a great city like this, expending annually three and a half million dollars, you should have a contingent fund of at least I per cent.; and even if increased as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] has asked, the amount here appropriated for contingencies is not I

You will remember last year there was an execution against the city, which was quite unexpected, amounting to $10,000. There are things that nobody can provide for in a general bill. You have three commissioners there under bonds, and not only that, but they must go to jail if they violate the law. They cannot take money from any contingent fund and put it to other uses. Cannot you trust these men, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, to use a contingent fund of $30,000 or $40,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he proposes to provide for judgments out of the contingent

Mr. CLAFLIN. No; I do not propose to provide for judgments out of the contingent fund; but I propose to provide for damages; and if the damages had been taken care of at the proper time in the case I have referred to, no judgment of $10,000 would ever have been obtained against the District. I propose to put it in the power of the commissioners to take care of the broken bridges and bad highways of the city.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] will stand to his amendment and that the committee will stand by will stand to his amendment and that the committee will stand by him. I think that the theory in regard to the appropriations of money for this government and every department of it should be to appropriate specifically. Corruption and ruin overtake any community that long pursues any other course. To say there have not been contingencies provided for in this bill is to ignore every paragraph over which we have passed. I desire to read two or three lines of the bill for the pursues of the pursues bill for the purpose of showing to members how minute the committee has been in making appropriations for contingent purposes. I read from the paragraph appropriating for the health department:

And for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, laborers under poundmaster, repairs to pound, and wagon and horse for poundmaster, meat

In all, $3,800. Men stand upon this floor and in one breath complain that children are starving in this District, and in the next hour make appropriations to feed the dogs. "Meat for dogs!" Whether to be fed to-

Mongrel, puppy, whelp, or hound, Or cur of low degree—

we are not told. But certain it is, that under the head of contingent we are not told. But certain it is, that finder the head of contingent appropriations we make an appropriation for that feeding of the dogs. Then, after going into these minutiæ, after thus going to every department and appropriating contingencies for every purpose, not being able to get enough out of the Treasury, we appropriate as an omnibus measure $3,800 more for general contingent expenses.

The gentleman from Massachusetts has told us that the magnitude of the city is such as the warrant this appropriation for extinces.

of the city is such as to warrant this appropriation for contingent expenses. I say, Mr. Chairman, the way to make a city great and to keep it great is to make no useless appropriation.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I withdraw the proferma amendment.

Mr. HAYES. I renew it. I want to say just this: that I think we ought to approach a measure of this kind with all the common sense we can bring to hear upon it and cought not to be redical expectation. we can bring to bear upon it, and ought not to be radical on either side. In regard to making an appropriation of this kind I think we ought to make as large an appropriation as is necessary. I do not think it is wise to go as far as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] suggested. I do not think it is best to get up a lot of imaginary ills. It is true some of the evils the gentleman from Virginia has suggested may hefall this District. may befall this District.

Mr. HUNTON. They have befallen it. Two of them befell it last

Mr. HAYES. Perhaps not more than two of them would befall the District next year; and in my estimation the amount recommended by the Committee on Appropriations of $20,000 is amply sufficient.

I do not think it the part of wisdom to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Finley] to strike out this clause entirely; nor do I think it would be the part of wisdom to cut the appropriation down to $10,000. My impression is from what I know of the wants and needs of the District in this regard $20,000 is about the amount that ought to be appropriated. I hope the section will be allowed to stand as it is. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HAYES. I withdraw the proforma amendment.

The opestion was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. HUNTON.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. Hunton to increase the appropriation to $30,000; and upon a division—ayes 21, noes not counted—it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. Finley to strike out the paragraph. Mr. FINLEY. I will modify my motion, so as to amend the clause by reducing the amount to $10,000.

The amendment of Mr. Finley was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as fol-

Sec. 2. That all moneys appropriated by this act shall be deposited to the credit of the District of Columbia in the Treasury of the United States, as required by the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1878, and shall be drawn therefrom only on requisition of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, such requisition specifying the appropriation upon which the same is drawn; and in no case shall such appropriation be exceeded either in requisition or expenditure, and the accounts for all disbursements shall be made monthly to the accounting officer of the Treasury by the auditor of the District of Columbia, on vouchers certified by the commissioners of said District, as now required by law: Provided, That said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during said fiscal year than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues of said District.

Mr. HUNTON. I notice that this section makes a change in the organic act of the District; and for the purpose of eliciting the object of that change I move to strike out the words "District of Columbia," where they first occur in the section, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Treasurer of the United States;" so that the section will read:

That all moneys appropriated by this act shall be deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in the Treasury of the United States, &c.

In the organic act which passed June 11, 1878, I find this provision:

That all moneys appropriated by this act, together with all revenues of the District of Columbia from taxes or otherwise, shall be deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in the Treasury, &c.

Treasurer of the United States in the Treasury, &c.

Now, this bill requires that "all moneys appropriated by this act shall be deposited to the credit of the District of Columbia in the Treasury of the United States, as required by the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1878," &c. The provisions of the act referred to require the money to be deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. COBB. I have a substitute which I propose to offer for this section, which I think will cover the point raised by the gentleman from

Virginia, [Mr. Hunton.]

Mr. HUNTON. I would inquire of the gentleman if it was his purpose in framing this section of the bill to change the organic act?

Mr. COBB. That was my purpose, but upon a more thorough examination of the subject I came to the conclusion that I had made a mistake; I could not see that I had improved it, and perhaps I had injured it. For that reason I now offer a substitute for the entire section, which, I think, will cover the point suggested by the gentle-

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

That all moneys appropriated by this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as required by the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1878, and shall be drawn therefrom only on requisition of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, except that all moneys appropriated for interest and the sinking fund shall be drawn therefrom only on the requisition of the Treasurer of the United States, such requisition specifying the appropriation upon which the same is drawn; and in no case shall such appropriation be exceeded either in requisition or expenditure, and the accounts for all disbursements of the commissioners of the said District shall be made monthly to the accounting officer of the Treasury by the auditor of the District of Columbia, on vonchers certified by the commissioners of said District, as now required by law: Provided, That said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during said fiscal year than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues of said District.

Mr. COBB. That I think covers the point suggested by the gen-

Mr. COBB. That I think covers the point suggested by the gentleman from Virginia. I have framed this substitute under the advice of one of the clerks in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say that the present law has been well considered and adopted by Congress.

Mr. COBB. I know that.

Mr. BLOUNT. It occurs to me that it would be much better for the Committee on Appropriations not to recommend any change in the existing law.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will suggest that there is a conflict between the District commissioners and the Treasury Department, especially in reference to the sinking fund, in regard to what the law does mean. The Attorney-General has put one construction on the law and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department have put another construction on it; and by that means the Department is embarrassed. I have endeavored to remove that doubt by giving to these officers what I conceived to be the very duties they ought to have in order to protect the fund.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as that difficulty is concerned, it would be very easy for the Committee on the District of Columbia to bring in a bill which will correct it. In my judgment it is much better to allow the law to stand as it is until the District Committee shall bring in a bill to correct whatever difficulty there may be. I do not say that the substitute here proposed is not right.

Mr. COBB. I think the last appropriation bill contained what was intended to mean just what the substitute I have proposed means. The law is very indefinite. If you take the last section of the sunday in the law is very indefinite.

dry civil bill which made appropriations for the District of Columbia it will be found to differ from the language of the law. I have endeavored to clear up the difficulty by drawing my substitute in such a form that there can be no doubt of its meaning, either on the part of the commissioners of the District of Columbia or of the Treasury Department; and I think I have succeeded.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand the gentleman to say that this is approved by the committee.

Mr. COBB. I did not say that the committee had seen it. I offered it myself.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to an omission which may or may not be important. The organic act provides "that all moneys appropriated under this act, together with all revenues of the District from taxation or otherwise," &c. Now, the omission of the words "together with all revenues of the District from taxation or otherwise" may be important. I suggest that those words be inserted in the substitute.

Mr. COBB. My substitute relates to the appropriations made by this bill. The provision contained in the first paragraph of the bill is:

That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON. Still, the appropriation of money may mean that portion of money appropriated by the Federal Government. Hence, it seems to me better to adhere to the original phraseology.

Mr. COBB. But if the gentleman will look at the remainder of my substitute he will see that it provides just how each half shall be drawn upon when in the Treasury.

Mr. HUNTON. I understand that; but I want to arrive at a proper understanding as to what is to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States Mr. COBB.

Mr. COBB. The revenues arising from District taxation.
Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman does not say so in his substitute.
He says "all moneys appropriated," and stops there.

Mr. COBB. But we appropriate also the revenues of the District.
Mr. HUNTON. I propose to insert the words, "and all other moneys arising from taxes," &c., following the language of the original statute.

Mr. COBB. Very well; I do not object. It would certainly be safe to put that in.

Mr. HUNTON. Now, in regard to the other matter I will say that the controversy between the commissioners of the District and the the controversy between the commissioners of the District and the Treasury Department is how money shall be drawn.

Mr. COBB. That is it.

Mr. HUNTON. That is the very point. This controversy has resulted in bad feeling between the District government and the Treasurer of the United States. It is very desirable that the controversy should be settled; and if the gentleman's substitute will settle it I shall be very glad to have the privilege of voting for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to amend the substitute by striking out the proviso. My object in making this motion is to call attention to the effect of the proviso. I see no necessity whatever for such a restriction because, by the very terms of this bill, one-half the money provided is from the United States Treasury, and the other half from the income of the District. The proviso, therefore, unless it is intended to restrict the current use of money, is of no force whatever; and if that be the object, then it is inconsistent with the general design of the bill.

and if that be the object, then it is inconsistent with the general design of the bill.

The taxes of the District, which are the main sources of its revenue, are to be paid in only at certain periods of the year, and are not at all times available for current purposes. The money in the Treasury, appropriated to the District, is available at all times. Unless the meaning of this proviso is that the money provided from the Treasury of the United States for the expenses of the District shall not be ury of the United States for the expenses of the District shall not be drawn from the Treasury any faster than the money collected by the District government, the proviso is useless. If that be the object, then it is objectionable; and I trust it will be stricken out.

Mr. COBB. This proviso, I think, is a very important one. It is intended to provide a prohibition against drafts or requisitions being made upon the money we appropriate, in any greater amount than upon the revenues as supplied by the District. I do not think the proviso will admit of the construction put upon it by the learned gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.] I have had the construction of officers of the Treasury Department upon this proviso; and they indorse it. Believing it to be a necessary provision, I took their advice upon it this morning.

upon it this morning.

Mr. LAPHAM. Allow me to suggest this question. Suppose that the whole of the share of the United States Government should be drawn by the middle of June of a current year, and then for some reason the revenues of the District should fail or could not be drawn, what would be the result of the proviso?

Mr. COBB. The revenues of the District can be drawn, because the law provides that they shall be. They are paid in May and Sep-tember, I believe.

Mr. LAPHAM. Suppose there should be a contest about taxes or a deficiency of District revenues from any cause; this proviso would operate as a restriction upon using the Government's contribution to the income of the District. That should not be. Mr. COBB. The commissioners ought not to draw from the fund provided by the Government more than is drawn from the revenues paid by the tax-payers of the District.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] to the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "act," in the first line of the substitute, insert, "together with all revenues of the District of Columbia, from taxes or otherwise."

Mr. COBB. I accept that amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Lapham to strike out the proviso in the substitute of Mr. Cobb, it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the substitute of Mr. Cobb as modified by the amendment of Mr. Hunton, it was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out the last word; and I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making a statement to the House in regard to this bill. This House is voting for this bill under the impression that the District of Columbia bears one-half of its territorial and municipal expenditures. I desire to say, sir, that is not true; and I desire to say further that I shall vote for this bill with the understanding that the legislative and sundry civil appropriation bills can be amended so as to require the salaries of the judiciary of this can be amended so as to require the salaries of the judiciary of this District to be borne one-half by the District as well as one-half of the expenditures for courts, jury fees, criminal proceedings, marshals' fees, &c., all of which are now paid by the Government of the United States. If it is admissible to amend the sundry civil bill in that particular I shall move to do that so the District shall bear one-half of the expenses of its judiciary, which it does not now do.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the chairman of the committee allow me to

Mr. BLOUNI: Will the chairman of the committee allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand by law now the Federal Government pays one-half and the District government the other half of the expenditures of this District. I do not mean to say the appropriations show it, but I understand that to be the law fixing the relations of each to the expenses of the District.

Mr. M.M. Link. What is the apprentice?

each to the expenses of the District.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the practice?

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend must allow me to get through one thing at a time. It occurs to me, therefore, the difficulty he refers to is not so great after all, but there ought to be a provision, and it will be in accordance with and in obedience to law, to require one-half of those items to be paid out of the funds of the District. The chairman will remember this is the first District appropriation bill we have had.

Mr. ATKINS. Not the first.
Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; the first appropriation bill for the District

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; the first appropriation bill for the District we have ever had.

Mr. ATKINS. But not the first appropriation under the law.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all; but the first appropriation bill for the District, and there may be items which ought to have been in relating to the courts which are not. They are not included, but I insist that does not prevent us, when we come to provide for those officers, directing how they shall be paid according to law.

Mr. ATKINS. My impression is the gentleman from Georgia is under a misapprehension, but I hope he is not, and I trust it will be found upon a fair construction of this law that it will be admissible to insert in the sundry civil appropriation bill a clause requiring one. to insert in the sundry civil appropriation bill a clause requiring onehalf of the expense of the courts, including salaries, to be borne by the District, and also to insert a similar clause so far as the salaries of the judiciary in the District are concerned in the legislative bill.

My impression is in the law as it stands the salaries of the judiciary and the expenses of the court were made an exception in the law which reorganized this District.

Mr. HAYES. When that comes up let us discuss it.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman will allow me to take my own course if he pleases. I am making this statement to the House now before this bill is acted on so the House may be advised, for I know the impression prevails that the District of Columbia bears one-half of the expenditures of the District, but it is not true. I withdraw my amend-

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to insert, at the end of the bill, the following: "and which shall have been paid before a like sum shall be drawn from the Treasury."

I wish the House to understand the nature and force of that proviso. The bill provides that "said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United sitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during said fiscal year than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues of said District." Suppose they make a requisition upon the revenues arising from the District and it is not paid. That proviso fixes the question beyond dispute that after the requisition made upon the city shall be paid they can then draw a like amount from the Treasury. Otherwise, a requisition may be made upon the city and, although it may not be paid, they will still continue to draw money from the Treasury.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the amendment offered by my friend from Pennsylvania, I desire to say that his provision that there may be requisitions upon the revenues of the District which may not be paid while the requisitions upon the amount appropriated by the Federal Government may be paid

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes; that is the point.

Mr. HUNTON. Yes; that is the point, and I beg leave to ask my friend how can requisitions on the revenues fail to be paid? It is not a requisition on a tax bill to raise revenue, but it is a requisition on a requisition on a tax bill to raise revenue, but it is a requisition on revenue which must be in the Treasury of the United States, and therefore it is as certain to be paid as the requisition on the Federal Government.

Mr. WRIGHT. Now let "my friend" put in a word here. The requisition may be made upon the city authorities, but there may be no funds and it will not be paid; but if the requisition is made upon the Treasury of the United States, it will certainly be paid.

Mr. HUNTON. If the requisition is within the law, it will be paid under any circumstances.

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose that there are no revenues?

Mr. HUNTON. They are expressly limited in the bill in that respect, and no requisition can be made except on the revenues arising from the District.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Blackburn having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Harris, of Virginia, chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee of the Whole having had under considreported that the committee of the Whole having had thus consideration, in obedience to the orders of the House, a bill (H. R. No. 5896) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the itseal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the first amendment of the Senate and asks a conference thereon; also, that Messrs. Eaton, Beck, and Booth had been appointed as such conferees on the part of the Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COBB. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill and amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be first taken on the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Unless a separate vote be demanded upon the various amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole House, the Chair will order the vote to be taken upon the amendments in

No separate vote being demanded, the amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. COBB. I demand the previous question on the passage of the

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes that this being a general appropriation bill for the first time, the yeas and nays, under the rule, will be called.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 28, not voting 147; as follows:

all political questions. Not regarding this as a political question, I have voted. Mr. Robeson being very unwell thought it necessary to leave the House an hour ago for his home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas are 117, the nays are 28.

Mr. LOWE. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum has not voted; there lack two of being a quorum.

Mr. LOWE. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that there be a call of the House. As The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted on the call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted on the call of the roll there are only two motions in order, the motion for a call of the House and the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have made a motion to adjourn and call for the regular order.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Where a member is paired with the condition that he shall have the right to vote to make a quorum, could not a member in that position vote now

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in the power of the Chair nor in the power of the House to change the rule which limits the right of a member to vote to the second roll-call which has been completed. Mr. TUCKER. Could not a member under such circumstances be permitted to vote by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the peremptory rule of the House it is not in order for the Chair to entertain a request for unanimous consent for a member to vote after the completion of the second roll-call.

Mr. CONGER. As there are evidently enough members present to make a quorum, I move to reconsider the vote by which the main make a quorum, I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist upon my motion, which is the regular order.
Mr. ATKINS. I think we should finish the bill to-night.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is evident to the Chair that a quorum of the House is present though a quorum did not vote.
Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the roll be again called.
Mr. BLOUNT. We have gone beyond the usual time of the sittings of the House and I insist on my motion.
Mr. ATKINS. I hope we will have a vote on this bill to-night.
Mr. PRICE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. PRICE. If we should have a call of the House and bring in absentees they could not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman submitting a parliamentary inquiry or making a statement?

Mr. PRICE. I inquire whether absentees if brought in under a call of the House could vote upon the question of the passage of this bill ?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They could not under the rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If it is not in the power of the House under the rule to take another roll-call upon the passage of this bill, then under the rule how can we ever pass it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is too good a parliamentarian not to know that it is in the power of the House to reconsider any action it has had. The pending question is on the motion to adjourn.

ELECTION CONTEST-CHARGE OF BRIBERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before submitting to the House the motion to adjourn, the Chair desires to announce the appointment of Mr. Claflin, of Massachusetts, in place of Mr. O'Neill, of Pennsylvania, excused, as a member of the select committee to investigate alleged corruption in reference to the contested-election case of Donnelly vs. Washburn.

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the message from the Senate announcing that it insists upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

There was no objection.

The bill, with the Senate amendments thereto, was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and consent to the conference asked by the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr.

McMahon, Mr. Cobb, and Mr. Monroe as the conferees on the part of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I desire to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. PHILIPS. I also ask leave to introduce a bill for reference. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say to the House that there are several gentlemen present who have informed him that they were not in the House this morning when their States were called for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference. They now ask permission to introduce bills for that purpose. Of course a single objection will prevent it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it would be better for them to do it tomorrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

MRS. JULIA H. TOTTEN.

Mr. PHILIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5980) to increase the pension of Mrs. Julia H. Totten, widow of General James Totten, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAYLOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5986) granting a pension to Rebecca S. E. Epperson's administrator; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN T. KING.

Mr. TAYLOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5987) granting a pension to John T. King; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be

Mr. TAYLOR also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5988) granting a pension to Ann Lyon's administrator; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REVISION OF THE NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Mr. DEUSTER. I ask consent to introduce a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee for the revision of the naturalization laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the laws governing the naturalization of persons of foreign birth are illiberal, defective, inadequate, and incomplete, and their revision is therefore an urgent necessity; and

Whereas no measures have hereofore been proposed the adoption of which would be calculated to remedy these defects: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the presiding officer be, and he is hereby, anthorized and directed to appoint a committee to consist of seven members, whose duty it shall be to thoroughly investigate the subject, make examinations at such places as it may deem expedient, and to report to this House as early as practicable such measures as shall be considered best calculated to meet these defects, or propose such new legislation as they may deem proper.

Mr. DEUSTER. I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. FRYE. I think the resolution should go to the Committee on the Judiciary rather than to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; the Committee on the Judiciary having heretofore always had charge of that subject.

Mr. DEUSTER. I think it belongs to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; but I have no objection to its going to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The preamble and resolution were accordingly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Aldrich, of Rhode Island, for ten days, on account of important business;

To Mr. JOHNSTON, until Wednesday next;

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the printing of 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution, to report it back and to move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

ILLINOIS SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two hospital tents to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, of the State of Illinois, to report it without amendment. The reason will be given by the dispatch which I send to the desk.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the dispatch be read which I have sent to the table.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

BLOOMINGTON, ILLINOIS, April 23.

An epidemic of sore eyes is raging at the Soldiers Orphans' Home, at Normal, and the most persistent attention of the physicians of the home seems unable to check it. The hospital is filled, and some of the cases are very severe. Application has been made to the War Department for two hospital tents, the intention being to isolate the afflicted from the bulk of the immates, and thus check the disease. The tents cannot be given without a resolution of Congress, which is expected every day.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE FUNDS.

Mr. BAILEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor to report favorably and without amendment the bill (S. No. 940) to amend an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," and I ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time and put it upon its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, while the Senator from Tennessee has the attention or the Senate, to ask him what is his purpose and that of his committee in regard to another bill which he has reported to distribute the proceeds of the architecture. distribute the proceeds of the public lands among the States for educational purposes.

Mr. BAILEY. I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts that it is the purpose to call up that bill at the earliest practicable period and endeavor to get the sense of the Senate on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee—he knows I have the strongest friendship for that bill—when he expects that early practicable period will come?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know when that period will come. I should like to take it up to-day if it were practicable. I know the Senator from Massachusetts feels the liveliest interest in the success of that measure, as I do, and as many of us do. It was fixed as a special order for a particular day some time ago, but when that day came the Geneva award bill was before the Senate for consideration and that recessed it out and we have reversely an expectation. and that pressed it out, and we have never had an opportunity since to take it up. I should like very much, indeed, to call it up at a very early day; I should like, if possible, to get it up by the first of next week; and I hope the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators interested in that measure, one which we regard as of vital importance to the country, will assist in taking it up and having it disposed of Mr. HOAR. I hope the honorable Senator will insist on the right of it to come next after the pending measure. It stands next after the Geneva award bill in right.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my purpose.
Mr. MORRILL. I think the chairman of the committee should state that the only purpose of this bill is to enable the States to invest in United States bonds bearing less than 5 per cent. As bonds at anything higher than 4 per cent. are rapidly being absorbed, this bill is merely to enable the States to invest in bonds at 4 per cent. instead of 5.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not hear the Senator from Vermont distinctly, but I imagine that he has stated what I—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator yield until he can hear?
Mr. KIRKWOOD. I would be glad to inquire, if I am in order—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee what change the bill makes in the existing law?

Mr. BAILEY. The change is this: under existing law the fund arising from the sales of this land scrip must be invested in Government securities bearing 5 per cent. interest. We propose a change in the law so as to leave it optional with the State authorities to invest in securities bearing less than 5 per cent. interest, or in such other securities as the State itself may select provided by existing law.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If the State, in the exercise of that authority and discretion, should invest in some way by which there would be a loss of the fund, is the State to be responsible?

Mr. BAILEY. That is already the law. This bill simply proposes to change the fourth section of the act of July 2, 1862, so as to make it read as described in the bill that is presented, leaving the existing law in full force, and under the existing law the State is responsible for the fund whatever may be its fate.

for the fund whatever may be its fate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This measure does not change that liability?

Mr. BAILEY. Not in the slightest degree.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and insisted upon its amendment to the first amendment of the Senate to the said bill; that it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. A. Mc-Mahon of Ohio, Mr. Thomas R. Cobb of Indiana, and Mr. James Monroe of Ohio, managers at the conference on its part.

STEPHEN. A. M'CARTY.

Mr. CONKLING. Some time ago, on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] a joint resolution, which is now No. 440 in the order of business, was taken up for consideration. The Senator from Rhode Island nearest me [Mr. Anthony] observed that the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPherson,] the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, from which the joint resolution came, was absent, and expressed the opinion that that Senator would like to be present when the resolution was considered. Upon that state of facts, as the Record will show, the resolution went over upon a particular understanding. That understanding was that at any time when the Senator from New Jersey, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, was present, it should be in order to call up the joint resolution, and that it was laid aside informally, if I may so say, for that purpose. The Senator from New Jersey is here now, and although I am not at all sure that he cares to participate in the discussion or take part in the measure, I ask that it be taken up, as the Senator from Rhode Island is also here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks the Senate to resume the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 96, which will be reported.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see the Senator from New Jersey in his

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. He was here a moment ago.
Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from New Jersey was here only a moment ago, and the Senator himself talked to him, I think.

Mr. ANTHONY. He is not here now.
Mr. CONKLING. I will send for him, as he only stepped out a moment ago.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 96) authorizing the President of the United States to reappoint Stephen A.

McCarty a lieutenant-commander in the Navy.

Mr. CONKLING. The report has been already read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report was read on the former consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it read again, because it is all out of our minds.

The Chief Clerk again read the report submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, March 23, 1880, which has heretofore been published in the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the joint resolution to correspond with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy by in-serting after the word "authorized," in line 4, " to nominate," &c., and then by striking out "re" in line 5, before "appoint," so as to

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Stephen A. McCarty, &c.

Mr. CONKLING. I see no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise to oppose this resolution with great rel tance, and the greater because it comes to us with a favorable report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I am an unimportant member; but I owe a duty to the Navy which I cannot avoid if I would.

The case before us is a plain and simple one, and is stated with tolerable fairness, though not, I think with exact fairness, in the report of the committee. This officer was brought before a court-martial of the committee. This officer was brought before a court-martial on a charge of drunkenness and neglect of duty; was found guilty; recommended to mercy, on account of his previous record, which was an excellent one; experienced the executive elemency; was returned to duty; continued in the same habits; was repeatedly guilty of the same offense; was again brought before a court-martial, upon the same charge of drunkenness and neglect of duty; and, pending the proceedings, tendered his resignation. His resignation was accepted, on account of his excellent record, with the exception of the offense of which he had been before convicted and he thus escaped disof which he had been before convicted, and he thus escaped dis-

He claims to have thoroughly reformed and asks to be restored to the Navy. The Secretary mildly recommends his restoration, at the foot of the grade of lieutenant-commanders, in which he was serving when he resigned, and the resolution before us embodies that recommendation. I have a strong sympathy for this officer. He appears to have made a brave and manly effort to emancipate himself from the control of the appetite which had obtained possession of him, but found himself unable to do so in the associations by which he was surrounded. In his letter to the Secretary he claims that his resignation was not wholly on account of his apprehension of the judgment of the court, for he thought that the specific allegation on which he was arraigned could not have been sustained, but he admits that he was liable to could not have been sustained, but he admits that he was liable to other charges of the same character, against which he could not defend himself. He therefore resigned in order to effect a reformation, without the service, which he found impossible within it. He did well; he acted wisely. Shall we do well, shall we act wisely if we return him to those associations that were too strong for him, if we expose him again to those temptations which he was unable to resist? In my judgment the discipline, the efficiency, the usefulness, and the character of the Navy forbid it. In my judgment all these demand that an officer convicted of drunkenness on duty should be dismissed with no hope of restoration. This will be very hard on the offender, for drunkenness is not an infamous crime. Men of the finest offender, for drunkenness is not an infamous crime. Men of the finest talent, of the most brilliant genius and the purest character, have fallen into its habit. It is a vice which loves to enfold in its deadly embrace men who are endowed with every quality to embellish private and to dignify public life. It is not, therefore, to be punished with extreme severity, when its consequences fall only upon its vic-tim. He suffers enough without the imposition of any judicial sentim. He suffers enough without the imposition of any judicial sentence; but he must not be permitted to transfer those consequences to others, and least of all to the public service. He is not, perhaps, to be punished with severity, but he is not to be trusted, and his dismissal is not altogether in the way of punishment, although it operates as such incidentally with great force, but for the protection of the service. And if it be hard upon the offender to be dismissed without hope of restoration, is it not hard upon the ships, upon the seamen, upon the flag of the Navy, to incrust them into hands that are trembling with inebriety?

Drunkenness, however pardonable in many places, is one of the ost serious offenses that a naval officer can commit. It involves the most serious offenses that a naval officer can commit. liability to every other offense. There is no crime that a drunken man may not commit; and there is no condition more deplorable than that of a naval vessel in charge of a drunken officer, endowed with all the authority of command without any of its discretion, entitled to the implicit obedience of his subordinates, unable to form a plan or to give an intelligent order.

The younger officers of the Navy should be taught, by severe example, that a man convicted of drunkenness on duty shall never be drunk on duty again, that the service shall not twice be imperiled from this cause, by the same man. It is in the power of Congress to restore this officer to the position which he has forfeited; I suppose it will be done; but if we do it, we shall say to the junior officers just rising to rank and emulous of distinction, that drunkenness on duty is not the heinous crime that it has been sometimes represented; that it is a venial offense to be condoned on professions of repentance, a is a venial offense to be condoned on professions of repentance, a trifling error to be pardoned upon a show of reform.

There is, I apprehend, one argument in favor of this measure, which has met us in so many previous cases; and I am sorry to say there are abundant precedents for this measure; the active list of the Navy has been largely recruited by officers dismissed for drunkenness, and for more serious although not less dangerous offenses. That argument is that when an officer is put back at the foot of the list in which he was serving, when he was dismissed or resigned, honorably or in discrace, he goes over no one. This is a great mistake. If we or in disgrace, he goes over no one. This is a great mistake. If we put this man at the foot of the list of lieutenant-commanders, he does not go over any lieutenant-commander, but he goes over every officer in the grades below lieutenant-commander, every officer in the grades below is degraded one number and remains one number lower during the whole of his professional service. He goes over 280 lieutenants, 100 masters, 100 ensigns, 45 midshipmen, in all, 525 officers—more than one-half the active list of the Navy. One man will be retired as a commodore who would otherwise be retired as an admiral. One man will be retired as a captain who would otherwise be retired as a commodore. Every one of these officers is kept one degree lower during the whole of his professional life.

Mr. President, I have said that I have a strong sympathy for this officer. I have, I have seen him; and he made a favorable impression on me. It is a case in which sympathy with an officer and his family and friends contends with what I think is due to the discipline and the and friends contends with what I think is due to the discipline and the usefulness and the dignity of the Navy, and in that contest there is but one side that I can take, however unpleasant the position. I could not agree to this report; I cannot give this resolution my support; but I suppose it will pass. I will not detain the Senate any longer with words of unavailing protest.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if there is any positive assurance that he has entirely reformed?

Mr. ANTHONY. The report of the committee states his own declaration that he has thoroughly reformed, and certificates from a number of cashiers of banks and counsellors at law and justices of the peace and ministers of churches recommend him as a thoroughly reformed man. formed man

Mr. COCKRELL. They say he has reformed; but they have only known him for two years.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that his repentance is sincere; I think his reformation is genuine, so long as it has lasted. Whether it will continue or not, time only can determine. I am not willing to subject the Navy to the risk of that uncertainty. I might be willing to intrust interests of my own to him; but am not willing to intrust the interests of the Navy to him. I am not willing to order seamen, under penalty of their lives, to obey the commands of a man who has shown himself, with the best and most honest and persistent efforts, unable to command himself.

I have discharged an unpleasant duty, Mr. President, but I could not say less in justice to my views of the discipline and efficiency of the Navy. I ask for the yeas and nays on the joint resolution.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I know this young man; I knew his father; I know some of the people who have signed this recommendation; I have received letters from men I know who have watched this case and they all control as a resident that he conduct for two or dation; I have received letters from men I know who have watched this case, and they all concur in saying that his conduct for two or three years evidences to them that he has thoroughly reformed, and therefore I believe and trust that he will be restored. They say his conduct shows that he has reformed. I trust that we shall put him at the foot of the list, and let him climb again, believing he is sincerely a man who will not slip again. I am sure the younger officers will rejoice that a man who served eighteen years gallantly, without a complaint except this slip, will rejoice that he comes in before them at the foot of his own list, believing, as they will, that he has really reformed. reformed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask my friend from New York—I never heard of this case before—what he would think of the propriety of this restoration if this gentleman had never fallen a victim to habits of intemperance but had during his whole career in the Navy conducted himself with the utmost propriety and gallantry. and had resigned not under charges but had resigned of his own volition, as this gentleman did in the actual act, but entirely free from any cause of complaint or from any ground for dismissal. Would my friend from New York or anybody else vote, after he had been out of the Navy for six years, to put him back again because he wished to again enter the service over the head of anybody, if it was the lowest midshipman ?

Mr. KERNAN. If he had resigned voluntarily, constrained by no circumstances, it would be a different case; but I believe just as this report states that a man feeling that he had sinned, feeling that very likely he could not give evidence of a desire to reform by staying where he was then might resign, and he having resigned and given that evidence I would give him a chance. The Apostle fell three times and he was restored.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I believe he was not restored over the head of anybody. [Laughter.]
Mr. KERNAN. He was restored and made the head, the Prince of Mr. EDMUNDS. But he took his place by their election and not by the strength of the appointing power.

Mr. KERNAN. He took it because of his sincere repentance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, I must say that I am a little Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, I must say that I am a little astonished at the statements of my friend from New York, and I should astonished at the statements of my friend from New York, and I should like to ask the attention of other Senators to this view of the case: Is it possible that we can hold deliberately as law-makers or as edict-makers, (for this really is an edict,) that we will extend a privilege of entering the Navy of the United States or any other official employment above the foot of the list, to a person who left it six years ago because he was unfit to stay, that we would not extend to a person who left it six years ago being fit to stay but who voluntarily resigned, with his record perfectly clear and his cup full and brimming over with the correct gratitude of his fellow-citizens. If those citizens afterward appealed to us to put him back where he was before or a little lower, would such a person stand lower in the judgment or a little lower, would such a person stand lower in the judgment of the Senate than one who went out six years ago for a true cause?

of the Senate than one who went out six years ago for a true cause? This is not a question of correcting an error or a mistake. This is a question of by a simple provision of the will of the Senate of the United States and of the House of Representatives and the President, (who concur to make this law,) after having established certain grades, orders of necessary rank and promotion in the Navy, after having provided by law that every person on that list shall be promoted in due order, declaring that we take a person who has been a private citizen of the United States for six years, and for the simple reason that before that time he had held a certain place in the Navy which that before that time he had held a certain place in the Navy which he left of his own free will and accord, because he felt and everybody else felt that he ought not to stay, violate the principle of that law, and allow him to take place above those below him in rank who during those six years have breasted every storm, have lived on unwholesome coasts, have done all the disagreeable things that a regular, some coasts, have done all the disagreeable things that a regular, honest routine in the Navy imposes upon every officer. That is the thing that troubles me. I hope I am not more wanting in sympathy for this gentleman and not less disposed to wish him every good wish than my friend from New York; but there is committed to our keeping not merely his pride or his wishes or his welfare; it is the due order of the regular and equal law that has given rights to every one of these gentlemen below him that they have earned and deserved that he shall not now again go above their heads. That is the way it seems to me. it seems to me

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if there is no difficulty in the way of this joint resolution save that suggested by the Senator from Vermont, there is in my estimation no difficulty at all. With great respect to that honorable Senator, nothing in my opinion could be more fallacious than the test he applies. Suppose this man had fallen ill of a fever and had resigned for that reason, why would the Senator be in favor, if at all, of his restoration? Simply because a misfortune had fallen upon him which distinguished his case from that of others. Suppose by reason of any other casualty he had been led to offer his resignation, why would the Senator vote for excepting his case? For the reason which I have stated already. Apply that reason to this case; and does it not answer the question of the honorable Senator from Vermont?

Had this man supposed that by going to the gold fields of the west

Senator from Vermont?

Had this man supposed that by going to the gold fields of the west coast or by setting forth upon some other venture he could greatly improve his condition, and in that sense voluntarily had flung down his commission and had gone away, would anybody say, even though his venture had failed, that he should be restored and restored with precedence before those who remained? Certainly not. And that is the strength and the whole strength of the argument of the Senator. Now, Mr. President, what is this case as to that bearing of it? It is, I humbly submit, the case which you would find if a man in your employ, an agent of yours, by reason of physical misfortune or by reason of a temptation springing upon him and overcoming him before resistance could begin, had proved unfaithful in your service and had gone from it. When reformation glittered o'er his faults, you would resistance could begin, had proved unfaithful in your service and had gone from it. When reformation glittered o'er his faults, you would extend the hand to him and say "Come back and try again;" but you could not say that upon the theory of the honorable Senator from Vermont. Why? Because his case would be less meritorious than if voluntarily, willfully, without extenuation, without excuse, without weakness pleading for him, he had turned his back upon his duty and gone the other way. Why, Mr. President, I humbly submit that will not do. You cannot refine upon this so dexterously without misleading the Senate. not do. You ca

This is the case, taken together, not that this man resigned voluntarily excluding everything else, but that having through the long watches of the night and during the loneliness and isolation of shipboard life given way once, twice, three times—not repeatedly as I understand from the report, although the Senator from Rhode Island said so, and if he was mistaken in that it was the only unjust remark he made—but having several times given way to the use of stimulating drinks, having been once brought into judgment for it, and charged the second time, he thought it better for him, for the service, in the presence of all the facts, that he should yield and relinquish in the presence of all the facts, that he should yield and relinquish for the time being in order that, with other surroundings and with helps which he might not find there, he could retrieve and re-establish himself.

That is the case. It is one of misfortune; it is one, as I choose to regard it, and as I beg to present it, of misfortune, ethically and properly, as much as if mere physical disease had fallen upon him. Indeed, Mr. President, I need not have said that this case is like one of physical disease, because drunkenness is a disease. So not only by parallel or analogy, but by simple assertion, I have a right to treat this as an instance of a man who lost his commission in the Navy, and they are the had better resign because physical disability overtook. thought he had better resign because physical disability overtook

Mr. President, I have much appreciation of, and some sympathy with, what was said by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, and I can conceive of a case and times when I should feel constrained to vote, possibly in a case like this, in accordance with his suggestions; but I submit that at this time, without there being any hazard by reason of the situation and the occasion, I do not think that a broad with in the presence of the testimony that reason of the situation and the occasion, I do not think that a broad risk is run by allowing this man in the presence of the testimony that he has reformed, in the presence of his creditable, I might say his distinguished, record for eighteen years, to be once more weighed in the balance. If he shall be found wanting, I think the danger of calamity to result from that will be very, very slight.

And, Mr. President, although I have had occasion to know something of the will and the hadrons of interpresent although I have thing of the evils and the horrors of intemperance, although I know that it feeds the gibbets and fills the poor-houses and prisons of the land, I do not believe that an act of drunkenness committed by a sailor or an officer, far away from the distractions, diversions, and comforts of life, is a greater offense than the same act might be if not committed by an officer of the Navy and if not committed far away from the diversions and occupations of civilized life. I am quite as much disposed to forgive it in such an instance as to forgive it in many another which goes quite unchallenged of public or private reprehension.

So that take it all together, I am willing for one to assume my share of responsibility in allowing this man to go back, not where he was, but to go back at the foot of his class, to see whether it be true that time has so seasoned and strengthened his effort at reformation that time has so seasoned and strengthened his effort at reformation that he can stand the storms and trials of naval life.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the point made by the Senator from Vermont arrested my attention. Upon examination, however, of the Navy Register, I find three commodores now on the active list, Commodore Colhoun, Commodore Baldwin, and Commodore Shufeldt, who were out of the service by resignation, the first eight years and two months, the second, seven years and eight months, and the third, seven years and seven months, as I am informed, attending to their private business interests, some of them doing exactly what the Senprivate business interests, some of them doing exactly what the Senator from New York spoke of, going to the Pacific coast, and who were afterward restored to their places in their grade which they would have occupied had they not resigned. Whether the Senator from Vermont voted for their restoration is a matter that I have not had time to examine; but I think the fact itself is as full and complete an answer to the objection made against the appeal made in favor of this unfortunate young man as could be made by an argument of much greater length.

So far as this case is concerned, Mr. President, I intend to vote for the joint resolution. Nothing gives me more pleasure in life than to give a man who has been unfortunate another chance. It is always an absolute satisfaction where one has fallen by the wayside without evil intent, without crime, but has been overtaken by those infirmi-ties which beset us all—nothing I say gives me greater satisfaction than to lend my humble aid to set him up again and let him start once more. I understand this man has done his Government good service; and the fact that he slipped and fell should not be seized and the fact that he shpped and fell should not be seized upon with quite so much avidity by those who have passed by.

The complaint now on behalf of those who are above him is to the effect, not that they got above him by fighting or meritorious conduct on their part, but because he tripped and they passed on. They, therefore, have his place, and they do not wish that in the work of restoring him they should stand in the relation to him that they did before. ing him they should stand in the relation to him that they did before. I see no great hardship in making this restoration to restore him to the same relation he would have borne to them if this misfortune had not overtaken him. Certainly I see no injustice in it when I find such illustrious precedents as I have pointed out and handed to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, if it were true that I had been a party to the appointment of the three gentlemen named—
Mr. VOORHEES. I did not say the Senator had been.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I will begin again. If it were true, Mr. President, that I had been a party to the appointment of these three gentlemen over the head of anybody else after they had been out of the Navy, it would not be absolutely conclusive probably in the judgment of the Senate that I did right at that time. Every Senator would be obliged to vote upon his own convictions now, I suppose. Second, I have no recollection of the events to which the Senator from Indiana alludes. Third, I think I can safely state that I have never consciously been a party to any such thing. Nominations and appointments sometimes go through the Senate without Senators paying the amount of attention to them that perhaps they ought to do; and I am probably as guilty in that respect as anybody. That is all I can say about that with the doors open. that with the doors open

In the next place, the Navy Register does not show that these three men were out of the service and reappointed to the same rank and place that they would have held if they had not been out. All that it says is a foot-note as to Mr. Colhoun, Mr. Baldwin, and Mr. Shufeldt "out of the service eight years and two months," "out of the service seven years and eight months," "out of the service seven years and seven months." Whether they were out of the service before the rebellion began and came back at the call of their country, or whether they were out since, I do not know. That might make a difference in the minds of a good many men.

The General-in-Chief of the Army of the United States went out of the service of his country as a military man before the rebellion. He came back into it, not in the grade that he held when he went out, and he is General-in-Chief now; and I am glad of it. If we were to have another such unhappy event, or any other war, I think the same course that put General Sherman and General Grant at the head of the armies of the United States was a wise one if you were sure of the armies of the United States was a wise one if you were sure of your man as we were in these instances.

That is not quite this case. I do not think these are precedents for this case. This case is simply one where a gentleman who had served well in the Navy as it is said, and I have not the least reason to doubt it, became addicted—I think that is the fair effect of his own letter when he applies to be restored six years afterward—became addicted to habits of intemperance which had subjected him to one condemnation by a court-martial, and the same kindliness that the Senate is now asked to exercise again led the President of the United States to remit the sentence, and let him try again on a reform plan. He did try, and I have no doubt sincerely, and he failed. He was then brought up again, and rather than take another trial with whatever of consequences either of acquittal or of condemnation might follow, he resigned, and he resigned as he says, as reported by the committee in his letter to the Secretary of the Navy, on the 13th of January, 1879.

Fully realizing that the intemperate habits which I frankly and with deep regret confess I had contracted rendered me liable to similar difficulties sooner or later, I believed it to be of paramount importance to my future welfare to reform absolutely, and that I could more effectually and thoroughly accomplish this by leaving the Navy. My sole motive in resigning was to make myself more fit to hold my position, with a view of asking for restoration to the service when the temporary physical and mental disability had been removed.

He states himself, therefore, you will perceive, that his object in leaving the service was first to overcome this habit, and to do it in private life, with the intention of being restored when he should have accomplished that purpose, leaving his comrades to do their duty and his duty during the period of six years that it took him to accomplish it, and then he expected to go back. Why, Mr. President, how many cases are there of men now living who have resigned (as the Senator from New York has referred to it as an illussigned (as the Senator from New York has referred to it as an illustration) from disease which did not depend upon their will at all, but disease contracted in unwholesome climates, the ordinary incidents and perils to life that nature exposes us all to everywhere, and by and by, being out of the hardship of the sea and the hardship of the service, they get better treatment, different exercise, and recover? Are we to adopt a principle that entitles everybody who resigns on account of disease, and who recovers in a few years, to be restored to bis add allows. account of disease, and who recovers in a new years, to be restored to his old place, or to any other place in the Navy, over the head of anybody? To borrow the expression of my learned friend from New York, which he borrows from Ohio, where we get most of our good things, I think "that won't do."

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Vermont will allow me to say that in looking into the Navy Register it will be found from the entry of the service of these commodores who have been cited that they are at the top of the list of the grade to which they belong at the date when they were restored. They could not have any higher grade if they had been in service continuously.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When were they restored?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will see in a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

there can be a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the further consideration of this resolution at this time? The question is: Shall it be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; on which the Senator from Rhode Island asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 34, nays 20; as follows:

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5975) for the relief of certain homestead and pre-emption settlers in Kansas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRINTING OF A DOCUMENT.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire this morning to ask the Senate to set aside all pending orders and put on its passage the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to offer a resolution for the printing of a document?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.
Mr. HOAR. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the contested-election case of Spofford vs. Kellogg in the months of October and November, 1877, be printed for the use of the Senate.

This document was printed only for the use of the committee. It contains about one hundred and eleven pages of matter. It has been referred to very often and there are some differences of opinion about the facts. I suppose there will be no objection to having it printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOAR. There is no necessity under the rule for that reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator to ask

Mr. HOAR. No, sir. I ask for its adoption.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate. The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] asks the Senate to consider at this time the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield to me a few minutes to take up and pass a bill, which is very important, making provision for an Arctic expedition. If permitted, I should like to state that the ship is now in the harbor waiting for her supplies, and the whole question to be considered is whether the Government of the United States will take part in this expedition, or whether private parties must do it all. The bill has passed the House of Representatives and been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. I think it will not take five minutes.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. McPHERSON. It is House bill No. 3534 to authorize and equipan expedition to the Arctic seas. I ask the Senate to take up the bill. If it takes longer than ten minutes I will give way.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection with that understanding. I know the matter is somewhat pressing.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that the special order is, I suppose, the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the unfinished business of the Senate. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck]

Mr. SAULSBURY. I propose that that be laid aside temporarily, to be called up at any time. It is my purpose to call it up after the appropriation bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall it be the understanding of the Senate that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, to be called up at the pleasure of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. INGALLS. What is the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of WILLIAM PITT KEL-

ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Mr. McPHERSON. I now ask the Senate to take up House bill No.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to have the bill (S. No. 1504) refunding to the University of Notre Dame du Lac, of Saint Joseph County, in the State of Indiana, the sum of $2,334.07, in gold coin, that being the amount paid on certain imported articles, &c., recommitted to the Committee on Finance. It is on the Calendar now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

DETAILS OF OFFICERS AS PROFESSORS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President— Mr. BECK. For fear some person else may ask leave, I desire to say that after the Senator from Pennsylvania has disposed of his litthe matter I shall decline to yield to any other Senator.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 70.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 70) to increase the number of the officers of the Army allowed to be detailed as professors of military science at colleges and universities, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

ment to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That for the purpose of promoting knowledge of military science among the young men of the United States, the President may, upon the application of any college, university, or other institution of learning incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having capacity to educate at the same time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof. Provided, however. Such college, university, or other institution of learning, incorporated as aforesaid, to which such officer shall be so detailed shall pay to him monthly daring the time he is so detailed and serves as such president, superintendent, or professor thereof, a sum of money equal to the difference between the retired monthly pay of such officer and the monthly pay he would receive if upon the active list of the Army in the grade upon which he is retired: Provided, also, That officers of the Army so detailed shall be governed by general rules prescribed from time to time by the President of the United States.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue, at his discretion, and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of any small-arms or pieces of field artillery belonging to the Government and which can be spared for that purpose, such number of the same as may appear to be required for military instruction and practice by the students of any college, university, or other institution of learning aforesaid to which any officer of the Army may be detailed under this act, for which the officer so detailed shall receipt and account in the manner prescribed by Army regulations when like property is issued for proper purposes. And the Secretary of War shall also require from the proper authorities of such institution in each case a bond in double the value of the property for the care and safe-keeping thereof, and for the return of the same when requ

Mr. HEREFORD. This is a subject to which I have given some attention and consideration, and I prefer the original bill to the substitute, at least as far as one feature is concerned. The original bill that was introduced authorized the increase of those who may be detailed from the Army to preside over or act as professors at a certain class of colleges and who may be taken from the active list. They may be taken from the active list now to a certain number, I think thirty. The original bill provides that that number may be increased to fifty. I think that is right. I am in favor of that for the simple reason that, as the Senator from Pennsylvania is aware, and perhaps other Senators are aware, there is a demand for more than thirty to supply the various institutions of learning throughout the country. supply the various institutions of learning throughout the country. Some of these professors have been taken from the institutions where they were employed and sent to supply other institutions in other States. The State University of my own State had one of these professors for some years, and recently he has been taken from that State and given to another, simply for the reason that there are not enough to go all around. There are not enough to supply the various State institutions with these professors from officers of the Army on the active list. Therefore I say that I prefer that feature in the original bill which increases that number to fifty rather than the substitute that which increases that number to fifty, rather than the substitute that is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. The rest of the bill I am in sympathy with, and I am in favor of it; and if it shall be so amended as to provide for an increase of the number who may be detailed from the active list from thirty to fifty, I shall vote for the substitute in that shape.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The objection the committee had to increasing the number to be taken from the active list was that it was taking men from the active duty pertaining to their comthat it was taking men from the active duty pertaining to their commands and very much interfering with the efficiency of the Army. There are men who are just as competent to perform this duty at the schools, who are on the retired list, as those on the active list, and taking retired officers does not interfere with the duties of the Army; it does not interfere with the efficiency of the Army in any sense.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania, if it is proper to do so, that I have had several conversations with the Secretary of War on this subject.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. So have I.

Mr. HEREFORD. And he says that about this additional number can be spared from the Regular Army without affecting its efficiency.

at all. I will state further, if it is proper for me to say it, that it was at his suggestion, I believe, that the original bill was drafted, and he has informed me on more than one occasion that about that number, fifteen or twenty in addition to the present number, can be taken from the active list without affecting the efficiency of the Army at all. I know that there is a very great preference expressed by the heads of these institutions for the younger men in the Army who are upon the active list over the retired officers, those who are retired from age, from infirmity. They prefer that they should have as professors in these various colleges and universities the vigorous men who are on the active list, and prefer them to those who are on the retired list. retired list.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state that really all that is proposed to be effected by the bill now under consideration is already secured by the last paragraph in the first section of the Army appropriation bill, which has already passed. The only difference between the provision in the Army bill and the proposed legislation is that by the provision now enacted in the Army bill these officers, when detailed, are authorized to receive from these educational institutions the difference between full pay and ratingly now while this bill makes it seems to be the provision of the provision in the difference between full pay and rating how while this bill makes it seems leave and rating how while this bill makes it seems leave. between full pay and retired pay, while this bill makes it compulsory upon the colleges to give them that difference. That is practically the only difference between the two.

Under the provision in the Army bill, as it passed, the Secretary of War has the right to detail as many as may be deemed necessary from the retired list of the Army to meet all the demands of educational institutions requesting the service of officers for this purpose. We had the Secretary of War before us, and the provisions of the law, as embodied in that bill, met his approval, and I really think there is no necessity for any legislation now.

Mr. BECK. I do not suppose the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to press this matter now under the circumstances.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I should like to have the measure passed. I do not want to talk any more about it. I am ready to take the vote now.

take the vote now.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the necessity of the bill if it has been already enacted into the law before?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It has not been.

Mr. WITHERS. I have stated that the only difference I see between the provision in the Army bill and the proposed legislation is that by the Army bill the detailed officers are authorized to receive from colleges the difference between active pay and retired pay, and by this bill it is made compulsory that the colleges shall pay the difference. If they want the service they will pay for it, and if not, not. not

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. This provides that the colleges shall pay the difference between the active pay and the retired pay. The judgment of the committee was that when these officers were performing active duty they should receive that pay, but the Government ought not to pay it; and the colleges, if they want the service, can well afford to pay the difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CARPENTER in the chair.) The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask whether this proposition is capable of being separated? A part of the substitute that is offered in the shape of an amendment I am in favor of. I am in favor of the whole of it except the first part. The original bill reads in this way:

That the number of officers of the Army authorized to be detailed by the President for duty as president, superintendent, or professor at colleges or universities, under the provisions of section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, be, and the same is hereby, increased from thirty to fifty, subject to the terms and limitations as expressed in said section 1225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That I am in favor of passing just as it is, adding to it the remainder of the substitute, and therefore I ask if we cannot take a separate vote. There are several sections in the amendment. All of the amendment I am in favor of except that feature which compels these institutions to take these detailed officers from the retired list rather than from the active list. The Secretary of War says they can be spared.

Mr. WITHERS. No; the Secretary of War wants them taken from the retired list.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Secretary of War told me differently. Mr. WITHERS. He was before the Committee on Appropriations on the subject a few days ago.

Mr. HEREFORD. What I desire is to get a separate vote on the different portions of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. There are two objections to the proposition of the Senator from West Virginia. The first is that in my judgment and in the judgment of the committee the efficiency of the Army is destroyed to some extent by having these active officers put to this duty. The second is that under the substitute as it stands the Government will save from $75,000 to $100,000 a year; that is, instead of paying gentlemen who are on active duty for this service it will take the officers retired, whom it is compelled to pay at any rate, and put them into active service.

Mr. HEREFORD. I do not think that the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania is good. I do not see how it saves the Government anything. We are already paying the retired officers. The Government pays them no more if they are placed in these positions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It saves by putting these other officers into duties where they render service according to the amount officers into duties where they render service according to the amount of money they receive.

Mr. HEREFORD. Furthermore, it is not compulsory on the Secretary of War to take fifty. If they cannot be spared they will not be taken. As the law now stands thirty is the number that may be detailed, but it is not compulsory on the Secretary of War or the President to do that. They may do it if the service will allow. That is the same way now. If it is increased to fifty, the active service will not be interfered with, because the Secretary of War will not detail the officers if the active service is to be interfered with. It is all in the officers if the active service is to be interfered with. It is all in the discretion of the Secretary of War. Therefore, as I said before, I desire a separate vote upon the different features of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia can

Mr. WITHERS. Before the motion is submitted I will read the provision of the Army appropriation bill which it seems to me supplies everything that is necessary in this case:

That upon the application of any college, university, or institution of learning incorporated under the laws of any State within the United States, having capacity at the same time to educate not less than one hundred and fifty male students, the President may detail an officer of the Army on the retired list to act as president, superintendent, or professor thereof; and such officer may receive from the institution to which he may be detailed the difference between his retired and full pay, and shall not receive any additional pay or allowance from the United States.

Mr. HEREFORD. That is already the law. Mr. WITHERS. The difference is that that simply authorizes the officer to receive the difference from the institutions and this requires the institutions to pay it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I have stated that there is but one difference between the two laws, and that is that the colleges must pay a proportion of the pay allotted to these officers, and I think it is no more than right that they should. If they want an officer for this service, they will get along very well by paying him one-fifth of the value of his service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move to amend the amendment— Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I only consented to postpone the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill for a few moments on the assurance that this matter would take no time. It seems now it will take a good deal of time. Perhaps by to-morrow morning these gentake a good dear of time. Ferraps by to-morrow morning these gentlemen can look over the different amendments and agree about the matter and dispose of it very soon. It may take some time now.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I want it understood than I can get it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. BECK. I will help you as far as I can to get it up. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky calls for the regular order.

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understand the regular order to be the Indian appropriation bill.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A VESSEL.

Mr. CONKLING. Before that is proceeded with, will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to make a report? The Committee on Commerce to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3803) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York, authorize me to report the same back with-out amendment, and if I can have the attention of the Senator from Kentucky for an instant I wish to say that this is a bill authorizing the change of the name of a vessel in the State of New York. Here are the affidavits and the report of the committee showing that it is all regular. I think it will take but a single instant to allow it to pass, and, although I have no interest in it myself, there is a pretty large interest in allowing the boat to be launched if the name may be changed. Therefore if the Senator does not object I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes

Mr. BECK. I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be open for amendment as read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair bears no objection. The Chair understands the order to be to read the bill with the amend-

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; and the bill to be open to amendment as read. I only wish to dispense with the first formal reading through.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 8, to strike out "sixty-nine" and insert "sixty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of sixty-eight agents of Indian affairs at the following-named agencies at the rates respectively indicated, namely.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that to correct an error in computation, or does that omit some agency inserted by the House?

Mr. BECK. There was an agency stricken out at the request of the Department, there being no longer any duty for it.

Mr. INGALLS. What agency was that?

Mr. BECK. The Papago. The House struck out the agency, but omitted to reduce the number appropriated for.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the agency that was stricken out?

Mr. BECK. The Papago agency, in Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill till he reached line 111, which included among the agents appropriated for one "at the Union agency, $2,000."

Mr. INGALLS. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky what necessity there is for the continuance of an agency for the civilized Indians in the Indian Territory? I understand that is the agency to which reference is made in line 111. We have heard a great deal during the last month about the necessity of some change in the Indian policy, about making the Indians self-supporting, about giving them opportunities of becoming citizens. Here are five tribes or nations that are civilized and self-supporting, that have laws, and courts, and self-supporting them the self-supporting that have laws, and courts, and self-supporting that have laws. schools, and a literature of their own. A larger per cent. of them are in schools under education and instruction to-day than of the people in nine-tenths of the States of this Union. The Government does not pay them one single cent of gratuity. Yet we continue, in violation of the express wishes of those who believe a different Indian policy should be pursued, to go through with the farce of placing those five nations under the charge of an Indian agent who receives a salary of $2,000 per annum.

I should like, if it would receive favorable consideration, to move that that line be stricken out, for the reason that it is absolutely un-necessary. I have talked with representatives of every one of those nations, and they all assert that the appointment of an agent there is superfluous and absurd. It would be just as advisable and just as sensible, in my opinion, to appoint an agent for the State of Connecticut as to appoint an agent for the five civilized nations in the Indian Territory. They have embassadors who are here continually engaged in representing their affairs. They are civilized men. The great bulk of those people are self-supporting. They are farmers and stock-raisers, and are wealthy beyond the average of Caucasian and Anglo-Saxon communities. I should like to hear from some person competent to advise us what necessity there is of longer continuing the farce of an Indian agency for the five civilized nations.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to inquire whether the present reading of the bill is the formal reading of it, or whether it is read for action as we proceed.

Mr. BECK. It is now being read for amendment and for action.

The formal reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. President, it is very difficult to show in the consideration of an Indian appropriation bill that everything that is in it is exactly the best thing that could be done, or that the policy of having an Indian appropriation bill of this character is the very best thing that could be done, or that the present arrangement under the Interior Department of carrying out the treaties might not be modified in some form improving it. But those things the Committee on Appropriations cannot alter. We have to take existing laws as they are and we have to make appropriations under them as we find them. We have, for to make appropriations under them as we find them. We have, for example, in the list of agencies that was just being read over, sixty-eight agencies, of which the one in line 111, at the Union agency, at $2,000, is a part. The aggregate of these Indians is 172,722, scattered at sixty-eight agencies, and the agent referred to here has 55,000 Indians to deal with. True they are comparatively civilized.

Mr. TELLER. What does the Indian agent have to do?

Mr. BECK. This agent, as we are advised by the Department, has to watch the interests of the business connected with the Department and those Indians. Where trespasses are made by white men upon Indian lands he is the only person from whom they can get information. We are advised that constant complaints are being made by the Indians: that there are constant assertions of rights by the white the Indians; that there are constant assertions of rights by the white people there; that there are many payments to be made to the Indians from time to time, and that this agent is the only person that they have to attend to these things.

This agency was abolished some two or three years ago, as I am advised, and was restored because it was found necessary to have some one there, both to report the truth as to trespasses made, and to make the payments required, as well as to attend to whatever business the Department has with all the Indians there. It is far better and cheaper to have some one there familiar with all the transactions than to send special agents to examine into every cause of complaint that is made. Therefore Congress restored the agency. The Department recommended it; the House agreed to it; we found it in the bill. We were advised by the Department that it was the proper thing to allow it to remain, and we did not strike it out.

Mr. INGALLS. Unless the Senator has specific information on which he can rely I should be inclined to doubt that the agency had which he can rely I should be inclined to doubt that the agency had ever been abolished. It may be that the Senator is better informed than I am. He said it was once abolished and has since been restored. I have been on the Committee on Indian Affairs for seven years, and my impression is that he must be mistaken, because I know that the representatives of the nations here, who are present every winter for the purpose of protecting their interests, have uniformly insisted that they did not want an agent, that they were competent to take care of their own affairs, that the designation of an agent to look after them and take care of their business was intrusive agent to look after them and take care of their business was intrusive and superfluous, and that they resented it. When we are insisting that the Indians shall be made self-supporting, that they shall be made citizens, and that they shall be allowed to take care of themselves; when we have here sixty or seventy thousand that are capable of taking care of themselves, that have shown it by the accumulation of property and by the protection of their own interests in every way, we still insist upon going through with the childish farce of appointing annually an agent to look after their affairs.

I hope that the Senate will carry out what has been designated heretofore as the inclination of this body in regard to the Indians, and say that we will give these men the opportunity of managing their own affairs without the intervention of an agent, who is just as useless as anything that can possibly be imagined.

their own affairs without the intervention of an agent, who is just as useless as anything that can possibly be imagined.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say again that I am advised by one of the best informed officials of the Interior Department, who sits by my side, (I sent for him to enable me to answer questions of this sort,) that the agency was abolished and remained abolished from the 1st of July, 1878; to the 30th of June, 1879; that it was restored again on the 1st July, 1879; and during the year that it was abolished there were constant communications, involving labor and expense, constant complaints the truth of which could not be ascertained; and that this constant communications, involving labor and expense, constant complaints, the truth of which could not be ascertained; and that this agent not only saves the Department great trouble and expense, but he reports whatever is wrong between the whites and the Indians there, and attends to the making of the payments, and is regarded by the Department as a man extremely valuable and useful to them in the conduct of their affairs there. As there are fifty-five thousand Indians there, and the white men are trespassing upon them or likely to trespass upon them, it is regarded as important to have some one there who can keep the Department advised of the exact condition of things. Congress restored the agency because the Department found that they could not do without it, and it is there for that reason. That is all I know about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I have moved to strike out line 111.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator to make a motion to amend. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the committee will be sustained in reporting this item in the bill. I think if there is any place where an agent should be kept for the protection both of the Government interests and the interests of the Indians, it is at this place. If for no other reason, the reason stated by the Senator in charge of this bill that trespasses upon the Indian lands require the constant intervention of the Government to protect both the Government and the Indiansis sufficient. This Territory we know is coveted land; there are eyes bent upon it with very great eagerness, and if there is not some person there who will stand as a protection between the Indians and persons who desire to obtain possession or to have the right of way through the Territory, the interests of the Government will soon be seriously interfered with. I trust no change will be made in this item. Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, if he will answer it, in what way the Government will be injured by leaving this out? What interest of the Government does this man look after? The Government has no land there and pays nothing to these Indians, as I understand.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Government is in charge of the interests of these Indians; it has set aside this Territory for their possession; and the constant effort is and has been to invade the Territory by railroads and for other purposes well known to all the citizens of this country.

Mr. INGALLS. How could the Indian agent prevent anything of that kind ?

that kind?

Mr. TELLER. If the people of the United States are infringing on this Indian reservation, if it may be so called, though it is not so in fact, I do not think this agent will keep them off. The trouble is the land that the settlers are claiming the right to go on is not where this agent is; it is away beyond that. There is no controversy about the lands that these five tribes are living on; it is the land that they do not occupy, and which is set apart by the Government for the use of other tribes who are to be sent there; and this agent, I think, has nothing in the world to do with that. He is a long distance from the ground in controversy. So far as the Government having the protection and care of these Indians is concerned, there is not any doubt but that if the Government would remove its so-called protecting but that if the Government would remove its so-called protecting care over these semi-civilized Indians they would be a great deal better off. In fact, from my observation, very many of the wild tribes would have been better off if the Government had never undertaken its protection over them. If the Government had left them alone in their native wildness they would have been quite as well off morally, physically, and financially as they are to-day. These Indians do not desire this interference on the part of the Government, and there ought to be a time when they will be independent and can take care of themselves.

The Senator from Kansas says, and he has the means of knowing concerning these Indians, that they do not want this agent there; they say that they do not need the agent. Now, unless somebody can show that the Government needs him for some other purpose than the purpose mentioned by the Senator from Minnesota, it is a waste of $2,000 a year to keep him there.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, one other word. The agent that we keep there, to whom we pay $2,000 a year, has to disburse $75,000 a year. He gives a bond for $50,000. We should have to send an agent there to attend to that alone. That would cost us very likely all that we are paying the regular agent if we should withdraw him. In addition to what I said before, the agent has to gather information about the principal head-men and chiefs the gentlemen talk about, who the principal head-men and chiefs the gentlemen talk about, who come here to Washington and want to run the whole affair themselves. Very often other persons of the tribe deny their right to come and be their representatives, and there are very frequently two parties, one objecting to the other being duly authorized and the other representing themselves as being duly authorized persons to represent them, and we do not know what persons to deal with except by the information and investigation made by this single agent. So, independent of trespasses that are committed, the very fact of having to meet those who are the head-men of these so-called tribes that come here and demand at Washington to be allowed to run the matter to suit themselves requires us to have this agent. The Department have no protection otherwise, the Indians would have none from encroachments, and perhaps none from the very men who are setting themments, and pernaps none from the very men who are setting them-selves up here at Washington as being the men who are to do all their business. The Department would have to employ a man to disburse the payments. They have now payments to make semi-annually amounting to $75,000 a year. They have this agent who gives a bond of $50,000 and only receives $2,000 a year to do all this work. It seems to me that as Congress restored the agency, as the Department demanded it, as the House inserted the provision, and as nobody has shown any better reason except some yarms suspicion that we could shown any better reason except some vague suspicion that we could get along without him, and perhaps there are head-men who think they could get along better without anybody or without any watching either from the Department or any agent—unless some better reason than that can be given, I hope the action of the House and of the Senate committee will be sustained.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the motion to be to strike out the Union agency in the Indian Territory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question.

Mr. ALLISON. We tried that three or four years ago on the recommendation of one of the Commissioners of Indian Affairs, and for one year there was no agent at the Union agency. It turned out that a special agent had to be sent from the Interior Department and various expenditures were incurred, so that the next year it was found necessary to restore that agent. I remember that very well, and the Senator from Kentucky will also remember it. Therefore I think the Senator from Colorado, after a little reflection—
Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Kansas made the motion to amend.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I am amazed that the Senator from Kansas should make this motion, familiar as he must be with this whole question in the Indian Territory.

Mr. TELLER. That is the reason why I supported it, coming from

Mr. ALLISON. I regret exceedingly to be obliged to differ from the Senator from Kansas, but I am quite sure that this is as important as any other agency.

as any other agency.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to state what is the object of keeping this agent there? What does he do?

Mr. ALLISON. It is impossible for me to state in detail what the agent does at this agency. I only know that we have very large transactions with these five civilized tribes, and it is necessary for the Government to have full and complete information with reference to what is going on in the Indian Territory. They have a considerable amount of funds that are distributed from year to year. I take it this agency is quite as important, or nearly as important, as any other agency we have in the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to strike out line 111.

The amendment was rejected. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 129, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the pay of agents of Indian affairs from $101,000 to $99,200. Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has this bill in charge what the agent at the Moquis Pueblo agency does?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator does not seem to be willing to answer.

Mr. BECK. If I understand the question, it is what the agent has

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. I only know that he has seventeen hundred and ninety Indians in his charge, and I suppose he has everything to do that is necessary to be done to take charge of so many Indians.

Mr. TELLER. That cannot possibly be true.

Mr. BECK. That is the official report from the Department.

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference what the report is.

These Moquis Indians are not under the control, properly speaking, of any agents. They are not wild Indians; they are civilized Indians, and have had a state of civilization greater than any other Indians on the continent for three hundred years certainly. They have been agricultural Indians for more than three hundred years, as we know from history. They live in their own towns; they have their own houses, their pueblos. The agent, I am told by those who are familiar with the subject, is an unmitigated nuisance so far as the Indians are concerned in that country. The Government furnishes them are concerned in that country. The Government furnishes them nothing. To most of these Pueblos the Government furnishes nothing at all. There may be an appropriation in this bill; I do not know. They have an agent there who sends highly colored reports, I know, of the efforts he is making toward civilization. These people stand to-day just where they stood when the Spaniards went up there in 1540. More than three hundred and forty years ago they had attained just the same civilization that they have attained to-day. If the Government should see fit to furnish them some means of irrigating their lands or something of that kind, it might be a valuable use of the money; but all the money that is expended in sending an agent to the Moquis or the various Pueblo tribes is money worse than thrown

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read the item "for pay of seventy-six interpreters."

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to make any motion, because I know that it would be subject to the question of order which would be raised on it, but I do desire to call the attention of the Committee on raised on it, but I do desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that they have appropriated too little for Indian interpreters. The interpreters are essential to the successful management of every Indian agency, and yet they have reported just as the bill came from the House, $300 per annum for interpreters. I think the committee should have raised that amount. It is not possible in that section of the country to hire any person who is qualified to act as an interpreter for that money. The result is that the Government has in its employ as interpreters a lot of the very worst characters that are found on the frontier. Instead of employworst characters that are found on the frontier. Instead of employ ing men who will interpret properly and have a proper influence with the Indians, you get men who ought not to be allowed to come into contact with whites or Indians. The best of interpreters, I say, cannot be had for any such amount. I do not make any motion to amend, for I know it would be out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that debate is out of order without an amendment pending.

Mr. TELLER. I will make a motion. I move to insert "$500" wherever it is "$300," with reference to these interpreters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In what line of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. It is found in several lines.

Mr. WITHERS. Does the Senator mean to increase the pay of interpreters all through the bill to $500 ?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I mean to do if I can, but I suppose it will not be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take the first case.

Mr. TELLER. I will take, for instance, the three tribes in Idaho.

In line 141, I move to strike out "$300" and insert "$500;" so as to Three for the tribes in Idaho, namely, at Nez Percés, Lemhi, and Fort Hall agencies, at $500 per annum, $1,500.

Mr. BECK. I raise the point of order that the amendment is increasing an appropriation, is not recommended by a committee or the head of a Department, or submitted in any form required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it is

Mr. TELLER. I knew that the point of order would be raised, and that is the reason why I did not move such an amendment before. I spoke out of order, of course, but I wanted to call attention to the fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will pro-

Mr. BECK. I desire to say, just in this connection, that $300 per annum has been the pay for all these men in the last five years; that no complaint, I understand, has been made, either as to not being able to obtain interpreters or that the pay has not been enough.

They have been serving, at least.

Mr. TELLER. If I may be allowed to say without a motion—or I will make one if necessary—I will say that I know that at one agency where they did not have an interpreter who could interpret, they paid him the $300, whereas they might have got an interpreter for $600, who offered to interpret, and in my judgment if they had had an interpreter it would have saved the Government of the United States many thousands of dollars. I believe to-day that if they had had the right kind of an interpreter at the White River agency (and an interpreter did offer to go to the White River agency (and an interpreter did offer to go to the White River agency for $600 a year) there never would have been any outbreak at that agency. If Mr. U. M. Curtis, the old interpreter, had been there I am satisfied that his influence would have prevented that disaster. But in the interest of economy, attempting to save $300 a year, we got into the trouble which we did, which, I believe, might have been averted by the payment of a fair sum.

Mr. BECK. All I can say is, that from line 189 to line 192, at the close of the appropriations for interpreters, many of whom have to do but very little, there is this provision:

For additional payment of the said interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000.

So that wherever there is an important occasion, where it is neces sary to have an interpreter for important matters, there is $4,000 to be used in that way. The right to distribute it is in the discretion of the Department, so as to get an important interpreter at an important point at the proper time.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 193, before the word "Indian," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" and in line 194 to strike out "nine" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause

For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $3,000 per annum each, $15,000.

Mr. BECK. I desire before any vote is taken upon that amendment to read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject, which explains the necessity for it better than I can:

Mr. BECk. I desire before any vote is taken upon that amendment to read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject, which explains the necessity for it better than I can:

Department of the Interior, Office of Indian Appairs, which explains the necessity for the services of inspectors in the Indian Eureau, I would respectfully say that this bureau disburses about $7,000,000 of the Government and Indian trust funds. It performs this work through seventy-one agents, located at points distant from the bureau which has charge of them. It seems to me the plainest dictate of correct business principles that there should be frequent and thorough examination and inspection of these agents in all their operations. I know of no better precantionary method against both mistakes and disbonesty on the part of agents than the certainty of these frequent inspections. The law used to provide for semi-annual inspections, which I think none too frequent. But with the number of inspectors provided for in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives this is physically impossible, as I think the committee will agree with me in saying if they will for a moment recollect the remote distances to most or all of these agencies, some of them over three thousand miles off and so inaccessible as to require weeks and sometimes more than a month to reach them, and also recollect that to make the inspection of any value time must be taken to make it thorough. In my opinion far more than double the cost of the service will be saved by adopting and rigidly carrying out this system of frequent and thorough inspection of all the agencies. In partial proof of which I refer to the fact that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has thirty-six inspectors to examine and report upon one hundred and thirty-dive collection districts, points with pride to the fact that he has been able to account for every dollar that has been collected in his department during the past year.

In addition to the above considerations I would

Hon. James B. Beck, Chairman of Sub-committee of Senate Committee on Appropriations.

I desire only to add that the Secretary of the Interior came before us and made a still more full and elaborate statement than is even made in this communication, and impressed the committee so thoroughly with the importance of it that we recommended the increase of inspectors from three to five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 196, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For necessary traveling expenses of three Indian inspectors, $5,000.

Mr. TELLER. The word "three" ought to be stricken out and "five" inserted in line 195; so as to read:

For necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors, $5,000.

Mr. BECK. That is right.
Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out "three" and insert "five."
The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and in the appropriations for the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, line 231, read the following clause:

For pay of carpenter, farmer, blacksmith, miller, and engineer, as per same article, $4,500; in all, $40,600.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill if the Cheyennes and Arapahoes that we appropriate for under this sub-heading are that portion of those tribes located in the Indian Territory †
Mr. BECK. They are those in the Indian Territory.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I desire to ask the Senator as to the provision for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes on page 22, where those Indians are located?

Indians are located?

Mr. BECK. I am advised that the Northern Arapahoes are in Wyoming, and that some of the Cheyennes are moving down into the Indian Territory with the other Cheyennes.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the treaty proclaimed on the 25th of August, 1868, provides for the payment to each member of the tribes consenting thereto, wherever they may be located, of the sum of $10 for each Indian roaming or $20 for each Indian engaged in agriculture. I inquire why that provision is not inserted as well in this portion of the bill now under consideration as on page 22?

why that provision is not inserted as well in this portion of the blir now under consideration as on page 22?

Mr. BECK. What treaty is the Senator reading from?

Mr. PLUMB. The treaty proclaimed on the 25th day of August, 1863, between the United States and the Northern Cheyennes and the Arapahoes, which provides—

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment? Is he now speaking in reference to the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes of the Northern Cheyennes. ment? Is he now speaking in reference to the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, the provision for which is found on page 22 and the treaty referred to there, or is he speaking in regard to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes mentioned on page 10 of the bill? The treaty of 1867 refers to those on page 10, and the treaty of 1868 to the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes on page 22. If he asks in regard to them I can answer, because we examined that.

Mr. PLUMB. This treaty which I have here, which was proclaimed on the 25th day of August, 1868, seems to apply to both the tribes of Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes and provides that they shall be located either at the mouth of Medicine Lodge Creek or at a reservation specified on the Missouri River; but the provision, as I under-tion specified on the Missouri River; but the provision, as I understand, applies to all the members of both those tribes without reference to the particular place where they may locate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to move an amendment to this provision. If this is intended to provide solely and only for so many of these Cheyenia to and Arapahoes as are in the Indian Territory, then I desire to call the attention of the committee to what I think is a substantial omission attention of the committee to what I think is a substantial omission here with reference to the treaty rights of these Indians, and which is of considerable importance in view of what occurred a couple of years ago at their outbreak. If, however, the Senator is entirely satisfied that that is intended for some other Indians, I will save my amendment and move it to that portion of the bill found on page 22.

Mr. BECK. I suppose it would come in there better.

Mr. PLUMB. Then, do I understand the Senator to say that the Cheyennes and Arapahoes there mentioned are not the Indian Territory Indians mentioned on page 10?

Mr. BECK. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes mentioned on page 10 are the Indian Territory Indians.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I desire to offer an amendment to line 231, which reads, "For pay of carpenter, farmer, blacksmith, miller, and engineer," &c., by striking out the word "engineer" and inserting instead of "farmer" the words "three farmers."

I desire to say, before the Senator raises any point of order upon this, that there are about five thousand Indians at that agency. An inspection of that agency last summer by myself in connection with some other members of this body satisfied me, as the agent had already been satisfied, that one farmer was practically of no use there.

A large majority of the Indians are willing to undertake some form of agricultural pursuit. Many of them are willing to plow and to of agricultural pursuit. Many of them are willing to plow and to plant. A much greater number are willing to undertake the care of stock, cattle, and horses, but especially of cattle. It is exceedingly desirable that they may have an opportunity of doing this, and that they may have instruction to enable them to do it; but I appeal to all those who have special knowledge on that point that the single farmer now provided there is almost absolutely without use. He cannot in any reasonable way subserve the interests of these Indians in the direction for which he is appointed. One farmer is, as I said, practically of no use. Half a dozen men there could take up the question of instruction of these Indians in agriculture and in the care of stock not only to advantage to the Indian, but to advantage to the Government, because in a very short time if this policy were prop-of stock not only to advantage to the Indian, but to advantage to the Government, because in a very short time if this policy were properly pursued the Indians would become practically self-supporting. If we are to do anything at all for them, I think it should be in the direction of putting them on a self-supporting basis. I think also that the engineer provided by the treaty and by the bill is of no use whatever. I think he is not employed in point of fact, but that the money is practically diverted to something else. For that reason I think there should be no engineer. I desire simply to make the first amendment a motion to strike out the word "engineer," in line 232. No engineer is employed at that agency, and there is no necessity for one.

Mr. BECK. In looking over those treaties I find that the tenth article of the treaty made on the 28th of October, 1867, provides that each person shall have—

A suit of good, substantial, woolen clothing, consisting of coat, pantaloons, flannel shirt, hat, and a pair of home-made socks.

And for that purpose we provide in this bill:

For purchase of clothing, as per same article-

The tenth article of the treaty of October 28, 1867fourteen thousand dollars.

fourteen thousand dellars.

That being about the amount we have been paying them since 1870, when the treaty went into effect. The Secretary has been before the committee, I desire to say in this connection, and since his estimate was made he assumes that clothes have gone up, say, 40 per cent., and he demands an increase to that extent. The committee have disagreed with him in part, but have inserted a provision which I will refer to hereafter, in order to enable him to comply with that article of the treaty. The same treaty requires us to pay the Indians $20,000 a year. We have done that in this bill.

Mr. TELLER. To what treaty does the Senator refer?

a year. We have done that in this bill.

Mr. TELLER. To what treaty does the Senator refer?

Mr. BECK. The treaty with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes of October 28, 1867, found in volume 15 of the Statutes at Large, page 593.

Mr. TELLER. That was made with the same Indians who made

Mr. TELLER. That was made with the same Indians who made the treaty of 1868?

Mr. BECK. No; the 1868 Indians were those in Wyoming Territory, the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, I understand.

Mr. TELLER. But these are the same. They are all Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes. There are no Southern Cheyennes and

Mr. BECK. There are Cheyennes and Arapahoes not known as

Mr. BECK. There are Cheyennes and Arapahoes not known as Northern Cheyennes.

Mr. TELLER. There is no such thing as Southern Cheyennes known to the people in the West, who know the Indians as well as anybody down here. They have been known perhaps since they have gone to the Indian Territory as the Southern Cheyennes, but I have some little personal knowledge of the Cheyenne Indians.

Mr. BECK. I have the treaties in my hand, and here is a treaty between the United States and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe tribes of Indians October 28, 1867, from which I was reading. Now, the Senator from Kansas I think has the treaty of 1868, the title of which, I believe—though I have not seen it—reads "with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes." Will the Senator from Kansas tell me whether that is so or not?

whether that is so or not?

Mr. PLUMB. That is true, perhaps.

Mr. BECK. That is the fact. There are two treaties, one with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and the other with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes as I understand. I have no doubt, as I have said time and again, that many of the treaties are absolutely ridicsaid time and again, that many of the treaties are absolutely rindulous, but they are treaties that we are obliged to carry out. The motion now is to strike out the word "engineer." This treaty provides that the United States agree to furnish annually to the Indians a physician, teachers, carpenters, a miller, engineer, farmer, blacksmith, and to make appropriations for the support of those people.

Mr. TELLER. Is there not a provision in the treaty that the Gov-

mr. BECK. No, sir; but the Committee on Appropriations, for the very purpose of guarding against that, added as an amendment to the House bill, on page 53, line 8, section 5, this prevision, to which we shall ask the Senate to agree:

And that the several appropriations herein made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the said tribes respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

The object of that provision is to get clear of many of these provisions with regard to engineers and others, wherever they are useless, as I have no doubt in many instances they are; but being treaty stipas I have no doubt in many instances they are; but being treaty stipulations we had to comply with them, and we made the provision for the benefit of the Indians that the President, with their consent, might make the change and report to Congress what changes he had made. That gets clear of the difficulty. The Senator from Kansas moves to strike out "engineer," that person being provided for in the treaty. If there is no necessity for the engineer, we get clear of it by the provision I have just read allowing the tribe and the President to do it.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to say to the Senator from Kentucky that over a thousand of these Indians, Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes which are mentioned in this second treaty, the treaty of 1868, are now located in the Indian Territory at the same agency where the Indians located in the Indian Territory at the same agency where the Indians are also located that he says are provided for en page 10. If that bethe case, those thousand Indians are just as much entitled to this annual payment of $10 for Indians roaming and $20 for Indians engaged in agriculture as they would be if they were located on the Missouri River. This has this practical effect so far as I am specially concerned. I think it was determined, I think there was no difficulty in arriving at the determination on the part of members of the St. in arriving at the determination on the part of members of the Senin arriving at the determination on the part of members of the Senate charged with investigating the subject, that the Indians located in the Indian Territory had not had paid to them and provided for them what their treaty called for, and that the lack of this payment of $20 and $10 per head respectively was a portion of the complaint of the Indians. I think also that there was a very serious lack in the amount appropriated for clothing. I think that the sum of $14,000 does not comply with the treaty requirement upon that subject. At all events it did not comply with it so far as the treaty was concerned with reference to the Northern Chavennes and Aranahoes, a large porwith reference to the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, a large por-tion of whom are now located in the Indian Territory and entitled just as much to their rights per capita under this treaty as though-they were located on the Missouri River.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me to say a word there, the $14,000 allowed in lines 226 and 227 for the purchase of clothing is found to be the same amount which has been allowed to these Indians for a number of years, since perhaps 1870; but fearing that it would not be enough we have added on page 49, beginning at line 1193, the following words:

For additional clothing not specifically appropriated for under the treaties with the various tribes, to be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in cases where necessary, $60,000; and he shall cause reports to be made to Congress at its next session thereafter of his action under this provision.

It was to enable the Secretary of the Interior to meet the case, and this was one of the cases spoken of perhaps more particularly than any other, that this $60,000 was given to the Secretary of the Interior to clothe them, because we all agree that it is cheaper to feed and clothe them than it is to fight them. We have endeavored in every form that we could to get along in compliance with treaties of this character, which no man can say ought to be made now in the changed condition of affairs, but they are upon us and we are doing the best we can with them. We are putting in provisions everywhere to en-able the Secretary of the Interior to do with the money what is best for the Indians and at the same time to be as economical as possible. I hope the Senator from Kansas will observe that with each of the treaty stipulations we have endeavored to comply faithfully, and have endeavored by other provisions to get around the hardship or the want of the use of them by general powers given to the President in the one case and the Secretary of the Interior in the other.

I desire to say furthermore that we called the Secretary of the In-terior before us, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the chief terior before us, the Commissioner of Indian Alfairs, and the chief clerk of the Indian Department, and they assured us this was the best thing to be done. We could not go over every treaty and see every item and say whether it was exactly correct or not, but we had assurance from them that they had examined them with great care. We examined them as well as it was possible for us to do ourselves. They went over them in part with us. We believed that if we complied with the stipulations of the treaties accurately, dropping wherever the treaties are ended and adding such other ways in some the plied with the stipulations of the treaties accurately, dropping wherever the treaties are ended and adding such other provisions as will prevent them from suffering, it was all that could be done.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator what he is to do with those thousand Northern Cheyennes who are now down there, if the statement made by the Senator from Kansas is correct? What is to be done with them? Are they to receive their $10 per capita there or not? The provision on page 22 is for those still living in the northern part of the country, in Wyoming.

Mr. BECK. I can only answer to this extent: On page 22 will be found these words:

found these words:

Second of ten installments, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for each Indian engaged in agriculture and roaming—

We struck out the number of Indians and added the words "and roaming"- in the purchase of such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper, as per sixth article of treaty of May 10, 1868, $35,000.

1868, $35,000.

We are advised by the Department that that $35,000 under that article of the treaty is expended between the Northern Cheyennes and those in the Indian Territory in proportion to the number which are now at the various points; and also the $12,000 which is the "twelfth of thirty installments for the purchase of clothing, as per sixth article of the treaty of May 10, 1868." That is also divided so that those who have gone to the Indian Territory obtain their part of it, and those who remain with the Arapahoes in Wyeming obtain their part of it, and the division is equitably made.

Mr. TELLER. But what you call the Southern Cheyennes get nothing.

nothing.

Mr. BECK. I do not call them Southern Cheyennes; I call them the Cheyennes that are now in the Indian Territory. There are there at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe agency, 5,596 people. The number is very large.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say a word about the Southern Cheyennes, not as a matter of very great consequence, but as my statement is called in question. All of these Cheyenne Indians are Sioux Indians belonging to that family, as did originally the Comanches, who broke from the Sioux about a hundred years ago and went south. These were called Southern Cheyennes when I went to that country where they roam, and were denizens of Colorado, running south then to about the line of New Mexico and north clear to British Columbia, or as far as they were allowed to go. Some years afterward the Government made a treaty with them. I do not remember when they went south, but it is within my day, since I have been in the West. Since that they are called perhaps Southern Cheyennes, to distinguish them from those who did not go. They are all parts of the same tribe and the same family.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 231 I move to strike out the word "farmer" and insert "three farmers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, in the opinion of the Chair, is out of order.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that it is out of order:

Mr. BECK. It is in violation of treaty stipulation as well.
Mr. PLUMB. I then desire to move an amendment, to comply with article 8 of this treaty, which is as follows:

When the head of a family or lodge shall have selected lands and received his certificate as above directed, and the agent shall be satisfied that he intends in good faith to commence cultivating the soil for a living, he shall be entitled to receive seeds and agricultural implements for the first year, not exceeding in value $100; and for each succeeding year he shall continue to farm for a period of three years—more he shall be entitled to receive seeds and implements as aforesaid, not exceeding in value $25.

The remaining portion of the article provides further that "when-ever more than one hundred persons shall enter upon the cultivation of the soil, a second blacksmith shall be provided, with such iron, or the soil, a second blacksmith shall be provided, with such fron, steel, and other material as may be needed."

This is a very material part of the treaty as affecting the welfare of these Indians and as affecting their future relations with the United States Government. They cannot farm unless they have the seeds and implements necessary to do it. It is just as much an essential part of the treaty that they shall have these articles as that they shall have any other thing therein provided for. If these Indians are ever to be put in the position of caring for themselves it must be by their acquiring habits of industry and skill which will enable them to cultivate the soil in connection with other things. To accomplish that purpose it seems to me that this portion of the treaty ought to be as strictly regarded as any other, and that some appropriation, I do not care how small to begin with, should be made to enable the Secretary of the Interior to supply seeds and agricultural implements to such of these Indians as shall choose to use them. I know that many of these Indians desire to enter upon the pursuit of farming; many of them have become, measurably at least, satisfied with their lot. They know that they must soon come to a point where they will cast off the support of the Government; and that class of them is year by year growing larger. If properly aided by the United States authorities and by the advice and experience of farmers properly skilled, appointed by the Government for that purpose, they will soon put themselves in a condition where by the tillage of the soil they will become self-supporting. I therefore move to insert, after the word "dollars," in line 233: shall have any other thing therein provided for. If these Indians are word "dollars," in line 233:

For the purchase of seeds and agricultural implements, as provided in article 8 of the treaty with said Indians, $5,000.

Mr. BECK. I shall make the point of order on that, Mr. President. Mr. PLUMB. That is to carry out a treaty obligation. Mr. BECK. To what treaty does the Senator from Kansas refer f Mr. PLUMB. It is provided for in article 8. Mr. BECK. I ask what treaty is referred to f Mr. PLUMB. The treaty of 1868, page 133 of the volume before me.

Mr. BECK. There was no such treaty made with these Indians.
Mr. PLUMB. Of the Indians described in this treaty, one thousand and more are now at some place in the Indian Territory, with these other Indians. Wherever they are, as I said before, they are entitled to receive the treaty benefits. Whether they are on the Missouri River or in the Indian Territory, the treaty ought to be regarded as equally obligatory upon the United States Government, and more especially, as I am prompted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to say, since they were taken there against their consent and

Mr. BECK. I have only to say that we are now dealing with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes under the treaty of October 28, 1867. Provisions are made from lines 221 to 233 to carry out that treaty. Now the Senator from Kansas seeks to amend by inserting the provisions of another treaty made with another tribe, because, he says, some of the persons with whom the treaty was made have moved down and are now a part of this tribe who have treaty provisions with us of October 28, 1867.

Mr. TELLER. They are the same tribe.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator give the date of the treaty he is

Mr. BECK. The date of the treaty I am speaking of is October

Mr. DAWES. That is the date of the treaty the Senator from

Mr. DAWES. That is the date of the treaty the Schator Roll Kansas has been reading from.
Mr. BECK. I understand that it is not.
Mr. DAWES. It is so in this book. The title of the treaty is:
"Treaty between the United States of America and the Cheyenneand Arapahoe tribes of Indians. Concluded October 28, 1867. Ratification advised July 25, 1868. Proclaimed August 19, 1868."

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble is that when we have been referring to the same treaty we have referred to it by different dates, the date of conclusion and ratification with the Indians, respectively.

Mr. TELLER. That explains it. Mr. DAWES. I will show the Senator. That is the one [indicating] the Senator from Kansas is reading from.

Mr. BECK. That is the one he read from before, [indicating.] I was right. But the Senate can pass upon the amendment. I desire only to add that we have provided here for all that the Department estimated for, all that is in that treaty that they say they required.

The House made a careful examination of it. The House made a careful examination of it.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kentucky is mistaken about the treaty. The treaty which I showed to the Senator is the one from which the Senator from Kansas read.

Mr. EATON. He did not give the right date; he gave the other

Mr. TELLER. He gave the date of the ratification.
Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kansas gave the date of the treaty with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, which I showed to the Senator from Massachusetts on the following page. That is all I know about it; but I care nothing about that.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas read from the treaty which the Senator from Kentucky says is the treaty under which the appropriation is being made. The Senator read from that treaty.

Mr. PLUMB. I spoke of this treaty.

Mr. BECK. I will say no more except that we have given all that the Department demanded and that the treaty seemed to require. The clause was satisfactory to the Department, agreed to by the House, clause was satisfactory to the Department, agreed to by the House, not changed by the Senate committee; and independent of the two provisions which I read, one of which gives $60,000 to the Secretary of the Interior to purchase clothing, if there should not be enough, and another which authorizes the President to change the appropriation for millers, engineers, and farmers and other useful objects, on page 44 in the bill, from line 1064 to 1067, is a provision:

For education and civilization of the Indians within the limits of the late Central superintendency—

including clothing, food, and lodging for the children attending school, $18,000.

There is another general provision out of which I understand seeds, agricultural implements, and everything in that way that those Indians want and will attempt to use is also furnished, and there is another small fund, arising from the proceeds of the sale of some land, which is also added to purchase agricultural implements. From that in one way and another, and very harmoniously, if you please, they are all provided for.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand that to apply to these

Mr. BECK. I do; a part of it goes to these Indians. So I am ad-

Mr. TELLER. That is, if the Department sees fit.
Mr. BECK. If the Department see fit, and they are doing it, so

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BECK. No, I do not. I insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of order, of course, is not debatable. The Chair is of opinion, however, that an amendment which does carry out the provisions of any treaty is in order on this bill. There is a question of fact whether the amendment be to execute the course of the cour bill. There is a question of fact whether the amendment be to execute any provision of a treaty, and if the Chair and the Senate cannot agree upon it, the Chair will have to ask the Senate to construe it.

Mr. TELLER. I guess there is no issue of fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks an amendment is in order to carry out the provisions of any treaty.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator who has the bill in charge says the

Mr. TELLER. The Senator who has the bill in charge says the committee have given all the Department asked, and therefore we ought to stop. If it is the duty of the Senate and of the Honse to carry out existing treaties, and the Department come here recommending a bill, or furnish estimates and statements of the amounts they want, which do not fully carry out a treaty, it is our duty to put it in. I know a great many instances where the treaties have been violated through the oversight and inattention and inexcusable neglect of the Department of the Interior, not simply now but within the last twenty years. There are a hundred such cases that might be cited. Here is a clear provision of this treaty, a clear and explicit statement as to what these Indians should have. The bill has provided for clothing, it has provided for engineers, it has provided for millers, but the provision for seeds and things of that character the committee have sent it to leave out of the bill. The Senator from Kentucky thinks that it is a perfect answer to an amendment to say that the Department have a perfect answer to an amendment to say that the Department have not asked for it. It seems to me that it is our duty to put the provision in. If we are to attempt to live up to these treaties at all, if we are not to abrogate them absolutely and pay no attention to them, we should follow them not simply in the letter as to a few items but as to all. It is a great deal more important that the Indians should be recorded and accordingly and pay no attention to them, have seeds and agricultural implements than that they should have an engineer to run an engine when there is not one in that vicinity at all, and never will be perhaps, or not for many years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb.]

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be read again.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.
The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 233, it is pro-

For the purchase of seeds and implements, as provided in article 8 of the treaty of 1868 with said Indians, $5,000.

Mr. EATON. As the Chair has decided that an amendment to provide for any treaty obligation is entirely in order, I shall be glad to have that section of the treaty read under which this amendment is

Mr. DAWES. A read from the treaty which is found in the Book of Indian Treaties, on page 129, headed "Treaty between the United States of America and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe tribes of Indians; concluded October 28, 1867; ratification advised July 25, 1868; proclaimed August 19, 1868," and on the one hundred and thirty-third page of the book, article 8 of this treaty, I will read:

ARTICLE VIII.

When the head of a family or lodge shall have selected lands and received his certificate as above directed, and the agent shall be satisfied that he intends in good faith to commence cultivating the soil for a living, he shall be entitled to receive seeds and agriculture implements for the first year, not exceeding in value $100; and for each succeeding year he shall continue to farm, for a period of three years more, he shall be entitled to receive seeds and implements as aforesaid, not exceeding in value $25.

And it is further stipulated that such persons as commence farming shall receive instruction from the farmer herein provided for; and whenever more than one hundred persons shall enter upon the cultivation of the soil, a second blacksmith shall be provided, with such iron, steel, and other material as may be needed.

Mr. EATON. Now, I apprehend that the Chair will have no hesitation in saying that this amendment is out of order, for the treaty provision certainly does not apply to anything that may be done in the year 1880. It relates to what might transpire from 1867 to 1871, four years. Mr. WITHERS.

And, besides, the amount does not correspond.

Mr. WITHERS. And, besides, the amount does not correspond.
Mr. EATON. Not at all.
Mr. PLUMB. This is a continuing provision plainly. It is not expected that all these Indians will take their certificates and go to farming the first year; in point of fact they have not done so; and it applies as long as there are Indians who shall take up farming that have not heretofore done it.
Mr. PATON. It does not say that

Mr. EATON. It does not say that.

Mr. PLUMB. It says the Indian shall be furnished with agricultural implements "the first year." What "first year?" The first year he farms, undoubtedly, "and for each succeeding year he shall continue to farm," plainly showing that the first limit of time applies to the act of the Indian in commencing to farm—

For a period of three years more he shall be entitled to receive seeds and implements as aforesaid, not exceeding in value $25.

Now, so long as there is any Indian of this tribe who has not com-menced to farm, and has not therefore availed himself of this article menced to farm, and has not therefore availed himself of this article of the treaty, he is entitled to receive what this article provides for. The fact is, because these implements and seeds have not been provided, that very few of these Indians have done what the treaty contemplated they should do, to wit, become self-supporting. One of the difficulties the agent has had to labor under has been the fact that he has not had these implements and seeds to offer these inducements to do what this article, as I said before, contemplated they should do, to wit, learn farming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate is entirely out of order except to ascertain the question of fact whether this amendment is to carry out the provisions of the existing treaty.

The eighth article of the treaty reads as follows:

When the head of a family or lodge shall have selected lands and received his certificate as above directed, and the agent shall be satisfied that he intends in good faith to commence cultivating the soil for a living, he shall be entitled to receive seeds and agricultural implements for the first year, not exceeding in value $100; and for each succeeding year he shall continue to farm, for a period of three years more, he shall be entitled to receive seeds and implements as aforesaid, not exceeding in value $25.

Now the Chair cannot say that the amendment is intended to carry out this provision of the treaty unless the amendment is restricted to the terms of it. The Chair is unable to tell whether it is a provision which entitles these Indians to the money or not.

Mr. BECK. There has never been a selection made or a certificate granted to the Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair, for the purpose of set-thing the question, will rule the amendment as offered out of order.

Mr.INGALLS. I suggest to my colleague that the difficulty can be obviated by adding "subject to the provisions and limitations of the treaty." Of course I agree with the Chair in saying that there is a question of fact to be decided before the question of order can be determined. In fact, there are two questions; first, whether the treaty itself provides for an appropriation, and, second, whether the conditions have been reached that render it available. I would suggest to my colleague that he amend his amendment by adding "subject to the provisions and limitations of the treaty," which of course would make it in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I thought I had covered that point by the words "as provided in article 8," but if that is not sufficiently specific—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as offered, is ruled out of order. The Senator from Kansas can propose another amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I move the amendment adding the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the treaty," and I propose to insert also, after "$5,000," the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary," in order that this shall not be an absolute appropriation of that amount. Then it is simply adapting itself to the circumstances as they arise under the observation of the Secretary of the Interior or his agent who is charged with the duty of furnishing these articles to these Indians. I offer it in that shape.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported as new offered.

now offered.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 233, it is pro-

For the purchase of seeds and implements as provided in article 8 of the treaty of 1868 for the said Indians, subject to the provisions and limitations of the treaty, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order against the amendment still.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order against the amendment still. That modification does not help it at all.

Mr. INGALLS. In order to show that this appropriation ought to be made, that it is in accordance with treaty stipulations, and that it has been in the mind of the Interior Department, I would call attention to the report of the Secretary of the Interior made to the present Congress, in which there is a statement showing the present liabilities of the United States to Indian tribes under treaty stipulations, and on page 296, under the head of "Cheyennes and Arapahoes," is this statement of the number of installments yet due under existing treaty stipulations: treaty stipulations:

Three installments, for the purchase of seeds and of agricultural implements. Two installments, of $2,500 each, due.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that refer to this treaty?
Mr. INGALLS. Certainly it refers to this treaty.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to suggest on this point of order in view of what the Senator from Kansas has just read from an official report made to Congress, that under this treaty there are two installments now called for by this seeds provision that is referred to in article 8; and that being our information, it does appear to me that this proposition, as it now stands, to provide the means for carrying that out in the way the treaty provides, subject to its limitations, must be in order.

must be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment as now proposed is in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, on the question of fact I happen to have some little information, having been during the past summer at this agency. The agent there is making every effort he can, in good faith I am satisfied, to induce the Indians there to go upon lands and make farms. The number of Indians altogether is about five thousand, and they have what they call farms, from three acres perhaps up to forty acres, to a number approaching, I think, one hundred. There is great difficulty in getting them to go on in that direction and cultivate new lands, growing out of various causes, among which are There is great difficulty in getting them to go on in that direction and cultivate new lands, growing out of various causes, among which are these: There is one man at the agency called a farmer, who has a great many duties to perform, and among others it is his duty to aid any Indians who desire to start a farm; but his time is so taken up that it is utterly impossible for him to perform that duty as it should be performed. He can go out with an Indian to a new piece of land, help him hitch up his wild ponies to a plow, and stay with him long enough to draw two or three furrows across a piece of land, and he is compelled then to go somewhere also and the poor Indian is left to enough to draw two or three furrows across a piece of land, and he is compelled then to go somewhere else, and the poor Indian is left to wrestle with the problem before him as best he can.

Another trouble is the want of seeds and agricultural implements. I was not aware myself whether they were provided for by the treaty or not; but I was perfectly well convinced in my own mind from my observation there that if it is expected anything shall be done in this direction, it must be done by appropriating money for that purpose. You cannot do it otherwise. The fact exists that it is necessary unless we abandon the idea of getting these people to make farms; and if it is required by treaty, it makes the obligation to do it much stronger than it otherwise would be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plums.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. HAMLIN. The yeas and nays have been called for, and the fact of a quorum can be ascertained in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recollects the rule to be that if it appears from proceedings in the Senate that there is not a quorum present the Secretary shall call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the rule certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. Plums.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say for the information of gentlemen who were not here when the amendment was offered that the Senate Committee on Appropriations have made no change in the bill as it came from the House in regard to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and the House has given, on page 10, lines 221 to 234, every dollar that the Department asked to carry out the treaty now called to our notice. We are now asked to give $5,000 more for seeds to be supplied to one tribe. We have made other provisions in the bill for fear there was not enough in these items. We have given them $18,000 to aid in the education and civilization of the Indians, to be used at the old the education and civilization of the Indians, to be used at the old Central superintendency, a portion of which goes to this tribe, as we are advised by the Department. They furnished seeds and agricultural implements out of that fund. For fear they should not still have enough to buy clothing because of the increased price, we have given the Secretary of the Interior $60,000 to use as he pleases to aid the Indians. Knowing that they did not have need for a miller, blacksmith, engineer, &c., as provided for by the treaty, we have reported an amendment saying:

And that the several appropriations herein made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the said tribes respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

So that wherever they have no use for millers, engineers, &c., and the money is provided by treaty for them, that money may be taken and used to buy agricultural implements and seeds, with their consent. Now the question is, will the Senate go on and add to this bill what the Department does not want, what the Indians are supplied with already, out of money now furnished? Will they ofte this money for seeds which the Indians are only entitled to "when the head of a family or a lodge shall have selected lands and received his certificate as above directed," when there is not one of them that has selected land or received a certificate, and there is no demand for it by the Indians, no communication from any Department, no recommendation from any committee? If the Senate are now going to throw away the money of the Government because somebody wants more for this purpose, let them vote for the amendment. for this purpose, let them vote for the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. As I understand, the Department do not ask for this money

Mr. BECK.

this money?
Mr. BECK. They do not.
Mr. KERNAN. And the Indians do not ask for this money?
Mr. BECK. They do not.
Mr. KERNAN. Then I do not see why we should vote it.
Mr. KIRKWOOD. I confess I do not understand precisely the theory upon which the Committee on Appropriations make appropriations. I presumed, until recently, that they were fully informed of the wants and necessities of the different Departments of the Government, and that they made the appropriations in accordance with the information they thus had; but it seems to me the rule now is that the appropriations are made never a penny beyond the estimates submitted by the Departments, but often for less amounts than are submitted by the Departments, and it seems to be a perfect answer submitted by the Departments, but often for less amounts than are submitted by the Departments, and it seems to be a perfect answer in the estimation of the Committee on Appropriations to any proposition to enlarge the appropriation that the particular Department has not asked for any more than they propose to give.

Well, if that be the true rule, it is a very convenient thing for Congress, because it relieves Congress of all responsibility. If the result of it shall be that any particular portion of the public service suffers, then Congress can throw itself back upon the statement that the Department did not ask for anything more, and we were not presumed to know anything but what the Department told us, and therefore the fault is not with Congress, but with the particular Department. If that is the rule, it is a convenient rule undoubtedly. But if the knowledge was to come to the Committee on Appropriations that by oversight, or mistake, or something else, a particular Department has not estimated for as much as the public wants require, it seems to me, with all deference to that committee, that we ought as a Congress to say that we know something as well as the Department does, that we know a particular want requires a particular appropriation, and that because that is so we make that appropriation. Senators older in service here than I ought to know better than I what should be done in a case of this kind; but this, it appears to me, should be the done in a case of this kind; but this, it appears to me, should be the rule.

In this case the Senator from Kansas says that a treaty requires that this appropriation shall be made. I do not know whether that is so or not, and therefore do not say anything about it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Secretary of the Interior says so.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well. As is known to some other members of the Senate, I was at the place where this agency is, during the last summer, as one of a special committee raised by the Senate to go there for a particular purpose, to look into the condition of these Indians, among other things. Every year some of these Indians, abandoning their old habits, are going out and making what they call farms—three, five, ten, and twenty acre farms. I have always understood it to be the policy of the Government to encourage them in doing that thing. I understand it to be the policy of the Government now to encourage them in doing that thing. And yet how can they make a farm without a plow? How can they make a farm without a harrow? How can they make a farm without seeds to put in the ground to raise crops from? I do not know how, and yet I know something about farming. If I were turned out upon the prairie without plow or harrow or farming implement or seeds, and told to farm without them, although I profess to have some skill in that business, I should be at a serious loss. And are we not running the risk of asking of these wild Indians what we cannot do ourselves? And if we ask them to do that, are we not asking an unreasonable thing?

The want exists there. Gentlemen tell me the treaty provides that that want should be supplied. I do not say how that is, because I do not know; but the want does exist. If in consequence of a failure to perform a treaty obligation here, there should be an outbreak of Indians, what should we say? There are five thousand of them there, and we are keeping steadily within a mile or a mile and a half of the agency four or five or six companies of troops. Why? Just because we fear an outbreak. Part of your Army is kept there and must be kept there year after year to prevent the possibility of an outbreak. If an outbreak shall come, then the newspapers will be full of the statement that our Government does not discharge its treaty obligations, and we shall hear it here in the Congress of the United States tions, and we shall hear it here in the Congress of the United States tions, and we shall hear it here in the Congress of the United States that the Government does not discharge its treaty obligations; and when we get down to the point of the matter we shall find that the reason why the Government has not done it is because Congress has not given the money with which to do it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I voted on the rising vote against this amendment. I did so because I find no obligation on the part of the Government anywhere to make this appropriation. It is true that the eighth article of this treaty does provide that after the Indians have complied with article 6 of the treaty we shall do certain things for them. There is no evidence that I have been able to find, either in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or in the report of the agent at this agency, that any such state of things exists. report of the agent at this agency, that any such state of things exists.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he was present when I read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior a statement showing the present liabilities of the United States to Indian tribes under treaty stipulations?

Mr. ALLISON. I was present and heard that statement read and had the book before me.

Mr. INGALLS. The Secretary of the Interior states that under ar-

Mr. INGALLS. The Secretary of the Interior states that dided atticle 8, to which my colleague has referred, there are now due two installments of $2,500 each under that express provision

Mr. ALLISON. I read that statement. I have it on my desk before me. I agree with the other Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] fore me. I agree with the other Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] that this treaty is a continuing treaty; it is not a treaty that is complied with in one, two, or three years; and therefore that tabular statement in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does great injustice to these Indians. I hold with the Senator from Kansas, the colleague of the Senator who just interrupted me, that when one hundred Indians shall undertake farming we are obliged by this treaty to commence making these appropriations for their use, and that these appropriations shall continue for four years. But how do we know what evidence is there before the Senate that one single we know, what evidence is there before the Senate, that one single one of these Indians has taken land under the sixth article of this one of these findans has taken land under the sixth article of this treaty for which we are making this appropriation?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Iowa will excuse me; but the statement of the Secretary of the Interior is not an injustice, as he says, to the Indian. It does not go against his theory that this is a continuing obligation; but, on the contrary, it expressly declares that there has been a compliance with the treaty by a sufficient number in the land of the same and the same article of this declaration. of Indians to render two installments already due. That is his dec-

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague said a moment ago, after a visit to these Indians, that he did see there some evidences of farming. I hold in my hand the last report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and in that report I find a detailed statement of the Indian agent at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe agency, and I find there reported of acres of ground cultivated, one thousand and sixty-four; acres of prairie broken by Indians during the last year, sixty-seven. Now it is proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] to appropriate $5,000 for the purchase of seeds at an agency where there are one thousand acres of land broken. The Senator from Kansas may have knowedge that during this year these Indians propose to break farms to the extent of several thousand acres, which would justify an appropriation of $5,000 for seeds.

Mr. PLUMB. The objection then is to the amount and not to the appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no objection to this amendment if the Sen-Mr. ALLISON. I make no objection to this amendment if the Senator from Kansas can fairly show that we owe the Indians anything under this treaty, or that we can advance their progress in agriculture or in the mechanic arts by making this appropriation. I shall in that case be willing to make it and to make it ireely, but by simply making this appropriation we shall not discharge an obligation which we shall owe to them in future when they in fact commence farming. That is my objection to it. If these Indians three years or five years from now shall begin farming at this agency, we shall be obliged, as I understand it, under the treaty to make an appropriation to each I understand it under the treaty, to make an appropriation to each head of a family of $100, and it will not be a sufficient answer to say that this year when they were not in fact engaged in agriculture we made this appropriation in advance. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations seem to think that they have fairly answered this application for an appropriation by two statements; first that the Indians themselves do not ask it, and next that the Indian Bureau does not ask it. Now look at this treaty and see what is the spirit of it:

If any individual, belonging to said tribes of Indians, or legally incorporated with them, being the head of a family, shall desire to commence farming—

He shall be entitled to the help of the Government by the furnishing to him of plows and seeds. The committee are waiting for an Indian to send them word here to Congress that he is desirous to commence farming before they will move toward providing him with the implements for farming and the seeds. They say the Indians have not made application to Congress for any aid in commencing farming, and the Indian Bureau has not made any application for it because the Indian has not. The Indian has made no application to Congress for this aid. The Indian Bureau is not moved to ask Congress to make this appropriation for the reason that the Indian himself has not asked for it.

Here are a thousand Northern Cheyennes taken down to the Indian Here are a thousand Northern Cheyennes taken down to the Indian Territory by force and put upon the soil there, and we are feeding them day by day just precisely as we feed the Army, with daily rations, and cover them with clothing supplied by this Government. They are a thousand out of fourteen hundred; the other four hundred are still up in their homes among the hills of Dakota self-supporting, taking care of themselves, without one dollar of expense to the Government. The experiment of the Government with this tribe is that one thousand out of the fourteen hundred it has taken down to the Indian Territory it is obliged by an appropriation year after year to feed and clothe until such time as an inspiration, unawakened by the Government or by the agents or by the farmers, shall irresist-ibly come over an Indian to insist upon it that he be a farmer! That is the policy of the Government!

Mr. ALLISON. Does not the Senator know that if this appropriation is made not one dollar of it can be applied to the Northern Chevennes of whom he is now speaking?

Mr. TELLER. Why not?

Mr. ALLISON. Because the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes are provided for in a different portion of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know any such thing as the Senator states for the reason that it is proposed to make this appropriation in conformity with the circle, active of the reason that it is proposed. formity with the eighth article of the treaty made with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

Mr. ALLISON. Not with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

Mr. DAWES. This money is expended down at the agency of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes at Reno, and it is for that purpose and in conformity with this treaty that this amendment is offered.

Now, I desire to state to the Senate, and through the Senate to this committee, just what the Indian agent finds is the difficulty down there. He has enabled the Indians to take and cultivate land to the extent of a thousand acres. It is his opinion that he could induce them to take three or four thousand more acres in a year if he only had the agricultural implements and the seeds and the other means of inducing them to undertake it. But until an Indian signifies his desire the Committee on Appropriations will not move, and until the Indian Bureau is desirous of making an appropriation that is not absolutely necessary down there they will not move; and so we go absolutely necessary down there they will not move; and so we go on year after year with these Indians, and the expense is increasing. The number of these Indians is 5,500 to-day; last August it was 5,004. So it will be before this year is out 6,000, and no more provision is made for any one of them to be self-supporting. It would be better to take these Indians and put them back among their associates in the hills where they would support themselves, with a part of this money, rather than to expend it down there in feeding them this way. The idea of the amendment is to have $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to provide these implements and these seeds ready for the Indians, and to have the farmer there to stimulate the Indian, to take hold of the land and show him how to use these seeds and implements. The complaint of the Indian agent is that he is for

The complaint of the Indian agent is that he is not furnished by the Government with the means of working any improvement in the condition of these Indians, and he cannot expect anything if the simple answer to all attempts to furnish him with the means is, "Why, the Indian has not asked this and the Indian Bureau has never asked this." It is a great deal easier for the In-dian Bureau to get along in the way it always has got along. The trouble with the Indian Bureau is that the people desire to change its methods and its policy. The Indian Bureau would be absolutely happy if nobody would suggest a change in its ways and its methods. You will not find the Indian Bureau suggesting any new methods of treatment unless they are forced to it either by public opinion or by Congres

But, according to our committee, Congress is not to be moved to-ward that until the Indians send up here some written application to be read at the Clerk's desk signifying, some Indian by name, that he is desirous of taking up one hundred acres of land, if he can have so many plows and so much seed and other facilities for cultivating it. It is preposterous; it is idle; it is worse than throwing away the money of the Government to continue in this way and keep on in this money of the Government to continue in this way and keep on in this method. Every one who visits the Indian Territory or the Indian tribes who are not in the Indian Territory, and sees the difficulties that surround the agents and those who are anxious to improve their condition, must know that this method of going on here with an indifference that compels the calling of the roll of the Senate to get a quorum in these seats to act upon the Indian bill is only a continuance of an evil that in and of itself grows worse and worse every day, increasing the burden of the Government and aggravating the difficulties that the Government has to contend with, because whenever any effort is made to improve the condition of the Indian looking toward his self-support the answer comes back upon the effort "the toward his self-support the answer comes back upon the effort "the Indian himself does not ask it in legal and proper form, nor does the Indian Bureau ask it at all," and therefore we go on again this year as we have gone on year after year with the dependent Indians multiplying on our hands, and so fed and so cared for as to make them grow

Worse and worse every day.

I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky, who expects to have charge of the Indian bills here for years to come, that he will relieve himself of a great deal of labor hereafter if he will undertake to see to it that the money he so carefully appropriates for the Indian shall be, some portion of it at least, applied to means which will result in his being a self-supporting Indian rather than in feeding him from hand to mouth as this policy of this bill is so certain to produce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to inquire of the committee whether this amendment proposes to increase the sum total of the appropriation or merely directs that $5,000 of it shall go to the purpose indi-

Mr. BECK. It is an absolute increase of that much, and it is given to this particular tribe beyond what is asked for by the Department. There is no reason why it should not be given to every other tribe. The meaning of it is for Congress to add this sum now without the recommendation of the Department, in spite of the treaty, because the treaty provides only

When the head of a family or lodge shall have selected lands and received his certificate as above directed, and the agent shall be satisfied that he intends in good faith to commence cultivating the soil for a living, he shall be entitled to receive seeds and agricultural implements for the first year not exceeding in value $100, &c.

Not one of them has selected lands, received a certificate, or applied or this. The Department has given them all the seeds and all the agricultural implements they have asked for, and has instructed the agent to find out what the Indians want, and has the money provided to-day to give it to them; and yet a raid is to be made on the Treas-ury on some idea or other that nobody knows anything about, without a demand from the Indians, against the recommendation of the Department, to take $5,000 now and give it to this set of Indians, and of course we should give $5,000 to each other set of Indians on the same principle.

I have believed, Mr. President, and I believe now, that the system of managing the Indians has not been an economical one. I believe that we ought to endeavor to improve their condition, and every clause in this bill as amended by the Senate committee is looking in that direction. If the Senator from Massachusetts will turn to page 43, lines 1051 to 1053 he will see that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have asked an increase from $65,000 to $75,000 for the support of industrial schools and for other educational purposes for the Indian tribes—adding $10,000 for that object. We are endeavoring to break up the tribal relation by authorizing the employendeavoring to break up the tribal relation by authorizing the employ-ment of an Indian police and paying the privates $5 a month and rations. We raise the item from $60,000 to $80,000. The object is to give control to the officers of this Government over the young In-dians instead of allowing them to be under the control of their chiefs. We are in every form seeking under the present system as well as we can to improve them. We are seeking to make them self-sustain-ing; we are doing everything that can be done for them.

But gentlemen come here with not a single fact to sustain them, not an Indian agent demanding it, no communication from any quarter, and ask that $5,000 should be given for seeds, when the committee aver upon the word of the Department itself that all the seeds and implements asked for by this tribe have been furnished to them, that the Department has asked the agent to ascertain how much more they wanted and it was ready to furnish them because funds are provided for that purpose. Why under these circumstances $5,000 more should be taken, without some fact to base it upon, is what the committee desire to know. If the Senator from Massachusetts knows that these men are not supplied with seeds, are not supplied with agricultural implements, let him say so. Does he know of any demand of theirs on the Department which has been refused? If so, let him

We have not heard it.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] said the committee thought they and the Department knew all, and Senators knew nothing, and therefore he seemed to rebuke the committee because they demanded The committee do not desire to assume any such posiinformation. What do they say? There are Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate; there is a Department that has charge of the Indians. That Department after thorough examination has told the committees how much it needs to carry on this work. An inves-tigation has been made before the committee of the House and it has agreed with that Department in giving all the Department demands. The bill comes to the Senate, it is referred to our committee, and that committee's sessions are open to every Senator. That committee, desiring all the information possible, did not learn of the necessity of this item from the gentlemen who are pressing it. They saw fit to withhold it, first from the House committee, then from the Senate committee. After all that they come here and ask for an increase of $5,000 for items that the treaty does not authorize, because the Indians have not sought to comply with the terms on which alone they are entitled to it. We aver that we have given all that is asked; we aver that the Department has money enough to furnish all the Indians need in this regard; and I think we have a right to say that unless some facts are given there must have been some reason why gentle-men who are so urgent for this increase failed to come before the committee of the House, failed to come before the committee of the Senate, and now seek to add on this much money in addition to all that the Department requires, and we have a right to have all the facts on which they make the demand.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, it would seem as if those who were advocating an appropriation to furnish as many seeds as shall be needed for these Indians must be actuated by some selfish motive. It must be so apparent that there must be some selfish motive to prompt a Senator to suggest that as much in seeds and in agricultural implements as may be needed for that purpose, for that is all there is in this amendment which we propose. The Senator from Kentucky, not in his usual frankness and courtesy of debate, says that when Senators take that course there must be some motive behind which he cannot understand. Why, Mr. President, it is of no more interest to me, and I presume to the other Senators who were charged by the Senate with the duty of going down there and visiting these Indians and reporting their condition to the Senate, than to others. I cannot conceive how it can possibly be of more special interest to us than to the Senator from Kentucky. I do not see any reason in the world why anything I should do here would not be of the same interest to the Senator from Kentucky.

The Senator says that we ask for $5,000 for this agency, and there is no more reason why we should not ask it for every other agency. We ask for $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary under the treaty, in this case. Now, what does the treaty require? That whenever any Indian shall take up this portion of land, one hundred and sixty acres or less, and undertake to cultivate it, he shall, the treaty says, have seed enough to plant it, and agricultural implements enough to cultivate it, so much as is necessary for that purpose. The Senator from Kentucky is unwilling that the Government shall have means in its possession to furnish as much of seeds and implements as shall be necessary.

It cannot furnish a dollar of the $5,000 by the terms of the amendment beyond what is necessary for the purpose of carrying out the treaty, and that is to furnish each individual Indian who fulfills the conditions of the treaty with the means of fulfilling them. It can-not take a dollar beyond that; and yet the Senator from Kentucky stands here as the representative of his committee and says that they shall not have what is necessary. Now suppose that it should be necessary to take five thousand dollars' worth of seeds and implements and use them in the arts of peace at this agency, and suppose that should be necessary at every other agency; count them all up, $5,000 at each agency expended in teaching the Indian how to support himsalf on the soil, and put that with the soldiers you keep at Fort Reno, with the soldiers in the Ute country, and with the expenses of the Army consequent upon the fact that the Indian is an idle, roaming vagabond, and how many dollars for every one do you spend in that way? As a question of economy if there were no humanity in it, as a question of mere dollars and cents, it cannot be but that every dollar spent in the necessary use of agricultural implements and seeds would be worth fifty dollars expended in the way we are obliged to expend it for the want of this effort.

The committee that went down there, the Senator says, have furnished no facts. I will state in the hearing of the other members of the committee that the agent said if he could have more seed and more agricultural implements and more help in that direction, he could quadruple and more the number of Indians who would go upon the land and till it and make themselves self-supporting. But we cannot do it, it is said, for two reasons: the Indian does not ask for it; the Indian does not know what to ask for; and the Indian Department is content with doing this year what it did last, and getting along without any trouble of change and there it ends as I said before.

I hope the Senator from Kentucky will excuse me and not impute it to any improper motive on my part if I suggest the idea of expending more money in this line and less in some other.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the offense of the Senators who favor this amendment seems to be that they do not follow the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Appropriations tell us that they follow the Secretary of the Interior; so that is the offense of which we are guilty. The honorable Senator from Kentucky says the Department does not ask for this, and the Department has been charged with the Indian business, and the Department ought to know

Mr. President, I am sick of the Department management of Indian affairs. I do not refer to the present officials, but I am sick of the management of the last twenty-five years. I am especially sick of the recent management with reference to the western Indians. I want to change this whole system. I think it is time when we are appropriating and increasing our appropriations every year, when we are appropriating $5,000,000 and upward I suppose in this bill-I do not know how much, but that is the least amount we appropriate every year-and when you take into consideration that at least seveneighths of the entire Army expenditure is occasioned by reason of our Indian relations and Indian difficulties, we are expending every year not less than twenty-five or thirty million dollars, and what do we get for it? To-day the Indians are in a worse condition than they were twenty years ago; to day there is a condition of affairs all over the country (with the exception of the five civilized tribes) that is an absolute disgrace to the nation and to everybody connected with the Indian Department.

The honorable Senator from Kentucky says no Indian agent asks for this appropriation. Why, Mr. President, there is not 5 per cent. of the men who take Indian agencies, there is not 5 per cent. of the men who have been on the border as Indian agents for twenty years, that want to civilize the Indians. There is not 5 per cent. of the men who have made contracts with them that want to civilize the Indians. who have made contracts with them that want to civilize the Indians. There is not 5 per cent. of the men who manage Indian affairs that want to civilize the Indians. They know that when they have done that their occupation is gone; their opportunities for stealing and plunder are gone; and when you wait for an Indian agent to step up and make an intelligent suggestion with reference to Indian affairs, you will find a rare bird indeed. It will not be done. They do not expect to do it, and if the Department had sat down for the last ten years with the unflinching determination to debase the Indian, to prevent his civilization, they could not have selected and pursued a course that would have accomplished the purpose any more certainly than the one they have followed.

than the one they have followed.

Wars and rumors of war, violation of obligations on the part of the Government and the Indians both, every day and every month and during the whole time, have marked this history. Mr. President, I will not put my faith in a Department which in the face of a statute that you made here providing for the payment to Indians of a gross sum of $25,000 in Colorado, could not be induced by the influence of her Senators and her Representatives to pay the money that lay in the Treasury unused and unapplied for five years. I do not want to surrender my judgment to that kind of a Department, and I stand here as a Senator owing obligations to these Indians and and I stand here as a Senator owing obligations to these Indians and owing obligations to the country that I am not prepared and not willing to surrender to any person, whether it be the liead of the Interior Department, or whether it be the Committee on Appropria-

Common sense and justice acting together in this matter would solve this whole problem.

I said before on the Senate floor that when we were prepared to do justice to the Indian and the white man and to have some little busijustice to the Indian and the white man and to have some little business capacity and business intelligence brought to bear upon the subject the problem could be settled. We make treaties with Indians that are impossible of execution; but when we make a treaty that is possible of execution, upon some technicality like that with which we are met to-day we are told that it cannot be carried out. Why, says the honorable Senator from Iowa, these men have not taken land in severalty, and until they do take land in severalty that they do take land in severalty that they do take land in severalty that the Senate and the House of Representatives cannot vote the money that they believe in their judgment will tend to civilize these Indians, unless it is in pursuance either of a treaty or a recommendation of the Interior Department?

Mr. President, when you insist that before you will attempt to teach these men agriculture you will divide up their land and will make them take their land by metes and bounds as you and I take ours, you will never civilize them at all. As the Nez Percés said when they were finding an excuse for the war that they went into in Idaho "they proposed that we should divide up this soil between us, that we should cut up our mother, that we should destroy her on whose bosom we were born and on whose bosom we intend to live," and that was a crime in Indian morals; that was a crime in Indian law greater than murder. And yet you say that unless they will yield their prejudice born of centuries ingrained in them as they never were ingrained in any other people, overcome their pride and their prejudice and submit to the absurd notion that you can divide up their land, they shall have neither seeds nor tools; and yet they must go to farming.

Mr. President, if you expect to make farmers of these men, you must give them seeds, you must give them tools, and you must listen to their prejudices, and you must not attempt by a statute or by the enactment of a law to destroy the prejudices, which are the growth of many years. When you have given them the seed—and they will of many years. of many years. When you have given them the seed—and they will waste some of it; when you have given them the tools—and they will break some of them; and when you have taught them that to use them ever so little, little by little you have started them on the road to civilization. Shall we withhold these aids because the committee charged with the management of appropriations here say that the idea is not in their judgment suitable, because no Indian agent, no Indian contractor, nobody has suggested that these Indians ought to have seeds and implements to till the soil? to have seeds and implements to till the soil?

Mr. President, the Senate at least ought to bring a little common sense to this question and vote this money, what for? Not to be thrown away, but to be given, if needed, to these Indians. It is still under the control of the Interior Department, and it is not to be supposed they will give it away unless it will be made useful to the Indians. The Interior Department cannot start these Indians on the road to civilization by means of agriculture unless they are furnished road to civilization by means of agriculture unless they are furnished with the means to be agriculturists. I say it does not make any difference, in my judgment, whether it is in the treaty or whether it is not, it is the duty of this Senate not only to furnish seeds for these Indians but for all other Indians that will accept them; and if they do not make very good use of them it will be money saved in the end, and in time we may escape this immense drain upon the public Treasury of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 a year. It is not economy for our committee to stand here and say that $150,000 or $200,000 expended in seeds and in tools, agricultural implements, is a waste of money, and it comes with bad grace from the honorable Senator from Kentucky to speak of this as a raid upon the Treasury. It is in the interest of economy; it is in the interest of humanity; it is in the interest of keeping and putting ourselves in a position in which we may escape of keeping and putting ourselves in a position in which we may escape that which has been properly attributed to us, a lack of interest in educating these men, in civilizing these men.

Mr. President, I should like to vote for $5,000 for every agency; I should like to vote for $50,000 for every agency if it could be used, for it would solve and settle this great question and put these people in a position to become civilized and useful members of society.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twenty-five mimutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 27, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. McCOOK. I rise to a question of privilege. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Le Fevre.] Yesterday I voted on the District of Columbia appropriation bill; but I notice that my pair is announced in connection with that vote. I simply wish to make this explanation.

WILLIAM H. THOMPSON.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of William H. Thompson and his sureties, and that the bill be taken up now for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That William H. Thompson, late collector of internal revenue for the fifth collection district of the State of North Carolina, be relieved from the payment to the Government of the United States of the sum of $2,709.60, which said sum of money came to the hands of said Thompson as taxes due the United States, but was forcibly taken from one of the deputies of the said collector by disguised robbers in the public highway while said deputy was on his way to make return thereof.

Sec. 2. That the said William H. Thompson have credit for the said amount of $2,709.60 in the payment of a judgment which has been lately rendered against him and the sureties upon his official bond as such collector in the United States district court at Greensborough, North Carolina, which said judgment was rendered upon a final accounting between the Government and the said Thompson as collector of internal revenue for the said district, and in which judgment is included the said sum of $2,709.60.

sum of $2,709.69. SEC. 3. That this act shall be in force from and after its ratification.

Mr. BREWER. Is there a report in this case?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir. It can be read if gentlemen so desire; but I think I can explain the matter in a moment. In 1866, just after the war, one of the deputies of Mr. Thompson, who is shown to be a man of reliable character and was continued in the employ of the Government for four or five years thereafter, was robbed of public money by disgnised men on the public highway. In 1875 suit was brought against the collector on his bond, and this robbery was pleaded in bar of recovery to that extent. Before the trial amplication was made to against the cohector on his bond, and this robbery was pleaded in bar of recovery to that extent. Before the trial application was made to the Department to allow this as a credit. The Department referred it to the district attorney for that district, and he reported that the credit should be allowed. Afterward, by authority of the Government and by the consent of the defendant, judgment was entered for the whole amount claimed, but it was expressed in said judgment that execution as to this amount should be suspended until after the next Congres Congress.

Mr. FINLEY. Was any defense made in the action?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir, a defense was made; and judgment was rendered subject to the action of Congress. The Government, in accordance with the agreement, has suspended execution from time to time for five years, awaiting the action of Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has this matter ever been examined by a commit-

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; a unanimous report in favor of the bill was made by the Committee on Claims in the last Congress. In the present Congress the question was examined by a sub-committee of the ent Congress the question was examined by a sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means, consisting of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle,] the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] and the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills.] Upon the report of this sub-committee the Committee on Ways and Means reported the bill unanimously.

The claim is supported by abundant evidence, and I hope the bill will pass without objection. If more information be desired, it can be given by the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from Michigan.

Michigan. There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; which was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

SEC. 2. That a sufficient sum of the $1,000,000 appropriated to pay said accounts is again appropriated to pay such amount as may be allowed under this act.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Now read the substitute on which I desire to have action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the appropriations required for the Yellowstone National Park; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SECTION 232, POSTAL LAWS AND REGULATIONS.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] asks leave to have printed as part of the debates some remarks on Senate amendments to the bill H. R. No. 4924, being the immediate deficiency bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. Is that the bill about which we so frequently heard the assertion that the other side did not wish to debate it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot designate the bill any better than it is designated in the request of the gentleman from

Mr. CONGER. It does not state the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is stated to be the immediate deficiency bill.

Mr. CONGER. I shall not object if there is a returning desire on the other side to discuss those questions. There being no objection, the request was granted. [See Appendix.]

DEVELOPMENT OF MINING RESOURCES

Mr. FORNEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5991) to exclude the State of Alabama from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GAINES.

Mr. McCOOK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 2902) to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list, with amendments by the Senate, and to move concurrence in the Senate amendments. I am sure no one will object to this request. The object of the bill is to place on the retired list an old ordnance-sergeant of the Army, eighty-eight years of age, who served in the Army fifty-one years.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Line 2, after "that," insert "the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to place."

Line 2, strike out "be, and he is hereby, placed."

Line 2, after "with," insert "75 per cent. of."

Mr. McCOOK. The effect of the amendments of the Senate is to give three-quarters pay instead of full pay as the House bill did.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Clerk to read the bill as it will read if amended in the way proposed by the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list of the Army, with 75 per cent. of the full pay and allowance of ordnance-sergeant for and during his natural life, be having served faithfully and honorably in the Army of the United States for more than fifty-one years, having been an ordnance-sergeant for over thirty-three consecutive years of said service, and having participated in the siege of Fort Meigs, the defense of Fort Stephenson, and the battle of the Thames, in the war of 1812.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

MESSENGER AND CLERK TO THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

Mr. O'CONNOR, by unanimous consent, submitted (by request) the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Ac-

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ, until otherwise ordered by the House, in addition to his present force, 1 messenger at $1,800 per annum, and 1 clerk at $1,800 per annum; said messenger to assist in preserving order on the floor of the House in the absence of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to serve subpeans, and to perform such other duties as may be assigned to him; and the salaries herein ordered shall be paid monthly out of the contingent fund of the House.

ORTHOGRAPHY OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5992) to constitute a commission to report on the amendment of the orthography of public documents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to report a bill for consideration at this time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to inquire of the Chair what is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order, if called for, would be the morning hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin, at ten minutes past one o'clock. The business during the morning hour is the call of committees for reports.

CHARLES OLIVIER DUCLOZEL.

Mr. GUNTER. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to report the bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana, with a Senate amendment thereto, and to recommend that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senate be now considered; it will take but a short time. time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GUNTER] asks consent at this time to report from the Committee on Private Land Claims the bill of which he has given the title, with a Senate amendment thereto, for present consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The amendment of the Senate will now be read.

The amendment of the Senate was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu the following:

That a certain tract of land, of ten arpents front by forty arpents in depth, on the west side of Bayou Teche, being section 79, in township 10 south, of range 6 east, in the State of Louisiana, as per plat of the United States consolidated land office, district of Louisiana, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to and in Charles Olivier Duclozel, his heirs or assigns.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States is hereby authorized, directed, and required to issue a patent for the lands aforesaid, herein described, to said Charles Olivier Duclozel: Provided, That this act and the said patent shall be considered and construed only as a quitclaim on the part of the United States of such title only as the United States have a legal and equitable right to convey, and shall not affect the rights or interests of any other claimants, or affect or proclude any judicial investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate

Mr. CONGER. I would inquire of the Chair how that can be considered at this time under the rules, in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated expressly that it required unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. The Speaker of the House has often decided that during the morning hour for reports from committees he could not entertain a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair cannot find anything in the rules to prevent the consideration by unanimous consent of anything during the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will understand that such requests have been made repeatedly and have been refused to be entertained by the

Mr. CONGER. No one who has heard the Speaker of the House repeatedly say that a request for unanimous consent could not be entertained during the morning hour supposed that any such thing tertained during the morning hour supposed that any such thing would be done now, and members were not observing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. While the present occupant of the chair is not advised of the ruling of the Speaker of the House, he will say he did not fail to state distinctly to the House that the gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the Senate amendment to the bill which he reported. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] desires to object, and says that he did not hear the statement made by the Chair, and for that reason did not object, the Chair will entertain the objection now.

Mr. CONGER. I will make the point of order on the bill that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has already been considered

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has already been considered in Committee of the Whole. It is a House bill returned from the in Committee of the Whole. It is a House bill returned from the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. COX. The only reason members did not object was because, knowing the previous rulings of the regular Speaker of the House, they were indifferent to the matter, supposing that all reports made during the morning hour would go to their appropriate calendars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] that this bill has met the requirements of the rule in that regard. It has been upon the Calendar; it has been considered in Committee of the Whole and passed by the House. It comes back from the Senate with an amendment. The Chair stated distinctly to the House that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Gunter] reporting this bill asked unanimous consent for the consideration at this time by the House of the Senate amendment thereto. If tion at this time by the House of the Senate amendment thereto. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] or any other member of the House will state that he would have objected had he known the re-quest was made, and failed only because he did not hear it, the Chair will now entertain the objection.

Mr. COX. It would be invidious for one member to object. Other members may want the same privilege. We have not hitherto en-members may want the same privilege. We have not hitherto enjoyed the privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be obliged to the gentleman from New York if he will refer the Chair to any provision of any rule which takes away from this House its power by unanimous consent to consider a bill when it is reported.

Mr. COX. The impression of "the gentleman from New York" was derived only from the rulings of the regular Speaker of the House. I myself hope that the rules may be ameliorated in this regard, for the only way to get rid of choking up the calendars is to have something of this kind. of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is simply endeavoring to comply with the rules.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand the Speaker of the House to have ruled that business during the morning hour was confined to report-that districts during the morning nour was commed to reporting bills for their appropriate calendars, nothing more. That has been the decision of the Chair heretofore.

Mr. COX. Overruling all requests for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair does not desire to express any opinion as to the construction of the rules made by the Speaker. But the Chair does not know of any rule, and would be obliged to any member to refer him to any rule, which denies to the House power by unanimous consent to consider at this time an amendment of the Senate to a bill of the House which has been upon the Calendar and been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GUNTER. I will state that this bill was first introduced into the House, went to the Committee on Private Land Claims, was considered by that committee, reported back to the House, and passed. It went to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims in that body, was reported back and passed with an amendment. Coming back to the House, it went to the Speaker's table, was again referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, was considered by the committee and reported back with a unanimous recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be con-The action now asked will take but a moment, and I hope no objection will be made.

Mr. COX. I do not object, but I would like to have a ruling upon this point.

Mr. GARFIELD. For one, I would greatly prefer, for the sake of uniformity of the rule and the ruling, that the gentleman from Arkansas should let this matter wait until the morning hour is over, kansas should let this matter wait until the morning hour is over, when I have no doubt every member will consent to take it up and pass it. Certain it is that it was the intention of the Committee on Rules to make the morning hour a period devoted exclusively to the reception of reports, in order that the business of the House might get into print; and it has been, I know, the uniform ruling of the Speaker that it was not even in order to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of any business during this hour. Hence we have all proceeded upon that supposition, nobody watching for a request for unanimous consent or expecting it would be made. If we once allow the rule to be departed from upon a bill which we all agree is perfectly proper, then the same thing may be done during any morning hour upon the request of anybody. I think that if my friend from Arkansas will withdraw his request, we will all morally bind ourselves to help him get unanimous consent as soon as the morning hour is over, and thus avoid a departure from the rule. Certainly a request of this kind is a surprise to us all. I did not dream that any such request would be made, much less entertained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] the Chair desires to know whether in the view of the gentleman it was the intention of the Committee on Rules to rob the House of its right by unanimous consent to dispose at once of any report that might be made during the morning hour, because if such was the purpose of the Committee on Rules the present occuif such was the purpose of the Committee on Rules the present occupant of the chair, a member of that committee, was never advised of it, and certainly never so intended to report the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course my colleague on the Committee on Rules [Mr. BLACKBURN] knows what was his own understanding; but I know that so far as I was concerned it was my understanding we had distinctly agreed that within this hour there was to be no business whatever but the placing upon the calendars of whatever might be reported from committees, so that it might get into print; that at any time before or after the morning hour unanimous consent that at any time before or after the morning hour unanimous consent might be asked to take anything off the Calendar or out of the hands of a committee and pass it. That is what we have been doing this morning; just before the regular order was called for we had several measures passed by unanimous consent. But the Chair will not find, I think, a single case since the new rules were adopted where any business has been done during the morning hour beyond the reception of reports and placing them on the calendars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken, for this very rule was disregarded by unanimous consent on Saturday last upon a bill reported during the morning hour from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was not in the House during the morning hour on that day. But the Chair will notice that the language of the rule in regard to this morning hour excludes anything but the reporting of business for assignment to the calendars.

Mr. COX. Let the rule be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will have the rule read he will see that it confines us to the receiving of reports from committees and their reference to their respective calendars.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. On all days other than Monday as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed, and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate; and the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in regular order and then upon the select committees; and if the whole of the hour is not consumed by this call, then it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of other business; but if he shall not complete the call within the hour, he shall resume it in the succeeding morning hour where he left off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that he does

The SPEARER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that he does not know of anything which makes this rule more sacred than any other standing rule of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before the Chair decides this question, let me read a passage from page 7 of the report of the Committee on Rules, which accompanied the revised rules under which we are now acting. I think this report was drawn by the present occupant of the chair. After speaking of the order of business under the former rule and practice, the report proceeds: and practice, the report proceeds:

In the revision submitted by the committee it is proposed to have a daily call of all the committees, all business reported, save that to which no objection is made to its "present consideration," to go to the Committee of the Whole House, whether public or private, and to a House calendar composed only of bills not making appropriations of money.

This plan secures two desirable objects, namely:
First. The printing of all bills and accompanying reports, thus giving time for their examination by members before consideration.

As will be seen the point here was that everything presented in As will be seen the point here was that everything presented in this morning hour should be put in print before being acted on; and by a subsequent arrangement it was provided that the printed reports should be sent to members at their dwellings. The object evidently was that the work of the morning hour should be in print and in the hands of members before its consideration—showing the desire of the Committee on Rules to exclude the consideration of business during this hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no point of order pending. The Chair is entirely content with the excerpt read from the report of the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Ohio, which clearly sustains the ruling of the Chair in the statement that this morning hour should be confined to reports from committees, except business to which no objection should be made.

Furthermore, the Chair knows of nothing which makes this rule more sacred than any other standing rule of this House. By unanimous consent every rule of this House, save two, is constantly suspended or disregarded. If the Committee on Rules had intended to put the construction on this rule the gentleman from Ohio places upon it, I take it, it would put, as it did in two other rules of the House, an inhibition upon the Speaker to entertain a motion for its suspendiction. The Chair and a rough inhibition in this rule. sion. The Chair finds no such inhibition in this rule.

Further, the Chair is sustained in its present action in this regard, not by one, but by two cases which have already occurred since the new system of rules went into operation. The one, a bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, relative to the monitors, which was reported in the morning hour, and, by unanimous consent, therein considered; and the other a bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, Saturday last, which was reported in the morning hour, and, by unanimous consent, therein considered.

The Chair is fortified in its opinion by the report of the Committee on Rules, and by the construction of the rule, and by the practice of the House of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Was either of those cases decided by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first was decided by the regular Speaker of the House, as the Chair is informed, and the second by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Goode,] who was, at that time, acting as pro tempore Speaker. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. COX. I understood the Speaker to say, if there be any apprehension on the part of any member, he would still entertain an objection.

ection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not so state. The Chair stated if the gentleman from New York or any other member said he did not hear the Chair state the request of the gentleman from Arkansas for unanimous consent to consider the Senate amendments and if he had heard it he would have entered objection to it, the Chair would recognize that objection.

Mr. COX. I do not speak of the merits of this bill, but I desire to say a word before I make objection. I did not hear the Chair make the statement in regard to the order of business in committee for the reason I did not dream of the reversal of the ordinary decisions of our Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cited the gentleman from New York to two instances which he does not seem to be apprised of.

Mr. COX. I am apprised of the decision of the Speaker in nearly every case. There may be one or two exceptions which may have crept in as precedents which I did not know of and did not recognize. I wish this rule were correct, but it is unjust to members since the rules were adopted who desired to bring in bills and ask unanimous consent, and never availed themselves of that opportunity because they did not think the rule would allow it. Now at once the rule is open, and they do not have any of the advantage which other members will have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to correct the gentleman from New York. The rule is not only open now but has been open all the time.

Mr. NEW. I should like to make a remark.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair does not recollect any former ruling made by the regular Speaker of the House on this question.

Mr. COX. I do not think there are any exceptions to my statement except the two cases mentioned by the Chair, which are exceptional cases.

Mr. NEW. In this connection I should like the opportunity of making a remark.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that there is nothing before the House.

Mr. NEW. The gentleman from New York has been heard since that statement was made by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana if there be no objection.

Mr. NEW. Mr. Speaker, I have no recollection, and I think it cannot be found by examination of the RECORD or Journal, that the Speaker has, at any time since the adoption of the new rules, held, as a distinct ruling on the question, that a bill could not within the morning hour be considered by unanimous consent. I think the action of the Speaker in that regard has simply amounted on his part—without making a decision on the point—to a discouragement of the consideration of bills by unanimous consent within the morning hour. consideration of bills by unanimous consent within the morning nour.

And, if I am not greatly mistaken, it is placing the Speaker in a false attitude to say that he has frequently held since the adoption of the new rules that a bill could not by unanimous consent be considered in the morning hour. I think it will be found that that question has not been submitted to the Speaker for his decision.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say merely a word. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio in the intention of the committee, with the gentleman from Ohio in the intention of the committee, which was to exclude everything from the morning hour except reports of committees. But if we had crystallized into the English language that intention, we should have further provided it should not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for unanimous consent. But we did not do that, and therefore I have no question at all but the ruling of the present Speaker is correct.

Mr. GUNTER. I ask the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to read the Senate amendments.

Senate amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to make the point of order as to the reference of the amendments to the Committee of the Whole, and ask that the Senate amendments be read so as to ascertain whether they be subject to the point of order.
The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 2004, to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
That a certain tract of land, of ten arpents front by forty arpents in depth, on the west side of Bayou Teche, being section 79, in township 10 south, of range 6 east, in the State of Louisiana, as per plat of the United States consolidated land office, district of Louisiana, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to and in Charles Olivier Duclozel, his heirs or assigns.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is in effect a new bill, that it never has been considered in the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan will permit the Clerk to conclude the reading of the Senate amendments.

Mr. CONGER. The Clerk has read sufficient in that section to indicate to me that this is undoubtedly subject to the point of order for the reason that I have stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not recognize the right of the gentleman from Michigan to interrupt the reading of the Senate amendments to interpose a point of order.

Mr. CONGER. But I submit to the Chair that enough has been

Mr. CONGER. But I submit to the Chair that enough has been read to show that the Senate amendment makes it practically a new bill and that it is within the rule and subject to the point of order. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the right of the gentleman to make the point of order at this stage, thereby interrupting the reading of the Senate amendments, in view of the fact that the gentleman is holding the right to object to the amendments as a whole after the reading shall have been concluded.

Mr. CONGER. But an amendment has already been read, which shows that this is a new bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that he cannot know, neither can the Chair know, that this bill in some subsequent section does not contain a provision which will relieve it of the objection urged against it by the gentleman from Michigan. For that reason the Chair cannot permit the reading of the Senate amendments to be interrupted. The Clerk will resume the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States is hereby authorized, directed, and required to issue a patent for the lands aforesaid, herein described, to said Charles Oliver Duclozel: Provided, That this act and the said patent shall be considered and construed only as a quitelaim on the part of the United States of such title only as the United States have a legal and equitable right to convey, and shall not affect the rights or interests of any other claimants, or affect or preclude any judicial investigation.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I make the point of order on the first clause of this bill that has been read, that this is a substitute for a House bill and therefore in the first instance it is a new bill in the House; and also that it conveys or disposes of the property of the United States, and is subject to the point of order on that ground. The second section that has been read only confirms me in my first impression that this bill, as a whole, has never been considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I make the point of order against it on both grounds.

Mr. GUNTER. If the gentleman from Michigan will permit me I will state to him that this bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole. It was first considered in the Committee on Private Land Claims and reported back here, and then considered in the Committee of the Whole and passed; and the purport of the bill was to give a certain deed or patent from the Government to these parties claiming this right. After it was considered here it went to the Senate and was there amended, and the Senate bill is not different from the House bill excepting in this: that the original House bill gave a warranty deed to this property, whereas the Senate amendment only gives a quitclaim, and of course the interest of the Government is protected better than by the original bill. better than by the original bill.

This is not, therefore, a new bill, but the original bill with the Senate amendment, and I submit, therefore, that the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan against it on that ground is not

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. CONGER. The point I make is, that this is an amendment of the Senate which embraces entirely new subject-matter. The rule provides that any amendment of the Senate to a House bill shall be Subject to the point of order if such amendment originating in the House would be subject to that point. Now, this bill disposes of the property of the United States, and this amendment of the Senate is in the nature of a substitute and brings forward here a new bill, striking out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and substituting an entirely new bill. It will not be claimed that the Senate amendment is not essentially different from the House bill as originally passed, and therefore Rule XX of this House is applicable to that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, and believes that the gentleman will agree with the Chair, that while under the provisions of Rule XX any amendment put upon a House bill by the Senate which in the first instance would be subject to the point of order under Rule XX if said amendment originating in the House would be subjected to it, that it will require a very technical construction of the rule to apply it to the bill now under consideration. The bill under consideration, the Chair is informed, has already been considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and was there agreed to, and then passed by the House, and it conveyed to the beneficiary of the bill a warranty title to certain lands therein described.

The amendment proposed by the Senate is substantially the same as the original bill passed by the House, and so far as any grant or disposition of the lands of the United States is concerned it is not only substantially the House bill, but it is identical with the House bill in that respect. Therefore, having once been considered in the Committee of the Whole House the Chair is not able to see that any fair construction of the rule would require the Senate amendment, identical intelligence of the Modern and the large of the Modern amendment, (identical in substance as to the disposition of the lands,) under a point of order thus raised, to go back into Committee of the Whole House for consideration; and especially in this instance, where, so far as the grant is concerned, it would be subject not only to the same identical provisions and restrictions with which it has already passed through the House, but has additional restrictions imposed. The gentleman from Arkansas says that the only difference between the bills, so far as the land grant is concerned, is that the House gives a more complete title than the Senate now proposes to give.

Mr. CONGER. In the point of order which I have raised I do not ropose to discuss what would be or what might be the effect of the bill, but the rules of the House provide that-

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Now, this is a new bill. Suppose this amendment had originated in the House? What the rule contemplates is exactly that case. It does not look to what might be the effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Michigan is correct, then this is a Senate bill instead of a House bill. If this is an amendment to the House bill it is not a new bill.

Mr. CONGER. It is a new bill, for the amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CONGER. And if this amendment or substitute had not come from the Senate, but had been introduced in the House, it would have been subject to the point of order now made against it. I do not see how the force of the rule can be argued away. Suppose some other bill like this or some other proposition like this were before the Com-mittee of the Whole, that would not exclude this from the operation

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that

The SPEARER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that this rule requires the same identical proposition to be considered a second time in the Committee of the Whole. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. If there is any way to have this proposition considered in the House in its proper order, I desire that it shall be so considered. I do not think we should give away this property without considered. out consideration. I thought our rules would have protected us. If they do not, then I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection comes too late. The Chair asked for objections when the proposition was originally submitted, and no objection was made. Subsequently he stated that it is to be compared to the chair would be compared to the chair as the chair as the chair was a second to the chair as the chair was the any gentleman desired even at that time to object the Chair would entertain the objection.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair stated that any gentleman who did not hear the Chair asking for objections formerly, and who would have objected if he had done so, might object now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did so; and the gentleman from Michigan refused to object, and made a point of order that the amendment of the Senate should have its consideration in Committee of the Whele. of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair restricted the call for objections to those who were in a position to say that they had intended to object. It is often difficult for a man to say what his intentions were at some pre-

Mr. CONGER and Mr. AIKEN objected. The bill was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENT LIENS ON REAL ESTATE.

Mr. THOMAS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 4747) regulating liens on real estate created by judgments of the United States circuit and district courts in the several States and Territories. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. I believe public business will be proceeded with better by having everything referred, under the rules, to the appropriate Calendar. I shall object to the consideration of any bill in the morning hour.

The substitute (H. R. No. 5993) was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS.

Mr. WILSON. I am instructed by the Joint Committee on Printing to report back, with amendments, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 213) regarding the printing and distribution of Congressional Records to certain libraries. This is simply to distribute a few books to libraries. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. AIKEN. I object.

Mr. WILSON. Is not this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to make reports from the Committee on Printing after the morning hour.

Mr. WILSON. Can I not report now under the rule?

Mr. WILSON. Can I not report now under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not for present consideration.

Mr. WILSON. If that is the ruling of the Chair, and if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] agrees in that ruling, I withdraw the report.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. MYERS. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the clerical work of the Select Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, appointed under the resolution of this House of January 12, 1830, has greatly augmented since the organization thereof: Therefore, Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That said Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay be authorized to employ an additional clerk, until otherwise ordered by the House, whose compensation shall be the same as that paid to other per-diem clerks of committees of this House.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. AIKEN. I object.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. THOMAS. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to report back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 5599) to equalize bounties of soldiers of the war of the rebellion for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

on the state of the Umon.

Mr. DIBRELL. I make the point of order that this is a select committee, raised for a specific purpose, and having no authority to originate a bill or have a bill referred to it for action. I make the point that it has no authority to report that bill to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot decide the point of order until the bill is reported.

The bill and amendments were read.

they have acted upon it. I insist they have no authority to do so. That bill would cost $150,000,000. It ought properly to have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which is now investigating the question and getting up statistics and facts in regard to it. That is the proper committee, and I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FINLEY. The same question now raised by the gentleman from Tennessee was raised with reference to the bill in regard to the tariff which was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws on the motion of the Town.

Laws, on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend.] This committee certainly has jurisdiction, because the House has referred the bill to it. Jurisdiction attached by reason of that reference; and the committee having acquired jurisdiction by virtue of the reference of the bill, has the right, I conceive, to make this report. The argument of the gentleman from Tennessee that a bill of the same character has been referred to some other committee has no validity, because this committee has obtained jurisdiction over the bill by its reference.

Mr. DIBRELL. That committee has not jurisdiction over this bill, having been appointed for a specific purpose.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is this bill reported for consideration at this time?

time?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.
Mr. BUCKNER. What is proposed to be done with it?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is reported from the select committee by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. THOMAS,] to take its place on the Calendar.
Mr. DIBRELL. My point of order is, that the committee has no authority to report such a bill.
Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask—
Mr. BARBER. I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BARBER. Is debate in order?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.
Mr. McMILLIN. As a member of the committee to which this bill was referred, I desire to ask the gentleman who reported it—
Mr. BARBER. I call for the regular order, and object to debate.

Mr. BARBER. I call for the regular order, and object to debate. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order, and objection is made to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] proceeding.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to submit a minority report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, permission will be granted.

Mr. THOMAS. There is not the slightest objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No objection is heard.

Mr. DIBRELL. I have made the point of order that this committee has no authority to report this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] that under Rule XI the subject-matter of this bill would have gone, in the judgment of the Chair, to another and standing committee of this House. But the House has acted by referring this bill to the committee that is now reporting, and the Chair has no authority to vacate that order of the House. Chair has no authority to vacate that order of the House

Mr. DIBRELL. My point of order is that the committee had no authority to investigate anything except the matter for which it was especially appointed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the duty of the Chair to pass upon that question. After the House has made order to refer the bill to that committee the Chair cannot question the right of the committee to report it back to the House, however inappropriate such action may have been in the judgment of any member of the House or of the Chair. The bill is now reported with amendments, and under the rule it will go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. When the bill shall be taken up for consideration it will be in the power of the House, by refusing the previous question upon it; to commit the bill to any committee which the House may please.

Mr. THOMAS. Before we pass from that subject—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] that no report is filed with the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the exact point I desire to speak of. I ask leave to file the report hereafter.

Mr. DIBRELL. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the filing of the report hereafter.

Mr. DIBRELL. I now move to refer the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FINLEY. I make the point of order that that motion is not in

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Thomas] reporting this bill has not the right to file the report at any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Permission is not granted to the gentleman for that purpose, and the rule imperatively requires that the report shall accompany the bill when reported.

Mr. STEVENSON. Cannot the gentleman file his report during the day?

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. DIBRELL. This committee was raised for a specific purpose.

It has no authority to consider or report a new bill. It was appointed to investigate the abuses under a law then in existence. This bill, by a mistake or somehow or other, was referred to that committee, and Mr. McMILLIN. Only by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So the Chair understands. If the rule is strictly insisted upon, the gentleman will not have the right to file his report hereafter, and cannot report the bill without complying with the rule which requires the report to accompany the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is withdrawn.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. THOMAS. There has been an order of the House fixing the session of Thursday night next for the consideration of what is known as the pension-court bill. The bills reported by the majority and minority of the committee were ordered to be printed, but the number has been exhausted. I ask that those bills be reprinted for the use of the House

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DIBRELL. That is not in order under this call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can make the request after the expiration of the morning hour.

CANCELLATION OF EXPORT BONDS ON TOBACCO, ETC.

Mr. CARLISLE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4415) to amend section 3385 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the cancellation of export bonds on exportation of tobacco, snuff, and cigars; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. COURTENAY.

Mr. CARLISLE (for Mr. Tucker) also reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3036, a bill (H. R. No. 5994) for the relief of William A. Courtenay, agent of the Clyde lines of steamers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Inasmuch as reports from committees have been so much interrupted this morning, and it is important that they should all get in, I ask consent that the call of committees for reports be continued at this time until each committee shall have been called.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object.
Mr. KITCHIN. I would inquire when the morning hour will expire?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. At ten minutes past two o'clock; about one minute from this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Vice-President had appointed (in place of Mr. Voorhees, excused) Mr. Allison as a member of the joint committee on the part of the Senate to take into consideration the alleged losses of revenue arising from the evasion of the stamp-tax on cigars and other articles subject to excise duty.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendments, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (R. H. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas:

A bill (H. R. No. 3803) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York;

A joint resolution (H.R. No. 284) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two hospital tents to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of the State of Illinois.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 940) to amend an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating land to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;" and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 96) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Stephen A. McCarty a lieutenant-commander in the Navy.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 698) to establish a district and circuit court at Chattanooga, Tennessee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND FOR AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 5995) to amend an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. CRAVENS. I move that the House go to business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill coming over as unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, this bill comes up for consideration. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Cravens] can, however, raise the question of consideration if he desires and make the motion to go to business on the Speaker's

Mr. CRAVENS. If my motion is not the regular order, I will not insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business, the bill the title of which has been reported by the Clerk.

Mr. CONGER. In the "Order of Business" the consideration of business on the House Calendar comes before unfinished business or business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not concur with the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. It is so stated on our "Order of Business."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. After the hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

5. Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, which, the motion, prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand the opinion of the Chair, there is no rule by which the House Calendar has a place in the order of daily

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair refers the gentleman to clause 6 of the rule just reported establishing that very order.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that this was unfinished business on the Speaker's table.

the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken. It is not upon the Speaker's table. It is business reported from a committee, and undisposed of by the House.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to know whether it is not competent now, upon a question of consideration, to antagonize this business by a motion to go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can raise the question of consideration if he so desires.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to call attention to the order of precedence

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to call attention to the order of precedence of business on the Speaker's table. I understand it to have been announced by the Chair that the trade-mark bill was before the House. My understanding is that a resolution of the Senate, which is the unfinished business on the Speaker's table, has precedence, that the trade-mark bill would be subsequent to that, because subsequently acted on by the House and because a Senate resolution has precedence

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill which now comes up as unfinished business was reported to this House from the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee by authority of the House had leave to report at any time upon this particular subject. This bill was under consideration when the House took its recess on Friday last. It now comes over as unfinished business under the operation of the special order.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the right to report at any time give precedence in consideration so as to supersede a matter already before the House? The resolution of the Senate to which I have referred was already before the House as unfinished business before this report was presented.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that where two matters of unfinished business come over, and one of them has been reported from a committee which by order of the House had been specially charged with the making of a report at any time on the particular subject, this report would take precedence as between two matters of business which would otherwise stand upon an equal footing. The gentleman from Texas can raise the question of consideration.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, then, that we proceed to consider the Senate resolution, being business on the Speaker's table upon which the House was last engaged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion in the form in which the gentleman presents it is not in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the question before the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no question before the House except the consideration of the bill which has come over as unfinished business

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not profess any profound knowledge of the rules; but we have had before the House, under consideration as unfinished business on the Speaker's table, a Senate resolution. Now a bill which has subsequently come before the House is held to supersede the consideration of a Senate resolution which is the unfinished business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. When we take up that order of business

Mr. FERGAND WOOD. When we take up that order of business that resolution will be reached.

Mr. REAGAN. That order is now reached. I insist that the unfinished business which the House was considering has precedence and ought to be considered in preference to another piece of unfinished business that subsequently came before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas must remember that the resolution to which he makes reference is unfinished business upon the Speaker's table, and is only entitled to be considered when business on the Speaker's table is reached. A much higher right to consideration, in the judgment of the Chair, attaches to the bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary under an order of the House giving the right to report at any time, this bill having been the House giving the right to report at any time, this bill having been under consideration when the House took its recess on Friday last and not being on the Speaker's table at all.

Mr. REAGAN. I was misled by the announcement from the desk that it was on the Speaker's table, and was arguing upon that ground. The SPEAKER pro tempere. The Chair stated expressly it was not upon the Speaker's table; and the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the dear.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is it not competent, Mr. Speaker, to raise the question of consideration by motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is too late, as the gentleman from Iowa is upon

The SPEARER pro tempore. It would have been in order to raise the question of consideration before the gentleman from Iowa took the floor; but he is upon the floor and has only suspended his remarks, at the request of the Chair, to get order in the House.

Mr. McCOID. Mr. Speaker, in 1870 Congress passed a law creating a uniform and harmonious system of legislation on the subject of trademarks. That law was supposed to be based on the clause of the Constitution giving power to Congress to legislate for the protection of protection of the constitution of the co patentable discoveries of individuals and copyrights of their production. That law existed until 1876, when it was amended by a penal clause making it much more efficient. Since that time it has been executed and trade-marks have been registered, certificates issued, and the business of the country in that regard has been conducted under the law of 1870. I believe nobody complained of the law or was dissatisfied with it, either from the point of its interference with State legislation or any other; and it gave universal satisfaction, except to those pirates and infringers whose unlawful trade was defeated by it.

Last October the Supreme Court decided the laws all unconstitutional, and when we met in December it appeared to me as a plain and practical way of getting over the difficulty in which we found ourselves by that decision of the Supreme Court to amend the Constitution and get the power we thought we had in 1870 and 1876, and up to the decision of that court, and, under that power which we would get by an amendment to the Constitution, legislate as we had done before.

The matter had been discussed over the country by the lawyers and in the papers a great deal, and when we met, December 2, the resolution to amend the Constitution was introduced, and, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] says, was referred to the Committee on Manufactures, the proper committee under the rules of the House. It was considered by that committee and unanimously reported, favorably recommending the submission of the amendment to the Constitution, and urging it with such reasons in brief as they had at the time. That committee having jurisdiction of the subject in the House, and having reported favorably as to the propriety of the amendment, this House has the unanimous report of the committee to whom they have given jurisdiction on that subject; but when the resolution came up in the House for passage, the bill introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ARMFIELD,] re-enacting the old law under another clause of the Constitution, was urged as all that was required. The question was raised in that discussion whether or not we had, by virtue of the power to regulate commerce in the Constitution, power now, without an amendment, to pass a similar law to that of 1870 and 1876.

The constitutional question having been raised in the House, it was suggested that the matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and to that I consented; and it went to the Committee on the Judiciary on the subject, as I understood it and, as I think, the House understood it, of the constitutionality of the Armfield bill; that is, whether or not Congress can now legislate on trade-marks without an amendment under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

The Committee on the Judiciary have finally reported, and in their report they say that Congress has not the power, under any general clause of the Constitution, to legislate on the subject, and I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] to say that the Committee on the Judiciary are unanimous in the opinion that Congress has not the power, under the commerce clause, to pass this kind of legislation.

That committee has recommended the bill which is reported and I think, Mr. Speaker, this bill is not one this House wants to pass, for several reasons. It is entitled "A bill to authorize the registration of trade-marks and to protect the same." The first clause says, "Trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes." The first objection to the bill is this: The committee which reports it says we have no power to legislate under the commerce clause, and yet the bill proceeds at once to say "used in commerce." That is in the first section; and in the third section they use the same language, with this additional clause, "Within the provisions of a treaty, convention, or declaration with a foreign power." The idea seems to be in the committee to place the bill itself under the committee to place the bill itself under the commerce clause, while, in their report, they expressly say that Congress has no such power. I only notice that, and leave it, to show the doubt of the Judiciary Committee where this power exists if at

I take it on their own ground. I understand the gentleman from Georgia and the Judiciary Committee to say this, that we have no power to legislate on trade-marks, but that under the treaty power and the provision of the Constitution which says we shall make all needful legislation for the execution of the power given to the President to make treaties, we may pass this bill. Now let us see. The chain of title of constitutional power is this, as I understand it, that the President can make a treaty according to a certain clause with regard to trade-marks, and it is necessary for Congress to legislate to execute the things to which the President has agreed to.

that is the theory of the gentleman from Georgia.

In order, therefore, that this Congress should be enabled to pass a bill on this subject they must first find that the President and the Senate have made a treaty under the Constitution by which they agree to do certain things in reference to these trade-marks, and next that we have the power under the general provisions of the law to execute that treaty and legislate for the things which are agreed upon therein. Now, if that is the position of the Judiciary Committee I want to ask a few questions of some of its members. They say in this bill that they pass it for the execution of treaties with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes. That is the claim set forth by the gentlemen in advocacy of this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia, or any other gentleman on the Judiciary Committee, what treaty pro-vision has been made with the Indians in which it is necessary for Congress to pass such a bill as this at all? Has the President of the United States made a treaty with the Indian tribes agreeing to protect their trade-marks, or has he made a treaty with the Indians agreeing that they shall protect our trade-marks? Unless that treaty has been made we cannot pass the bill under the very conditions specified in the report from the Judiciary Committee itself, for they say that we must first have a treaty and then Congress may pass laws to execute the same. Now, I claim that there being no treaty with the Indians in reference to such protection of trade-marks, we have not the power to pass such a bill; and I ask the gentleman from Georgia if he cannot legislate as between the States how can he legislate as to trade-marks with the Indians? I would like any gentleman on that committee to state any reason or how we can legislate if there is no treaty with the Indians in this respect, and if the Indian has no trade-mark. As I understand it the trade-mark of the Indian is ordinarily a lifted scalp, and generally it is impressed on the head of the white man; that is at least one in which they have the right of priority of use.

Under that reasoning of the Judiciary Committee to which I have alluded the power to legislate as to the Indians falls to the ground, and may be disposed of without further comment. They therefore admit, so far as this bill is concerned and with reference to the Inand this report shows it-that that portion of the bill is unconstitutional, and of course we cannot pass it if there is no treaty whatever regarding it.

Now, with reference to treaties with foreign nations, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that we have any treaty with foreign nations that would justify or make it necessary to pass such a bill as this. In the first place, our treaties with reference to trade-marks never contemplated such a state of affairs as this bill would create. The only treaties with foreign countries in which protection was promised prior to 1870 were the treaties with Russia and with Belgium.

In those treaties we agreed that counterfeiting the trade-marks should be "strictly prohibited." The counterfeiting of trade-marks was prohibited at that time by the common-law provision, and being against the principles of the common law which recognized the right of property in trade-marks the violation of that right would come within the provision of the treaties, and the parties injured would have had remedy in damages. They would have had that remedy under the common law. These two words of treaty obligation are not sufficient to justify an argument for this bill. It is doubtful whether any more was intended by the contracting parties than the guaranty of protection at common law. of property in trade-marks the violation of that right would come

These two treaties are the only ones with reference to trade-marks on which the right to legislate could be claimed that had been made before 1870. In 1870 we did pass a general trade-mark law, and the President and the Senate when they made treaties understood that we had the power to legislate upon trade-marks as a government, and when we agreed to protect foreign trade-marks as a government, and when we agreed to protect foreign trade-marks it was upon the supposition that we had the power to pass a general law. If we did not have at that time constitutional power to do that, that part of the treaty was simply void because we had not the power to make a treaty if we had not the power to legislate for its execution, and what this Government did after that agreeing to protect trade-marks was done under a misapprehension and we are not bound by it.

Foreign governments are presumed to know that this Government is one of limited powers, having only those powers which are conferred on it in the Constitution, and to know and recognize the extent of those powers as well as we, so that in justice and equity we would not be bound to pass any law for the protection of foreign trade-marks only so far as power existed at the time the treaties were made to enact laws for their execution. But if that is true, then we are not morally or in justice bound to any foreign government to pass such legislation, which gives the preference to foreign citizens over our own. But if gentlemen upon the Judiciary Committee base this legislation, as they say they do and are unanimous in that, upon treaties with foreign nations, they must first have a treaty and then legislate to execute it. Now what is the fact? We have now in existence treaties with foreign nations upon this subject, namely, with the Argentine Confederation, with Austria, with Belgium, with Brazil, France, the German Empire, Great Britain, and Russia. With all other foreign actions we have no treaty and treat gentlemen sale upon the second of the second nations we have no treaty, and yet gentlemen ask us to pass a general law which will cover all nations who may through their citizens ask protection of our laws. They do not limit it to those with whom we have treaty obligations on the subject.

We have no such treaties with Bolivia, with Chili, with China, with Colombia, with Denmark, with Mexico, with Japan, with Spain, with Switzerland, and other nations. And yet under the provisions of this law the citizens of all these nations with whom we have no treaties whatever could come here and claim protection of their trade-marks in our courts.

The Judiciary Committee say we could not pass a law or legislate on the subject as regards these nations with whom we have no treaties, because we have not the power, except where necessary and proper, to execute treaties, and such legislation, therefore, would be void. So that the law is unconstitutional so far as it legislates for foreign nations which have no treaties with us on the subject, as well as being void as to the Indians.

Now, as to Congress getting power to legislate upon the subject at all through the treaty power, I put this question to the Judiciary Committee: Admitting that Congress has no power to legislate upon the subject of trade-marks for our own citizens and internally, can Congress get more power by virtue of a treaty than it now has? Can a treaty with a foreign government grant to Congress a power it has not without the treaty to legislate internally and affecting our own citizens? The Judiciary Committee have expressed no opinion on that subject and do not enter into a discussion of it; but it seems to me the gravest question connected with this bill. Even admitting we had the treaties by which we had agreed to protect foreign trademarks by national legislation, can we get the power to legislate on that subject, affecting the internal relations of our citizens in trade and commerce, the domestic relations, the police and State regulations, and rights and remedies, as the Judiciary Committee say? Can we get that power by virtue of a treaty?

As regards that question I believe this to be a correct principle of law: A treaty does not confer upon Congress a power to legislate as between persons in the State, whether citizens or foreigners, in their internal commerce where that power does not exist, without such treaty, incidental to some general power. But a treaty agreeing to legislate in such cases by controlling the transactions between foreign citizens and the people of the United States is void. I refer the committee and the House to the following brief upon that subject: 5 McLean, 348; 10 Pet., 362; 2 Cranch, 358; 4 Wheat., 316; Story on the Constitution, third edition, sections 1508, 1519; also sections 1243 and 1244:

[Extracts from debates on the sixth article of the Constitution, to be found in Elliott's Debates, volume 3.]

They can by this make no treaty which is repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution or is inconsistent with the delegated powers.—Speech of Governor Nicholas, of Virginia, page 508.

Though the king can make treaties, yet he cannot make a treaty contrary to the constitution of his country.—Speech of Governor Mason, of Virginia, page 514.

The exercise of the power [to make treaties] must be consistent with the object of the delegation.

The object of treaties is the regulation of intercourse with foreign nations, and is external. I do not think it possible to enumerate all the cases in which such external regulations would be necessary. * * * Would it not be considered as a dangerous principle in the British government were the king to have the same power in internal regulations as he has in the external business of treaties? Yet, as among other reasons it is natural to suppose he will prefer the interest of his own to that of another country, it is thought proper to give him this external power of making treaties. This distinction is well worthy of the consideration of gentlemen.—

Speech of Madison.

Suppose we had no general law of the United States, would the President ever have made such treaties?

The act must be for the means requisite and fairly applicable to the attainment of the end of some other express power granted. (Story, section 1245.)

If we had the power to legislate for the registration and protection of trade-marks under any clause of the Constitution, then it would be within the power of the President to make a treaty for a reciprocity in international legislation. And it would be within the discretion of the Legislature to make such laws as should be necessary and proper to carry into execution his treaty.

Especially do I refer gentlemen to the case in tenth Peters, case of New Orleans against the United States. The question was as to the United States having power to control the quays of New Orleans.

Under the King of France before we received that territory the sovereign had that power to make all the regulations. Under the King of Spain it was the same. And when the territory was ceded to us by treaty they ceded to us the same sovereign power over that territory that they had. The question arose in this case whether or not under that treaty the United States Government got the power to control these quays. The decision is in tenth Peters. I read from page 736 of that report. The Supreme Court say that the government of the quays would be a police power; and then they say this:

The Government of the United States as was well observed in the argument-This case was argued by Webster on the part of New Orleansis one of limited power. It can exercise authority over no subjects except those which have been delegated to it; and—

Notice this sentence-

Congress cannot by legislation enlarge the Federal jurisdiction; nor can it be en-larged under the treaty-making power.

That is just the point I make, that the power of Congress to legislate upon subjects over which the general clauses of the Constitution do not give them power cannot be increased by a treaty. And the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has found no decision, and I presume the Judiciary Committee have been diligent and have searched the reports and have given us all the authority by which they sustain this power, yet they have found no decision but one; and I wish to call the attention of the House to that. The gentleman from Georgia supports this legislation by that reference alone. He says this:

Congress has "power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof." (Article 1, section 8, Constitution.) Congress, though powerless in this regard, under the commerce clause, may so legislate in aid of the treaty-making power. This idea is fully illustrated and sustained by the Supreme Court in United States vs. Coombs, 12 Peters's Reports, 78.

You observe the gentleman says that the idea that we get this power from the treaty-making power is fully illustrated by the Supreme Court in this case :

The question was, whether certain obstructions to commerce, not at sea nor within tide-marks, but on land, could be punished by Congress? The court said—

And here he quotes the decision of the court-

"Any offense which thus interferes with or obstructs such commerce and naviga-tion, though done on land, may be punished by Congress under its general au-thority"—

And the gentleman italicizes these four words "under its general authority"—

"to make all laws necessary and proper to execute their delegated constitutional authority."

And I would italicize those words. They may make all laws necesand I would italicize those words. They may make all laws necessary and proper under the general authority to execute their delegated constitutional authority. Nothing else. They must have delegated constitutional authority first. Then under this general clause they may execute that appropriately to the end intended.

But the gentleman from Georgia is mistaken when he says the Supreme Court put that decision upon the treaty-making power, and the Committee on the Judiciary, if they place this legislation upon this decision in twelfth Peters, are mistaken as to where the power rests. I read from that decision, page 78:

But we are of the opinion that under the clause of the Constitution giving power to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, Congress possesses the power to punish offenses of the sort which are enumerated in the ninth section of the act of 1823, now under consideration.

It was not the treaty-making power under which they said we had this authority, but it was the power to regulate commerce with for-eign nations. If the gentleman will read this decision carefully he will find that they said we had not the power under the judicial jurisdictional clause, that it was not a maritime offense; but that we had the power under the clause to regulate commerce. They did not place it upon the treaty-making power at all. We do not derive from the treaty-making clause the power to punish for offenses outside of those committed on the high seas and in the tide-waters. I ask gentlemen of the Committee on the Judiciary to show me one sentence in that decision where the court placed this authority under the treaty-making power; or making the case favorable to this principle announced in their report; it is directly against them, for the court sought and cited a general clause of the Constitution under which Congress could claim the power and did not rely on the treaty.

The expression of the Supreme Court in 10 Peters is not controverted, and I do not find a decision anywhere, and the Committee on the Judiciary have not found any, which states that Congress gains any such power under the treaty-making clause. That is the only decision which the gentlemen of that committee have cited, and they say it fully sustains the power of Congress under the treaty-making authority. And we see it, in fact, is against them.

I desire to call the attention of the House, and of the committee that made this report, to the following principle laid down in Kent, eleventh edition, page 266:

If the end be legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, all means which are proper and plainly adapted to this end, and which are not prohibited, are lawful.

This is the extent, and the full extent I claim, to which Congress can go under that power. But the members of the Committee on the Judiciary themselves say that the end herein sought to be attained is not within the scope of the Constitution, the end being legislation on the subject of trade-marks. That committee has expressly said that the Constitution does not give any power to Congress to do that thing; that no power is given to the General Government by the Constitution to regulate trade-marks; that there is no express power in the execution of which the regulation of trade-marks is expedient, useful, or conducive to the end to be attained in any general power. That control of the subject is left to the States.

They say that it is not contained under the commerce clause, the patent clause, or the copyright clause. They might have placed it finally under the constitutional sovereignty power. They might have said that under the sovereignty of the United States this power might rest in its dealing with other sovereigns; but they put it nowhere in any constitutional power to be found within the scope of the Consti-

Now I ask those gentlemen, and especially the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND,] whose brilliant peroration on the subject of State rights closed his argument, this question: Should the President and Senate by treaty agree that none but Rhine wines should be sold in the United States, that, in the language of the treaty, "all others should be strictly prohibited," does the gentleman believe that Congress would have the power to legislate to execute that treaty? And if he does not believe that, will he point out to me wherein such a power to legislate would differ from that claimed in the present case, giving preferred rights and remedies to foreigners as between them and American citizens?

If the President and Senate should by treaty agree that the sale of all but foreign steel rails should be "strictly prohibited" in the United States, would the gentleman say that it is our duty to legislate to execute that treaty, and that Congress gained the power to do so because the treaty required it? If he can say so in the present case, he can as well say so in that; because he says that the treaty alone is the grant of power to Congress, that otherwise Congress would not have the power.

Suppose that the President and Senate should make a treaty providing that the sale of all but Havana cigars should be "strictly pro-hibited" in the United States. Would that confer upon Congress the power to legislate to execute that treaty, and to strictly prohibit the sale of all other cigars? If it would not, would power be conferred upon Congress by a treaty to protect foreign trade-marks and not our own? It seems to me that the Judiciary Committee, although they had this subject under consideration a long time, with instructions to report it as soon as possible, have certainly not reached the bottom of the subject in reporting and recommending a bill of this character.

Passing from the constitutional question, let me examine for a moment the practical question. If treaties are made requiring the Government to legislate in a certain way in harmony with foreign governments, it would still remain a question with the legislative branch in their discretion whether they ought so to legislate. It would remain with them to decide whether they would do this thing which the President has agreed shall be done. We are the legislative branch, on which alone this power is conferred by the Constitution.

within our discretion to determine whether we will pass the legisla-tion which the President has stipulated shall be passed in any treaty. Now, supposing you had the power, I ask whether in the exercise of that discretion you would favor the passage of this kind of a bill? Let us see what it is. Under this bill foreigners are to be protected Let us see what it is. Under this bill foreigners are to be protected by national legislation against infringement of their trade-marks. Under this bill they may go to United States courts for their remedies, both civil and criminal. They may there ask for damages; they may there ask for injunctions; they may there ask for searchwarrants to hunt out and destroy all implements supposed to be in the hands of any person for the purpose of infringing or pirating upon their trade market.

their trade-mark

Under this legislation, if it should pass, you might find in our United States courts two persons standing at the bar for justice. One happens to be a Frenchman, a German, a Russian, or a Turk; the other happens to be an American citizen. The one invokes the power of that court to give him judgment for his damages, and he gets it; the other is refused. One asks for a search-warrant to hunt out and destroy suspected implements by which his trade-mark may be counterfeited. He gets it, while a similar application made by the other is refused. One goes into the United States courts under the criminal laws and prosecutes to punishment by the severest penalties of fine and imprisonment any man attempting to counterfeit his trade-mark; the other stands alone in that court without remedy. One, as against a citizen of the States, may sue in the United States courts; the American cannot. One produces a United States certificate of registration, which is the prima facie evidence, from Maine to Alaska, of his ownership, upon which he readily wins his case; the other cannot, but is left to grope in the long past to prove his prior use of his mark with all the difficulties of finding the evidence which time has swept

When that lone man rises up and asks, "Why am I not here with the same rights that these other men have?" you will see the French-man under his flag, the German under his flag, the Briton under his flag, the Russian or the Turk under his, pointing at him and saying, "You are an American citizen; by that misfortune you have under the legislation of your way." the legislation of your own Congress no rights here; we are preferred to you in every respect."

Mr. Speaker, for these several reasons I say this bill ought not to pass. I hope it will not receive the support of this House nor even the support of the Judiciary Committee. First, it is unconstitutional, because it legislates for trade-marks in commerce with the Indians, with whom there is no treaty providing for such protection. Next, with whom there is no treaty providing for such processon. Ast, it undertakes to give the same protection to foreign nations with whom we have no treaties on the subject; and by the reasoning of the Judiciary Committee itself this legislation falls to the ground with reference to such nations. Next, as to foreign nations with whom we have treaties on this subject, those treaties were made under a misapprehension of our power as a nation, under the supposition that we had the authority to pass such laws as were passed in 1870 and 1876, legislation which we supposed until last October had full force. The treaty-making power in making these treaties acted under a misapprehension; and the immutable principles of justice require that no man or government or society shall be prejudiced by what has been done under a misapprehension of that kind.

But supposing these treaties to be in full force, to have been made with full knowledge of their effect, that would not confer upon Congress any additional power not within the scope of the Constitution. It would be disastrous for us to adopt the principle that any treaty made by the Executive can increase the powers of Congress.

This bill does not refer to external matters. Treaties relate to ex-Ins old does not refer to external matters. Treaties relate to external matters between sovereigns. This bill goes into internal matters between citizen and citizen. Why, sir, you will find in this bill a provision that between citizens of the States this bill applies. When they are citizens of the same State, and the trade-mark in controversy is intended to be used for foreign commerce, this bill gives them all these rights as against every other citizen of the State. It undertakes to go into the State and as between citizens of that State give them rights as above all others, if their trade-mark is intended to be used in foreign commerce or with the Indian tribes. All through, the bill affects citizens of the States. If two men are engaged in ordinary traffic—in the grocery or any other business—in a State, this bill steps in and affects the one without affecting the other, because of the trade-mark which happens to be on some of the goods.

Again, I object to the bill and hope it will not pass because if it vere constitutional, if we had the power to pass it, if we could get were constitutional, if we had the power to pass it, if we coming get this power from a treaty, it would not be a just and righteous law, but would be an anomaly and an outrage upon the American statute-book. The result would be that any American owning a trade-mark would be driven to assign that trade-mark to a foreigner and then come back under a foreign flag to get protection. If I had a trade-mark and wanted to have it protected by the United States courts under the provisions of this bill in the interstate commerce of the country, I would immediately assign it to some German, Frenchman, or some other foreigner, and then come back under the foreign flag and ask for my rights under this bill because I could not get them under my own flag.

This is not the way foreign nations do. We have treaties with Germany and treaties with France, and they do not treat their citizens in this way. In violation of their treaties to-day on the statutebooks, France has this provision: The nineteenth article provides that all foreign products bearing the mark or name of a manufacturer resident in France, or the name or the place of a French factory, shall be excluded from France or seized. That is the way they do there. If an American comes with goods with the stamp of their factory on them they are excluded and cannot come into the ports of that country, and are seized and confiscated. Yet you say, in opposi-tion to that, they may come here and ours shall not compete with them in the commerce of this country under your legislation.

Take Germany. How does she treat her citizens under the treaty which says our citizens shall have the same rights as her own subjects? Section 13 of her trade-mark law is as follows:

Every native producer or trader who has received protection or authorization for his trade-mark may, in the event of another unlawfully making use of the same or the name of his firm, in virtue of this law enter an action against any person so doing in order to obtain a legal decision that he is not entitled to make use of such trade-mark. The producer or trader may likewise prosecute any person who unlawfully exposes or keeps for sale any goods unlawfully marked with the complainant's trade-mark; that the person so doing may be judicially declared unauthorized to expose or keep for sale any goods so marked.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. McCOID. Yes. sir.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. When the treaty comes in and says the foreigner shall have the same rights as the native, does not that make it practically read native or foreigner?

Mr. McCOID. If the gentleman will examine he will find this is a law made after the treaty, and not before it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The treaty is that each foreigner shall have in the country of the other the same rights that the citizen has at home. Therefore you legislate for the citizen but you treat for

Mr. McCOID. Not at all. It is necessary for that nation under the treaty to legislate and execute it. They do not get rights which require legislation to create by a treaty; they only get them by leg-islation under the treaty. Does the gentleman say as a legal princi-ple that a treaty is law, where it requires legislation, without that legislation?

Mr. OSMER. They get recognition by the treaty.

Mr. McCOID. Yes; they get recognition by the treaty and the Government then enacts the law to give them the remedy. But a treaty agreeing to certain rights and remedies does not become a law without the legislation to carry it out. Now, under their legislation after the treaty, they have in Germany enacted what I have read in section 13.

I say I object to this bill because it gives the foreigner preference over our own people, and, for one, I do not want to place our citizens in any such relation. I object to it for its want of reciprocity, for its want of mutuality; I object to it on the ground that we do not have the same rights and cannot give the same rights to American citizens under our laws which we give to them. I know very well we would like to do so. I know gentlemen say we would go to the extent of our power, but we do not do it because we have not the power. I say we had better wait until by grant of power from the States we can make a law which will be uniform, and harmonious, and equitable, and just both to our own citizens and to foreigners.

CAN TRADE-MARKS BE PROTECTED UNDER PATENT LAWS?

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other point which is spoken of in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and which was referred to by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] in his remarks. It is there said under the patent laws patented goods may be protected. In that I think the committee is entirely mistaken. The Judiciary Committee in saying that trade-marks may be protected under the patent laws must have forgotten that there is no analogy between them whatever. Although the patent laws require the name and date of the patent to be put on goods, there is no trade-mark in it. It has no reference to trade-marks.

On this subject I took the liberty of submitting certain interroga-tories to the Commissioner of Patents, and I ask the Clerk to read those interrogatories and the reply which I received to them from the Commissioner.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington, D. C., April 20, 1880.

Washington, D. C., April 20, 1880.

Dear Sir: In the determination of the necessity and practicability of national legislation upon the subject of the protection of trade-marks as between citizens of States, and a constitutional amendment under which such legislation may be had, it becomes important to know whether:

First. Under the power of Congress of securing for limited times * * * to inventors the exclusive right to their respective * * discoveries, (article 1, section 8,) and to give such protection, and under which Congress has forbidden any one to "mark upon anything made, used, or sold by him for which he has not obtained a patent the name or limitation of the name of the patentee, or to put "patent," "patentee," or "letters-patent," or any word of like import with intent to imitate or counterfeit the mark or device of the patentee without his consent and prescribed as penalty for a violation—(Revised Statutes, section 4900)—trademarks are or may by further legislation be sufficiently protected on patented goods?

Second. Whether State legislation is sufficient to protect interstate trade-marks?

goods? Second. Whether State legislation is sufficient to protect interstate trade-marks? Second. Whether State legislation is sufficient to protect interstate trade-marks? Third. The propriety of protecting foreign trade-marks by national legislation, and leaving domestic trade-marks without any such direct legislation? Fourth. Why, if under patent laws trade-marks on patented goods may be sufficiently protected for our citizens, they may not also for foreign citizens? Fifth. What conflicts or confusion would result from State legislation and national legislation as to trade-marks under treaties? I respectfully request you to give your views on these questions, and such facts as in your opinion sustain them. And also the results of national protection under late laws now declared unconstitutional.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. A. McCOID.

M. A. McCOID.

To the COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

Department of the Interior,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1880.

Sir.: In reply to your informal inquiries, relating to trade-mark legislation, I have the honor to state—
First. That there is no such relation between trade-marks and patents and patentable inventions by which the provisions of the existing laws relating to patents can be applied to the protection of trade-marks.

The United States Supreme Court in the Steffins' case having expressly declared that the clause of the Constitution relating to protection to be given authors and inventors to their respective writings and discoveries cannot be construed to extend to trade-marks, it would necessarily follow that any amendment of the patent laws (which derive their validity from such clause of the Constitution) intended to affect the matter of trade-marks would to that extent be invalid.

Second. Section 4900 Revised Statutes, to which you have called my attention, is mandatory in requiring patentees to mark their articles as patented, together with the day and year the patent was granted, as notice to the public, and as a prerequisite in maintaining any suit for infringement, except on proof that the defendant was otherwise duly notified. But the announcement which that section requires to be made on patented articles can in no way be construed as a trade-mark. The United States Supreme Court, as well as other courts, both in this country and England, have repeatedly held that the mere announcement of a fact upon an article of manufacture, or the use merely of a generic name, consisting of the name of the manufacture, or words to denote quality, or the time and place of manufacture, are not proper subjects for a trade-mark under the common law. And it has also been held that after the expiration of a patent the public generally, in manufacturing the article, are entitled to use the name of the patente to designate or identify such manufacture with the one previously patented.

Third. The number of trade-marks heretofore regis such as now exist relating to trade-marks, is extremely valuable, and their value is so apparent to every citizen of this country that it is very natural for them to desire the same protection that is thus afforded foreigners. Whatever protection is afforded foreigners under our patent laws is also already extended to citizens, and no further amendment to those laws is needed for that purpose.

Fourth. One great advantage of the legislation by Congress on the subject of trade-marks has been the gradual adoption of a uniform system of adjudication by the United States courts in regard to the rights of the owners of trade-marks and the confidence which has been established with the public in all such matters that have come within the operation of Federal legislation and the adjudication of the Federal courts. Especially has this confidence been promoted by the penal protection afforded by recent legislation.

Notwithstanding the recent decision of the Supreme Court in holding the trademark acts invalid this office is receiving continually applications to the number of forty or fifty a month for registration; and where it is shown that the applicants are aware of the said decision, which fact is required to be made evident in every application, registration is granted subject to the provisions of the law hitherto in force.

I regret that the very short time given me to answer your inquiries has pre-force.

I regret that the very short time given me to answer your inquiries has prevented a thorough consideration of the subject—a subject which is a much older one than that of patents, and covers a far wider field. Patented articles are the product of inventive genius alone, and their production is confined to comparatively few, while trade-marks, in themselves also assignable personal property, are applicable to all articles of commerce, and may be adopted by any one who wishes to distinguish his goods from those made by another.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. H. DOOLUTTLE

W. H. DOOLITTLE, Acting Commissioner.

Hon. M. A. McCoid, House of Representatives.

Mr. McCOID. I have a brief on the subject supporting this statement which I will print without reading. After the expiration of a patent it becomes public property, and in that respect would not be patentable as a trade-mark. The words imprinted upon patented patentable as a trade-mark. The words imprinted upon patented articles of manufacture are common property after date of expiration of the patent. (The Locke Manufacturing Company vs. Levi C. Boyington, (October, 1875,) Official Gazette, Patent Office, volume 9, January-June, page 455; Edleston vs. Vick, 23 English Law and Equity Reports, Official Gazette, Patent Office, volume 14, page 270.) The office has hitherto refused to record such names as trade-marks, and office has hitherto refused to record such names as trade-marks, and the courts, both in England and this country, have declined to extend protection to their use. In this case the vice-chancellor held that in the matter of "Taylor's patent pins," the patent having expired, everybody had a right to use that term. If that alone constituted the whole of the label, it was public property.

C. E. Richardson et al., (3 Official Gazette, 120:) The Commissioner refused registration of the words "A. Richardson's Union leather-splitting machine," on the ground that the words presented had become the generic name of the machines by which the public knew them them.

The Consolidated Fruit Jar Company, (14 Official Gazette, 169:) When by long usage the name of a person in designating a certain class of manufactures has become generic in its character, such a name is at common law not a lawful trade-mark. The Commissioner is prohibited by section 4939 from registering as a trade-mark the name of a person merely. While the owners of a patent have the right by virtue of such patent to stamp goods manufactured thereunder with the name of the patentee, such right succeeds to the public with expiration of the patent, and the exclusive monopoly of such name cannot lawfully be vested in the present or former owners of the patent as a trade-mark. (Canal Company vs. Clark, 13 Wallace, 311.)

Another principle of the old trade-mark law was that the name of a person cannot be used as a trade-mark or the generic name describing an article cannot be made a trade-mark; and in the bill gentle-men have reported here they have made provision that the name shall not be made a trade-mark, carrying out the decisions to which I have alluded in that respect, also the old law, so that under the patent laws no such protection could be given as the Judiciary Committee seem to indicate. These are all false hopes, forced and unnatural.

I lay down these two propositions:

First. It is a public necessity that we have throughout the United States one universal, uniform, harmonious system of legislation upon

States the universal, uniform, narmonous system of legislation upon the subject of trade-marks.

Second. There is no power granted to Congress in the Constitution to enact such a system, nor has Congress the power in any practical way to legislate upon the subject.

trade-mark is a species of personal property of such intangible and invisible character as to require for convenience and control that it be evidenced to the rightful possessor by the grant of a certificate by Government, and although it belongs as a natural right at common law to the individual who originally adopts and uses it, yet that right should be merged into the statutory grant when made. In the mixed law to the individual who originally adopts and uses it, yet that right should be merged into the statutory grant when made. In the mixed form of our Government it has long since been demonstrated by experience that such subject can alone be controlled harmoniously by the Congress, and it was the purpose of the fathers of the Government, who in convention framed the Constitution, to include in the powers of Congress all such subjects. The evils which led to this practice, under the old confederation, are familiar to all, and I take up no time to enumerate them. These evils were but examples of all that would result to the country if this subject of trade-marks is solved in any way except by giving the entire control of it to Congress. Confusion, conflict in State laws and State decisions and State practice, vexatious law suits, jealousies, and loss of value to all such property and the interest of manufactures and trade would result. and the interest of manufactures and trade would result.

That this subject was not so specifically granted along with others of its analogues in the Constitution is because at that time it was unknown; but few cases had been reported; it was unmentioned in law-books of the day, and its importance was unfelt. It has grown up since, and to make a grant of that power now is but carrying out the spirit of the founders of the Government. The very nature of the property is such that we cannot cast lots upon it and divide it out to the jurisdiction of thirty-eight governments who are unable to form treaties with each other, and give the General Government what is left under interstate and foreign commerce. The commercial nations of the world have by reciprocal treaties expressed their opinion that reciprocity, uniformity, and harmony in the protection of trade-marks should exist. But there is no way of obtaining reciprocal action among individual States but by transferring the whole subject to Congress. Grants in the Constitution of power to Congress to legislate upon a subject of common interest is in the nature of a treaty of the States, and as all the nations have united in this necessity, so should the States in this amendment, to the end of securing a harmonious system of enactments. The conflicting action and failures on the part of nations to recognize the rights of trade-mark owners fairly exhibit the natural result of State legislation.

If protection is to be limited by State lines, trade-marks will become of little value.

It is laid down in all authorities on this subject that such marks in their very nature are unlimited by time or territory; that they have individuality—a singleness and unity which renders the subject indivisible.

The practical effect of an attempted regulation of these commercial signatures, under the theory that they come within the clause of the Constitution on the subject of commerce, is to give to one portion of our citizens superior protection and leave a large portion, perhaps the largest, out of its pale. It would be very offensive—simply outrageous—if such a law should prove to be valid and give to aliens the monopoly of trade-mark protection, leaving our own countrymen to the cold remedies of common law.

It is far better not to undertake any Quixotic attempts against the Constitution, any mere tentative, temporary statute. Our foreign or interstate interests may as well wait as the larger portion of trade and traffic between citizens of the same State. Up to 1870 all that we had was the common law, and we extended in our courts to treaty-protected aliens equal protection with our own people. We are, not through our fault, thrown back to that status. Aliens only suffer with ourselves the temporary inconvenience of the statutory interregnum. They cannot justly complain or retaliate. This is a government of delegated constitutional powers; and they must wait the constitutional process by which that instrument can be amended and statutes passed. If we in good faith enter upon the path best calculated to secure that protection which they demand, it is all they can reasonably ask.

reasonably ask.

It is not the part of wisdom to allow the swift pressure of their interests to push us to that partial action which the Supreme Court well says "it is quite probable * * * if the matter were now before that body [Congress] it would be unwilling to do, namely, make a trade-mark law which is only partial in its operation, and which would complicate the right which parties would hold in some instances under the act of Congress and in others under State laws." This is the discordant, partial, and unsatisfactory law now urged as a substitute for the constitutional amendment. The Supreme Court refused to make it by judicial construction and we should refuse to make it by doubtful constitutional experiment.

NATURE OF TRADE-MARKS.

The origin of this species of property, the rights and remedies, sustain the proposition that it is and should be controlled by a comprehensive national code. First, trade-marks exist as a natural proprietary right, and received recognition and judicial protection prior to any statutory enactments. And they now, in the absence of any legislation on the part of the United States, or of any constitutional power to so legislate, still exist as the property of the person who has first adopted and used a mark on any certain article to distinguish it. Such person has the right of action for damages for the fraudulent such person has the right of action for damages for the transmient use of his mark against any one who applies it to any similar article of other origin or make. He has this proprietary right for an unlimited time and bounded by no State or nation. He has also the equitable right to restrain the unlawful use of his mark.

The right exists. The owners ought to be further protected. The common-law remedies have been felt to be inadequate for many reasons.

First. The issue of whether or not the plaintiff is in the rightful possession of the mark by prior adoption and use, must in each separate case be established. As time wears away this becomes very difficult, if not impossible. There is no court in which this issue may be once presumptively adjudged for all, and a record of such judgment certified and the result remain, once for all, res adjudicata. Second. The remedies are not sufficient to restrain the greed of gain and the bravery of fraud. The gains are so out of proportion to the risk that, in the general stampede of pirates, a trade-mark depreciates as fast as flat money. The public are so deceived they put no faith in even the genuine; and the manufacturer finds that which wholesome legislation would render of great value to himself and the wholesome legislation would render of great value to himself and the purchasing public comparatively worthless—not worth the expense of the endless petty litigation necessary to preserve it.

Third. Beyond the little circle of his own domestic life, his State, and his friends he is left to the dim sense of natural justice, which lends its cold hand to the alien suitor. He is without remedy.

But I believe as yet no one has seriously announced himself as op-posed to additional statutory protection to trade-mark owners. But the discussion is between three classes of thinkers.

First, those who believe the local legislation of the States all that is required, and that the subject of trade-marks should, with the earmarks and brands of domestic animals, be governed by domestic statutes of each State.

Second, those who believe that it is a subject that can be practically divided, and partial control left with the Legislatures of States; and the other portion, under the head of commerce among the States, Congress has constitutional power to regulate.

And third, those who are of the opinion that it is an indivisible subject, entirely national in its vast importance of which the mere commerce between citizens of different States would cover but little if any, and that no clause of the Constitution comprehends it; but that it has grown up and become recognized as requiring protection, in the interests of manufactures and trade since the adoption of the Constitution, and that it is of sufficient importance to be made the subject of a grant of power to Congress, in order that the whole subject may be made the object of one uniform, harmonious, and efficient national statute.

Before entering upon the discussion of these propositions, let us inquire into the nature of the right or property to be protected. A trade-mark is the exclusive privilege of using a mark or symbol to distinguish articles of manufacture so that purchasers may identify them. To perfect a trade-mark as the property of a person requires the manufacturing of a certain article of salable property, the selection of a certain mark or design to identify such property as genuine, the impressing of that mark upon the property. These done, and the use is complete.

This adoption of the mark and impressing it on the goods is the complete and perfect use of a trade-mark. The manufacture of the goods before or the shipment and sale of the goods after are in no proper sense comprehended in the subject. See Brown on Trade-marks, section 52, and section 109.

The mark does not exist-except it be as a conception of the mindbut in law or fact it does not exist until it is impressed upon goods, as your signature only exists when written. In fact, the marking as your signature only exists when written. In fact, the marking the goods of a manufacturer with his commercial signature or stamp of genuineness is, if a part of either, a part of the finishing act of the manufacture of the article, rather than belonging to the transportation, sale, or commerce of such goods. The goods are prepared and marked in the manufactory before they are ready for transfer to the sales or shipping room. Of course every separate act of the manufacture, from the purchase of the raw material to the impress of the signet of trade, the seal of ownership, is prompted by and ac-companied with an intent to sell in any and all the markets it is pos-sible to enter. And the goods thus converted are intended to be the sible to enter. And the goods thus completed are intended to be the subjects of intrastate, interstate, and foreign commerce. The entire thing enjoyed is the preference in market for certain goods. In the words of one court:

It is a right which can be said to exist only and can be tested only by its violation. It is the right which any person designating his wares or commodities by a particular trade-mark, as it is called, has to prevent others from selling wares which are not his marked with that trade-mark in order to mislead the public, and so, incidentally, to injure the person who is owner of the trade-mark.

The property which is to be the subject of constitutional and congressional protection is in the combination of the article manufactured and the distinguishing mark, its consummation as the rightful possession of its owner, and its violation consists in stamping the mark on the goods.

Mark on the goods.

As patents and copyrights are already subjects of congressional clauses and of exclusive legislation by Congress, a comparison with them will give a clear idea of the nature of the property in trade-marks. Primarily, trade-marks differ from patents and copyrights. Their origin differs. A mark for use in trade is selected anywhere; the word, the idea, the sign, may be as old as Adam. It may be a mule's ear, a lion, an elephant, or a star. It originates only by adoption and use. Patents spring from original invention; the owner is father to the idea. the idea.

Copyrights also belong to the claimant by reason of originality of production. It is the creature of his intellect, his thoughts, his genius, and therefore his own.

In this they differ. Patents and copyrights become the owners' property in a different way and for different reasons from trade-marks. But even in this difference there is a latent analogy. Priority of use, the very twin of originality, is the title-bond to a trade-mark. One is the priority of thought, of invention, of discovery; the other the priority of combination. And in that combination there is originalpriority of combination. And in that combination there is originality, thought, invention, and discovery. Many patents are but the result of priority of combination of "plain, simple, old, and well-known" things. Many grand and beautiful productions of the most brilliant stars in the literary world are but masterly conceptions of the combined effect of familiar fancies, the precipitate of old thoughts. In this sense the adopter and user of a trade-mark is both the author and the inventor of the combination of the marked goods. And he has no exclusive property in it except in that original application in which it is impressed upon the article.

But I am not differing from the opinion of the Supreme Court. I only intend to show you that while this subject of trade-marks was not contemplated by our fathers in the writing of the clauses of the Constitution on the subjects of patents and copyrights, (as it was not in the clause on the subject of commerce,) yet the subject, as it has grown into importance since their day, is analogous to them both, even in that in which it differs most, its very origin. But admitting this difference between them here in the literal want of a relation to invention or discovery, or in the want of originality or the fruit of intellectual labor, I venture to assert that this is the only point of difference. This absence of invention and originality excludes it from the contemplation of the clauses of the Constitution in relation to these subjects in the opinion of the Supreme Court. Pass from the birth of the proprietary right and examine the nature of the property. What do you find? The species of property is the same. The character, the nature of some rights is best disclosed by their violation, and this is true of these three proprietary rights, patents, copyrights, and trademarks. Their violation is an infringement. In all these it is identical. American decisions have from the first, and English decisions have at last, placed the protection of trade-marks along with patents and copyrights upon the ground of property. In deciding upon just the nature of this property and its distinctiveness from commerce let me call your attention to all property of this kind. I may omit some, but I believe they are included in these patents, copyrights, trademarks, the good-will of trade, and the property in the name of a magnetic creative continuous literary raphical in magazine or other serial literary publication.

In point of property all these stand upon the same ground. However that property may be acquired, it is itself the same in all. They are identical, too, in the remedies which the law extends to them. The are identical, too, in the remedies which the law extends to them. The nature of the injury in each in case of piracy or infringement is the same. That injury is felt in cheapening the price of the goods by an inferior competitor and destroying the reputation of goods by the discovery of the inferiority, or, if not inferior, by fraudulently securing the advantages of the character of another in the market. The common-law remedies are the same. The injured party has his action for damages for fraud or the infringement, and his equitable right to restrain by injunction, and ought to have the better remedies of the restrain by injunction, and ought to have the better remedies of the statutes against counterfeiting and pirating.

To sum up, then, the discussion of the nature of the property in trade-marks, I say a trade-mark is a symbol of genuineness impressed upon certain salable goods by the prior appropriator of that mark; that he has a species of property in the exclusive application of the symbol to the specified articles; that his remedies are damages for infringement and injunction, and other more efficient statutory protection; that in the species of property, the injury, and the remedies, it is identical with patents and copyrights.

IS THE POWER TO REGULATE TRADE-MARKS CONTAINED IN THE POWER TO REGULATE COMMERCE?

But the point of serious divergence of opinion, perhaps, is the next, that the subject can be practically divided into that regulation of trade-marks used in interstate commerce by itself, and that part used in State commerce by itself; and that Congress, under the power to regulate commerce among the States, already has all that is needed for her share, leaving to the States the rest. A great many

Is needed for her share, leaving to the States the rest. A great many still hold to this opinion.

I suppose the germ of that opinion and the suggestion of that position which takes form in the bill (H. R. No. 2573) by Mr. ARMFIELD, lies in the remarks of the Supreme Court in the late opinion declaring all present laws unconstitutional; and I want first to carefully examine that opinion upon that point. Of course we all know the danger of sairing upon the running words of a writer of sairing upon the running words of a writer of a position. danger of seizing upon the running words of a writer of an opinion who means no more than to decide the case in point, and dreams not of suggesting legislation, or any other improper obiter dicta. And we know, too, how utterly futile, how useless, and how injurious is the effort to cling to straws like a drowning man when a decision has swept away, as a flood, all the structure of law by taking from under it the formed of the condense of the con it the foundation. No judge would express his opinion upon this subject now. He would not prejudge a case off the bench which he was so careful to leave undecided on the bench.

You will find on page 5 of the report of the Committee on Manufactures, in the opinion of the court, the following language:

factures, in the opinion of the court, the following language:

The question, therefore, whether the trade-mark bears such a relation to commerce in general terms as to bring it within congressional control, when used or applied to the classes of commerce which fall within that control, is one which, in the present case, we propose to leave undecided. We adopt this course because when this court is called on in the course of the administration of the law to consider whether an act of Congress or any other department of the Government is within the constitutional authority of that department, a due respect for a co-ordinate branch of the Government requires that we shall decide that it has transcended its powers only when that is so plain that we cannot avoid the duty.

In such cases it is manifestly the dictate of wisdom and indicial propriety to decide no more than is necessary to the case in hand. That such has been the uniform course of this court in regard to statutes passed by Congress will readily appear to any one who will consider the vast amount of argument presented to us assailing such statutes as unconstitutional, and will count, as he may do on his fingers, the instances in which this court has declared an act of Congress void for want of constitutional power.

Here I suppose are the paragraphs in which is suggested the hope

Here I suppose are the paragraphs in which is suggested the hope that such constitutional legislation is possible.

The question was: Does the trade-mark bear such a relation to commerce as to be controlled by Congress as an attribute of it? They say, "We propose to leave it undecided." But why? Because

"a due respect * * * requires that we shall decide." Decide what? Decide "that it has transcended its powers." Then that is the disagreeable duty they propose to leave undone now, and to do "only when * * * we cannot avoid the duty." It is as much as "only when * * * we cannot avoid the duty." It is as much as to say Congress has not yet in that way or under that claim or pretense transcended its powers. It has not been so foolish or so grasping or so ill-informed as to even believe it was acting under that clause of the Constitution.

When it is plain that such is the case, when Congress undertakes to enact a law which can only be valid in that clause, and upon the claim that a trade-mark bears such a relation to commerce in general terms as to be a subject of its control, then, and not till then, in a proper case we will add one more to the few instances in which the Supreme Court have declared its acts void for want of constitutional power. Then the court proceeds to show that Congress did not claim such power under the commerce clause. It could not regulate commerce except "among the States," "with foreign nations," and "with the Indians." And as the largest part of commerce is perhaps within the State, the power would not be adequate, not sufficient, not comprehensive enough. It was evident the regulations of trade should and were intended to be "applicable to all trade, to commerce at all points." "Its broad purpose was to establish a universal system of trade-mark registration for the benefit of all who had already used a trade mark, or who wished to adopt one in the future, with regard to the character of the trade to which it was to be applied or the locality

I should rather believe from this language that the reserved judgment of the court, so far as formed, though unexpressed, was that so far as it affected protection of trade-marks in a State or its use in interstate traffic, the act was unconstitutional as a regulation of com-merce. I make these remarks upon that decision with much diffi-merce. I make these remarks upon that decision with much diffidence, not willing to put words in the mouths of the court or twist these from their intended meaning.

Now, let us sum up the argument found in the decision of the Supreme Court against the constitutionality of this legislation under the commerce clause. They assert that it is not every species of property which is the subject of commerce or which is used or even essential in commerce which is brought by this clause of the Constitution within control of Congress. They say a due respect requires that they decide that Congress has transcended its powers only when tution within control of Congress. They say a due respect requires that they decide that Congress has transcended its powers only when they cannot avoid it; and for that reason they leave it undecided. They show that this power of regulation conferred on Congress is limited while trade-marks require unlimited regulation, and that the largest amount of traffic where it affects is beyond the limits of this power. They say it is evident Congress did not believe it was acting under this clause. They show that the broad purpose of congressional egislation was manifestly to establish a universal system for the benefit of all without regard to trade or locality.

They regard a partial law as so objectionable as not likely to pass Congress. They say it would complicate rights and cause a conflict of law between State and nation. They close by saying the inquiry whether these statutes can be upheld in whole or in part as valid and constitutional must be answered in the negative. That it is not upheld as a property of the statement of the same particles. upheld as a universal system under the patent clause, as a wholenot under the commerce clause so far as affects interstate and foreign commerce, in part. That is a bold mind that can face these state-ments of the decision and say they meant to suggest that such a law could be valid.

But I am the more confident in this, because this view is sustained by the best reasons; and in my judgment, upon the merits of the case, should it ever come before that Court, requiring their decision, they would decide the subject of trade-marks to bear no such relation to commerce as to bring it within congressional control.

It is not a subject of commerce; it is not a vehicle or instrument of commerce. It does not come within any of the decisions extending the meaning of the term commerce in the Constitution. It will not do to say, because the goods to which a trade-mark is applied are intended to be transported from one State to another, or sold by a citizen of one State to a citizen of another, that the mark becomes so related to commerce as to be the subject of congressional control. The argument proves too much, and would draw within the control of Congress all species of property and all the minutiæ of its manufacture.

If you take the subject out of the field of specialties, such as patents and copyrights, and place it within that of commerce, then you leave it there to be divided into parts and give it an even worse status than if left entirely to the States. It becomes then your duty to carve out of it what is commerce within a State, what is commerce among the States, what is foreign commerce, and what is commerce with the Indians. Where will you draw your lines without confusion? with the Indians. Where will you draw your lines without confusion? How will you frame your statutes with precision? Who is to decide what claimant has the priority? Who is to reconcile conflicting decisions? How are you going to bring about uniformity in the system? When Massachusetts decides with A and South Carolina with B and Texas with C and the United States with E, and each within the limits of that part of the control of the subject committed by you to that particular government exercises his right of ownership to the same mark, who is to bring order out of that confusion?

You draw around your legislation the lines of constitutional limits by repeating the words "used in commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, or with the Indian tribes," as Richelieu threw around his protégé with the gesture of his hand the muniments of Rome. Then, christened thus in constitutional phrase, you do the identical things which the Supreme Court have decided you can not do. Are the forms of the Constitution put on and off so lightly and so easily? Does the Constitution change like the colors of a chameleon? On a green branch is it green; on a black, black? This, to my mind, is the simplest folly.

Suppose you say, "Used in commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, or with the Indian tribes." Trade-marks used in commerce among the several States! How used? What do you mean by "used in commerce among States?" Trade-marks are just marks. In the simplest meaning of that word, can you use a mark in commerce? You may mark something that is going to be shipped; or marks. In the simplest meaning of that word, can you use a mark in commerce? You may mark something that is going to be shipped; or you may ship something that is going to be marked; or you may mark something, and it may some time be shipped. Again, are you going to give the proprietary right of a citizen of a particular State to a trade-mark used within his own State by your act to another to be "used in commerce among the States or with foreign nations?" How are you to tell, in the exercise of your divided jurisdiction, how much conflict you create with the local rights of others? While I enjoy in Iowa the protection of my trade-mark in the local markets of my State, are you to permit others shipping in from other States or any State, are you to permit others shipping in from other States or nations to pour in upon me, under the ægis of your protection and exclusive grant, goods impressed with my trade-mark? Then what do you mean, and where do you draw the line?

Mr. Speaker, do we not see that the subject is indivisible, insepara-Mr. speaker, do we not see that the subject is indivisible, inseparable; that, as Congress wisely attempted to do, had it had the power, what we want to get the power to do and do is to establish a universal system of trade-mark registration for the benefit of all, without regard to the character of the trade to which it is to be applied or the locality of the owner; to have a uniform system, one place of granting certificates, one place of record, one statute of protection, one ing certificates, one place of record, one statute of protection, one penalty of violations?

We have seen it is like patents and copyrights in nearly every respect. Ought it not, like them, to be made the specific subject of congressional control? Even were it possible to force the terms of the Constitution to meet the case, it would be vastly more harmful than to make a specific grant of the power, as the resolution provides. There is danger in extending the powers of Congress by inference and construction of its present clauses beyond their natural and original meaning. And it is much the safer and better plan to enlarge these powers by additional and express grants as in the progand original meaning. And it is much the safer and better plan to enlarge these powers by additional and express grants as in the progress of time they become necessary.

See the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, (9 Wheaton R., 198.)

In Veazie vs. Moor (14 Howard, 568) Justice Daniels says:

Taking the term commerce in its broadest acceptation, supposing it to embrace not merely traffic, but the means and vehicles by which it is prosecuted, can it properly be made to include objects and purposes such as those contemplated by the law under review? (A law granting the exclusive right to navigate the upper waters of a river lying wholly within the limits of the State granting it, impassably separated from tidal waters and not forming a part of any continuous track of commerce between States.) Commerce with foreign nations must signify commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with those nations, transactions which either immediately or at some stage of their progress must be extra-territorial. The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal between citizens of the same community or to a policy and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the centrol of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce. A pretension as far-reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce equally excludes from the regulation of commerce edit

To whip the devil around the stump and avoid the effect of a constitutional inhibition by the jugglery of a few empty words, were it possible, would be full of danger.

Why quibble around the Constitution and make a lame, indefinite useless law, instead of manfully shouldering the whole question, get the necessary power in the good old way, and then legislate intelli-gently and safely? All that could be secured by any other course would be additional doubt, litigation, conflict, until the law would become a dead letter.

Now, in reference to the amendment here, I ask leave to substitute for the amendment in its language the following, which I will ask the Clerk to read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 1. Congress shall have power to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks.

Mr. McCOID. That brings the constitutional amendment simply down to what we want, and there can be no objection, as I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say there might be, to the wording of the amendment, and I ask this to be made the section instead the one in the resolution, so that there may be no objection to the Now, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the amendment. Gentlemen here have expressed themselves—and I believe it is the general feeling upon the subject—that they are opposed and unwilling to amend the Constitution except upon a great necessity. I agree fully with the expressions of the gentleman from Georgia as to that venerable and venerated instrument, and I am in full accord with him on that subject that it is dear to use but the expressions of the second ject that it is dear to us by the associations of history in connection with the times in which it was made, and that it is wise in its provisions.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is only the articles of incorporation of this Government and the doctrine that it is unchangeable cannot be maintained for a moment. The American people are not a stolid unprogressive people that require no changes in their organic law. or states, extending new lines of railway, stretching telegraph wires and mountains: we are swarping above and talking he was a serior that the Constitution was designed by its founders not to be changed to fit the conditions of a growing, prosperous nation. The lion's skin may become too short. We are stretching our limbs; we are expanding our lungs; we are extending our territory, increasing the number of our States, extending new lines of railway, stretching telegraph wires across plains and mountains; we are swarping above and talking he across plains and mountains; we are swarming above and talking beneath the seas; we are overcoming new difficulties and contriving new forces and instruments of enterprise, and the giant form which is thus growing to manhood cannot lie within the narrow confines of the cradle of its infancy. And those honored men whose names we revere and whose work has come down to us with the sanctity that attaches to it intended that there should be changes in the organic law and provided that changes should be made. In reference to this necessity, I beg leave to read one or two extracts from the Civil Policy of America, by Draper.

He writes:

He writes:

The first and most important condition for the prosperity of a great nation is stability in its institutions. But stability must be carefully distinguished from immobility. We must bear in mind that the affairs of men are ever changing; successive generations live under essentially different conditions; public necessities are therefore continually varying, and disorder arises as soon as institutions prescribe one course and necessity demands another. To insure stability the political system must therefore admit of change—that change being in accordance with a law of variation which depends on a fixed principle. Unchangeability should belong to the law, not to the institutions issuing from it. In that manner alone can order and progress co-exist, and the demand made by modern statesmanship with so much solicitude be satisfied. It truly affirms that there can be no real order without progress, and no real progress without order.

Institutions well adapted for five millions of people will certainly be very unsuitable for lifty. Institutions intended for a narrow coast line will certainly be inadequate if applied to one of the quarters of the globe. Edifices, though they may be built of iron, will fall to pieces if the architect has not made provision for expansion at one point and contraction at another. Where motion must in the necessities of the case occur, it is essential for safety that there should be a harmony among the moving parts. Inequality of progressive movement implies strain, strain implies fracture. It is therefore the province of statesmanship to determine how change shall be provided for in political institutions, and what is the true nature of the law by which they shall be modified. Above all, it is its province to discover the immutable principles on which that law must rest. It is better for communities to advance through legal forms than by revolutionary impulses, or by attempting to secure stability through incessantly failing experiments. The only safe guide for them to follow i

Now, I have only to say further that changes in our Constitution Now, I have only to say further that changes in our Constitution should be made only for imperative reasons. It is only a question of necessity, so as to place ourselves as a nation and our people upon an equal footing with those of the commercial nations of the world. There is no power in the States to make treaties with each other. That power has been left to the General Government for them. This amendment provides no different rule with reference to this than is applicable to our treaties with England, France, Belgium, and the other nations of the world, stipulating that uniform laws shall govern all alike upon the subject of trade-marks. We have not hesitated to seek that uniformity of mutual protection by treaties with other governments, and why should we decline to unite our thirty-eight States in the same uniformity through constitutional amendment and nain the same uniformity through constitutional amendment and national legislation. We have not feared to change international law, why should we refuse to amend the interstate organic law. The Constitution, Mr. Speaker, is not a mummy of unchangeableness laid away in the pyramid of our reverence for our fathers, but the plastic charter for a living, growing, ever-changing people. Here is a great interest affecting vitally our trade and commerce, and we desire to legislate upon it. We thought we had the constitutional power. We enacted what we intended to be, in the language of the Supreme Court, a uniform system of trade-mark legislation. It worked well and satisfactorily to the whole people.

That legislation was declared void for want of constitutional power.

It is admitted by the opponents of this amendment that it would be a great convenience to the people. The plain, direct, practical way out of the difficulty is first to secure the power, all that we supposed we had by the constitutional amendment, and then legislate as we did before.

The gentleman from Georgia seems to think the subject a trivial one, and not of sufficient importance to justify this action; and in his attempt to belittle it he talks of the protection of "Winslow's Soothing Syrup" and such things as that. I wish to remind the gentleman, in order to relieve his mind from that attempt to belittle the subject, in order to relieve his mind from that attempt to belittle the subject, that he justifies and eulogizes our fathers for placing the copyright clause in our Constitution; but he might, with a like spirit of unfairness, as well have ridiculed them by referring to these copyrighted works I have before me, [holding them up]—the "Dashington Brothers' Negro Song-Book," the "Pitcher-of-Beer Songster," the "Sullivan and Harrington Sweet Jerusha Jane Songster," "Little Grant's Tired of Single Life Songster," "Mother Goose," "Weston Brothers' Laugh ing Chorus," and "Jenny Jones's Songster."

A MEMBER. Do not forget "Jack, the Giant-Killer."

Mr. MCCOID. I will include "Jack, the Giant Killer" as the gentleman suggests, and I might mention many others. The gentleman from Georgia attempts to belittle the subject; and yet he stands in from Georgia attempts to belittle the subject; and yet he stands in the presence of the fact that the great sovereignties of Germany and America, the great sovereignties of France and America, the great sovereignties of Russia and America, the great sovereignties of Belgium and America, and all the powers with whom we have treaties have met in solemn convention, and the high contracting powers have considered this subject and made it an important clause in treaties between great nations. Yet the gentleman could not point to anything of the kind with reference to the copyright laws or the patent laws. It is a subject of far more importance to-day to the prosperity of the American people, their trade or their commerce, than I fear the gentleman from Georgia has any idea of.

If that trade-mark law had existed under the penal section in the acts of Congress protecting trade-marks, we would soon have had thousands and thousands more of them. The trade-marks registered thousands and thousands more of them. The trade-marks registered in the Patent Office to-day do not represent one-tenth of the trade-marks in this country. You will find them in every grocery, in every store, in every manufactory, that are not recorded at all, because the people had not arrived at a knowledge of the efficiency of the protection of the national laws until 1876, when the penal clause was put in. Men will not protect themselves under the common law by suing for decrease for the result is to emplify the expense. But the penal for damages, for the result is too small for the expense. But the penal laws to punish the pirating and counterfeiting of trade-marks would lead every man who had a trade-mark to pay the fees of the Patent Office and receive his registration.

STATE RIGHTS AND STATE LEGISLATION.

I must refer briefly to another question which the gentleman from Georgia discussed, as to whether States may properly protect these rights. We have, the gentleman says, in a great many of the States laws on this subject; that the common law and State legislation afford all the protection American owners of trade-marks need. The gentleman from Georgia says:

It is claimed that the States cannot adequately protect trade-marks. Why not? Their judges are as honest and as learned in the law as those upon the United States benches. The jurors, if different in the two courts, are not better in those of the Federal courts; in some parts of the country they are much below the State standard of intelligence and virtue. States officers are more numerous, and equally faithful; their courts more numerous and more accessible; justice can be had cheaper and quicker in the State courts.

Again he says:

This Government has naught to do with the protection of purchasers of manufactured goods. It ought not to have; that work properly belongs to the several

And then he closes his remarks with a brilliant rhetorical peroration on the subject of State rights and State sovereignty, in which he says, "The United States is strong enough; let us magnify the

It is really pitiable to see how every subject of legislative action, great or small, is poisoned, discolored, and put beyond the pale of just consideration in the minds of some men by the ghost of State rights. They seem to walk in a graveyard of the past, and every stone is a specter to harrow up their souls on this subject. They cannot talk a half an hour upon any subject—the sword of Washington, the staff of Franklin, the dumb desk of Jefferson, or even the simple which to find marks, without entering into learned disconsisting. subject of trade-marks—without entering into learned disquisitions on the subject of State sovereignty. Excavators of the earth, they say, sometimes find stones from which when opened a toad leaps out. So it is with these gentlemen. They bring into this House some carefully prepared argument on the most innocent subject, and as you settle yourself in your seat to do justice in attention to their prepared eloquence you find yourself suddenly surprised and mortified to see leap forth as they open it the toad of State rights.

There is no State rights in this subject; none whatever. You are not asked to relinquish one power the States now have or to diminish in the least your State's right to control her domestic affairs. The common law will yet remain, the statutes of the States will yet remain, and their efficiency for domestic protection will be just as great. Why, the gentleman gives the States where statutes upon this subject exist, and says:

It appears (by absence of reported cases) that no one has ever sought to protect imself at law as to trade-marks in either of the States just named except Georgia,

And in Georgia there is no State legislation proper, for its three-enacts the common-law remedies. The United States passed a uniform system of legislation upon this subject in 1870, and added still more efficient amendments in 1876. Whoever heard of any complaint from States? Was the glory of Georgia dimmed or her sovereignty humbled? Did it not give the most perfect and universal satisfaction except to pirates and infringers? Pshaw, now be reasonable! You say State legislation is enough for American owners of trade-marks. Well, then, why not good enough, ample enough, equally for aliens? Your logic cuts your own throat. Why are you here urging a bill to enact a code of trade-mark laws for foreigners—ay, the very laws which congress did pass for all, and which it is desired to pass again for all as soon as this constitutional amendment is ratified, and which were declared void for want of constitutional power to pass them? Why do you urge these laws under another clause of the Constitution for foreigners only, and yet in the same breath say "there is no necessity for such legislation" for our own citizens? Will not State laws protect foreign citizens also? Are not your judges just as honest, your State jurors just as good, State officers just as numerous and faithful, State courts just as accessible, and justice there as much distriction, State courts just as accessible, and justice there as much quicker and cheaper for citizens of other countries as of other States? By advocating this bill, this anomaly of legislation, you advocate this amendment, by which alone the same additional protection may be given to our people. Your arguments for it are magnified for our people with all the power of the audiphone.

Those laws are conflicting. Take, for instance, California. California gives a trade-mark to the man who first registers it with the protection of state. In Occase I think the sight state is the state of the countries of the state of the s secretary of state. In Oregon I think the right of a trade-mark is given to a man who first applies and registers his trade-mark with the secretary of state. In Missouri the trade-mark is obtained by a description acknowledged and recorded in the recorder's office of the county. Now, imagine those three laws in operation in the United States and one man claiming under the registry of California, another under that of Oregon, another under the law of Missouri, in virtue of a trade-mark recorded in some remote county. There would be no end to the litigation under such a conflict of laws.

The gentleman from Georgia states in his speech that in all these States, except in one case in Georgia, there has not been an action. Now, how do you account for the fact that in connection with a subject of so much importance as to be made the subject of all the treaties of the world there is not a single case reported in State courts except this case in Georgia? Why, it is because the laws are so futile and weak and unworthy that the people do not apply to them for a remedy. It would cost a man more to hire his attorney than all he would get in the form of petty damages for the infringement of his trede mark. The grant property is the second of the state of the second of the seco he would get in the form of petty damages for the infringement of his trade-mark. The gentleman is mistaken as to many of the States he has cited as having trade-mark laws. In many cases they are only penal clauses as to general brands—merely domestic arrangements, nothing else. But we find State legislation is atterly insufficient, and it will result in conflict. The Supreme Court say in their opinion the Legislature would possibly not pass a law protecting foreign trademarks and leaving the rest to State legislation, which would result in conflict of legislation.

But gentlemen who argue for this bill for foreigners under treaties.

But gentlemen who argue for this bill for foreigners under treaties must find themselves admitting that State legislation is not sufficient, must find themselves admitting that State legislation is not sufficient, else why do aliens want more? There must be something urgent, important, necessary, which under treaties foreign citizens demand and which common law and State legislation will not give. Your constitutional provision upon which you found your power says it must be "necessary and proper" legislation to execute a treaty.

Well, then, does not the same great occasion exist for our citizens of the United States to urge such legislation for themselves? I say State legislation is not sufficient. The Committee on Manufactures, to which the subject properly belongs, says the amendment and legislation under it is necessary. But the gentleman asks why? Because State laws are limited to State lines. Because some States will be more interested in protecting trade-marks than others, and those who more interested in protecting trade-marks than others, and those who feel no interest will not go to the expense of providing and enforcing adequate laws; just as under the old confederation where the expenses of wars were to be contributed by the States, those States at a distance from the seat of war and secure from its dangers refused to contribute to its expense. Because conflicts will arise in legislation as well as in ownership of marks in different States. Because there will be no common court or office to determine the rights of claimants, keep a record of marks, and grant certificates. Certificates of trade-mark ownership are assignable like patents, and under a system of State certificates there would be no security against duplicates from different States.

State legislation has never been of sufficient advantage to be sought. Because commercial relations with other countries and among the States have become so intimate and great that the world looks to the General Government for a recognition of a subject so importantly connected with it. Because the subject is not local or domestic in its character, but is similar in every respect except its origin to patents and copyrights. There are no trade-mark laws except in the States of California, Connecticut, Kansas, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Oregon. Illinois has laws forbidding refilling vessels containing certain liquors. Iowa has a penal section for counterfeiting marks, stamps, or brands. Kentucky punishes the use of a false brand. Georgia gives courts of equity common-law powers by statute. Pennsylvania has some penal statutes. Indiana has a penal section against refilling bottles of certain liquors in certain cases. That is all. Substantially there is no State legislation comprehending the subject of trademarks. connected with it. Because the subject is not local or domestic in its

Now, the gentleman from Georgia thinks there is no conflict, and State legislation could not result in conflict and confusion. The worst conflict to be feared is in the claim of ownership to a trade-mark. In the few and meager laws now existing in States let us see if there is any such conflict. Take California. Any mechanic, manufacturer, druggist, merchant, or tradesman in that State may secure the exdruggist, merchant, or tradesman in that State may secure the exclusive use of the mark usually fixed by him on his goods by filing with the secretary of state a copy or description of the same and claim of ownership, with his affidavit that he is the exclusive owner or agent of the owner, and paying a fee of $3.

In Missouri, the mechanic, manufacturer, or other person executes a description of his trade-mark, acknowledges it, and records it in the county in the office of the recorder of deeds, which is notice to

In Nevada, any one registering his trade-mark or name with the secretary of state is protected in that mark.

In Oregon the trade-mark is registered in the office of the secretary of state by the person who first presents the same for record, and gives that person the exclusive right to it. Different States protect trade-marks on different preferred things. One State mineral water, trade-marks on different preferred things. One State mineral water, one beer, one flour, one watches, one wines, &c. It seems to me that here is chaos of confusion and conflict of laws sufficient even for the gentleman from Georgia. And now the addition of this partial legislation under this bill will but come in to render in its workings "Confusion worse confounded" until, as even its advocates say, we will be driven finally to adopt the proposed amendment.

But why wander in this wilderness of unsatisfactory laws until taught by sad experience our duty. Let us go right over to the inevitable now. I know the pressure from foreign influences, from the State Department, and from attorneys representing the wealth involved in foreign trade-marks, which is brought to bear upon Congress to pass some measure of this character as a present necessity, leaving its constitutionality to the courts and its evils to be developed; and I feel that the bill will pass. But if it does I hope it may not be made an instrument of defeating the submission of the pronot be made an instrument of defeating the submission of the proposed amendment. It proposes no change in the Constitution as made by its framers, only an addition to it, and one in the nature of carrying out the will of its original framers. It is but doing what they did for like subjects. They gave to Congress power to legislate on certain subjects then known to them to be of public concern. Since their day one more of the same species has been added in the growth of the world's intercourse. We execute their unfinished will by adding it.

Let the matter be submitted to the States, and let the people vote upon it. That at least is their right. And it would be a pleasant and satisfactory evidence of common sentiments of attachment to the Union to see thirty or more of the States unite speedily in making a grant of power to the General Government to regulate a subject of such wide interest and concern. I hope sincerely to see such a proof of patriotism and fraternal unity.

During the delivery of the remarks of Mr. McCom the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PRICE. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like to ask how long the gentleman desires to speak?

Mr. McCOID. But a very short time. I shall conclude my remarks in ten or twelve minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. We desire a vote this evening, because there will be objection to the consideration of the bill to-morrow.

Mr. McCOID. I will not occupy over ten minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the time of the gentleman from Iowa being extended for ten minutes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McCOID then continued and completed his remarks.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not intend to occupy the attention of the House very long at this stage of the discussion of this bill and at this hour of the afternoon. I deem it of the utmost importance now that we have a vote on this bill to-day, because it should be disposed of during this afternoon, in order that it may not obstruct business to-morrow. I say then to the House that if they will bear with us a very few minutes longer we can have a final vote and end this question to der tion to-day.

The subject-matter embraced in the Armfield bill and in the con-The subject-matter embraced in the Armheid bill and in the constitutional amendment which my friend from Iowa [Mr. McCond] has discussed to-day were referred together to the Committee on the Judiciary. As my friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has said quite at length, that committee gave full, earnest, and patient consideration to this matter. We heard all gentlemen who signified any desire to communicate any facts or make any suggestions to the committee. We were in communication with gentlemen in the large cities represent the various trade may be acceptations and their attorneys have senting the various trade-mark associations, and their attorneys have senting the various trade-mark associations, and their attorneys have visited us very frequently. Not only did we hear the attorneys and trade-mark people, but we also gave all the opportunity that was desired to the gentleman from Iowa himself.

As the result of our conferences and examination of this matter, the Committee on the Judiciary came unanimously to the conclusion that we should recommend the bill which is now under consideration by the House. The committee, besides relying upon their own judgment, were confirmed in that judgment by the concurrence of the several gentlemen representing the different interests involved. And unless the Committee on the Judiciary are very much mistaken, they had also the consent of the gentleman from Iowa that other attempts should be abandoned and this bill should be placed on its passage. However, that does not debar any gentleman at this time from op-However, that does not depar any gentleman at this time from opposing the proposed legislation.

Mr. McCOID. Do I understand the gentleman to say that I consent to this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Not at all to-day.

Mr. McCOID. But at any time?

Mr. ROBINSON. I said that the committee understood (they may have been misinformed) at the time this bill was reported to the House that the gentleman from Iowa had waived his preference for a constitutional amendment, and had consented to this bill after consultation with the attorneys representing the various trade-mark associations

Mr. McCOID. That was an entire mistake.
Mr. ROBINSON. If the committee were in error I am ready to be corrected.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] is somewhat in error in what he quotes from me. I stated that the attorneys for the New York petitioners and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCord] had met me and agreed that the constitutional amendment and the bill should travel pari passu. And I reported to the committee that he had abandoned his opposition to the bill. I may have misunderstood him. The conversation occurred I reported to the committee that he had abandoned his opposition to the bill. I may have misunderstood him. The conversation occurred between him, Mr. Cox, and myself at that door, [pointing to one of the doors in the Hall.]

Mr. McCOID. I may have said that if the constitutional amendment was passed I would have no objection to this bill.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Did you not agree with Mr. Cox that you would no longer fight the bill?

Mr. McCOID. No, sir; I never would have voted for the bill under any circumstances.

any circumstances.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Then I misunderstood you.

Mr. ROBINSON. Passing that over, because it is not very material, we do not find that there is any general demand for the proposed constitutional amendment. We have discovered that in this way: constitutional amendment. We have discovered that in this way: After our hearings, which were protracted and numerous, we held the matter a long time under advisement before we would report the bill to the House. The gentlemen representing the different trade-mark associations were notified by the sub-committee that they should correspond with their clients, the different manufacturers throughout the country, and inform us if they demanded anything further than the bill we had agreed upon. Up to the present time the committee have received no information that this bill fails to give them entire satisfaction, with a single exception coming from the city of Lowell. in received no information that this oil rails to give them entire satisfaction, with a single exception coming from the city of Lowell, in the State of Massachusetts.

With that exception alone before us, the committee did not deem it expedient to ask the Congress of the United States to enter upon the process of amending the Constitution in order to meet this one petition. They say that if after the passage of this bill, and after it leads to the constitution in petition. They say that it after the passage of this bill, and after it shall have gone into operation as a law, there shall seem to be a need for further legislation, something broader, something that shall reach interstate commerce and transactions between citizens of different States, that want will make itself known at the national capital, and then we can proceed to amend the Constitution, if it shall be deemed expedient. At present there is no demand for it; and that perhaps is a sufficient answer to all the arguments of the gentleman from

Iowa

Upon the subject of the number of trade-marks there may perhaps be some confusion or misconception. The gentleman says that less than eight thousand trade-marks have been registered; and such is the fact; but we do not say, and it is not the fact, that the number eight thousand covers all the trade-marks used throughout the countries that the same says eight thousand covers all the trade-marks used throughout the country. It is, however, a test of the importance of legislation upon this subject. Assume, if you please, that there are five hundred thousand trade-marks used in the United States. Perhaps I have not overestimated the number. We find them, for instance, on the different cigar boxes. There are all sorts of brands. Everybody puts on a box of cigars, if he wishes, his peculiar trade-mark. It is popular for the time; when its popularity wanes it is removed and something else substituted. It is never registered; it never becomes one of the eight thousand. Why? Because its value is not sufficiently great to persuade the party that he wants registration. It needs no protection by law, it takes care of itself. Hence I submit your committee are justified, and the House will be justified, in believing that if only seven or eight thousand of the great number of trade-marks have been registified, and the House will be justified, in believing that if only seven or eight thousand of the great number of trade-marks have been registered there is not a universal demand for general trade-mark legislation; it does not yet appear that that demand is prominent before the business community.

This matter has been in print before the House and within the inspection of the different Departments for weeks; and I desire to call the attention of the House to a communication which I think will carry weight in the minds of members. I allude to a communication from the honorable Secretary of State indossing and recommending from the honorable Secretary of State indorsing and recommending this bill. The Secretary of State may be supposed to know by actual experience what legislation may be needed under foreign treaties in order to carry them into effect; and certainly he is a gentleman whose judgment upon matters of legislation and the efficiency of statutes no one will question. This letter was addressed to the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] on the sub-committee, who had not time to read it to the House. I therefore send it to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 22, 1880.

Washington, April 22, 1880.

Sible: I desire to ask your especial attention to the bill (H. R. No. 5088) recently reported by you in behalf of the Judiciary Committee (Report No. 551) and to request your best efforts to secure its speedy passage.

From the point of view of the obligations of this Government to the various forcign governments with which trade-mark conventions have been concluded prompt action providing for the registration of trade-marks is of the greatest importance. The subject is continually being brought to the attention of this Department by the representatives of foreign governments at this capital, who are naturally solicitous for the interests of our own people in foreign countries would also suffer even more seriously by the removal of the protection which the reciprocal provisions of the various trade-mark conventions now furnish them.

I therefore earnestly request your committee to take such action for the speedy passage of the bill as may appear to you most appropriate, and thereby free our own citizens abroad and the citizens of foreign countries here from the unfortunate state of uncertainty in which they are now placed, as well as provide for the proper fulfillment of the international obligations of the Government.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. N. J. Hammond, Chairman of the Sub-committee of the Judiciary Committee, House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON. Thus it will be seen that this bill has the indorsement of the State Department, which I submit is a strong recommendation.

One word in passing in regard to the allusion made to the patent laws. The committee do not say that section 4900, a part of the patent laws, makes provisions for trade-marks. But they do say that under that section the patentee who puts the word "patented," with the day of the month and year upon his invention, with any other sign or device which he may adopt, is protected to some extent under that section.

The letter which the gentleman from Iowa put in, discussing whether under the patent laws trade-mark legislation is included—

Mr. McCOID rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not care to be interrupted. I am simply re marking upon a suggestion which the gentleman from Iowa made quite at length. Mr. McCOID.

Mr. McCOID. I merely want to ask one question.
Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the gentleman will not take my time.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts declines to be interrupted.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will not knowingly make a misstatement, and I hope I shall be allowed my full time, because I want to yield a portion to another member of the committee. The gentleman from Iowa has had full time.

Mr. McCOID. I hope the gentleman will have all the time he wants

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not care to argue this question at more length. The committee I believe are unanimous in reporting this bill, with the single exception of my honorable friend from Georgia, [Mr. HAMMOND.] As he has stated his objections to the House, I must address a few words to him in the hearing of the House upon his criticisms on the penal sections of the bill. The committee, with the single exception of the gentleman from Georgia, agree that the bill is right. He says he would not have the penal sections of the bill, because we are to give foreigners the benefits of those provisions where we do not give them to our own citizens. I ask his attention to the language of the first section which provides that "owners of trademarks, used in commerce with foreign nations or with the Indian tribes, provided such owners shall be domiciled in the United States or located in any foreign country" that is in treaty with us may obtain registration, &c. Who are the two classes of persons to be benefited by this penal legislation? First, owners of trade-marks resident in the United States; secondly, owners resident in other countries bound to the United States by treaty. That is all I care to say upon that point. I think the gentleman will see at once that our citizens are in this respect placed upon an equality with citizens of foreign countries. Mr. ROBINSON. I do not care to argue this question at more

In the next place, my friend says that the punishment is too severe. Let me follow his reasoning. He instances the case of seduction on the high seas, the punishment for which is provided in section 5349 of the Revised Statutes. He says that the criminal, upon conviction for this offense, is punished by a fine of $1,000 or by twelve months imprisonment. But what says my friend from Georgia in the next sentence? Death, he says, would be too good for the scoundrel. "If we had him in Georgia," he says, "we would put him in the penitentiary for twenty years." What is the logic of that? That in section 5349 the penalty is not severe enough. The trouble is not that our proposed legislation in this bill is too severe. If the penalty in section 5349 is not severe enough for the case of seduction, I will join him in making it severer. I think he will see the logic of his own remarks. In the next place, my friend says that the punishment is too severe ent laws are punishable only by a penalty of $100, (and that is the fact,) yet we provide a severer penalty and more stringent measures hereafter to reach imitations. So we do.

But let us compare the two. Under the trade-mark law you have the civil right against the party who pirates or adopts your trademark. But there you are limited except under the penal sections. Then you follow the person who counterfeits or who fraudulently uses your trade-mark. But go to the patent laws. You not only have the right to prosecute the man who infringes by manufacture, by imitation, but you can follow every individual user the country over. And you and I, Mr. Speaker, are liable to the suit of any patentee on the smallest stills remove earning the process if the patents is the second to the suit of the patents of the second to the suit of the patents of the second to the suit of the patents of the patents of the patents of the patents of the second to the suit of the patents of t the smallest article we may carry in the pocket, if we have it con-

Therefore it is not necessary that the patentee should be protected by such stringent legislation in addition to what is now provided, and there is therefore abundant reason why the trade-mark provision should be supplemented by some penal statute.

And it is true that the provisions which are ingrafted in this bill should be supplemented by some penal statute.

And it is true that the provisions which are ingrafted in this bill as the penal sections bear a strong resemblance to the provisions punishing the counterfeiting of money. And they should, from the very nature of things. The attempt of a party who seeks to pirate my trade-mark is in the direction of an imitation by counterfeiting. You punish somebody for counterfeiting the current money of the United States. Right. You also would punish a man under this provision who would counterfeit my property in the trade-mark. He ought to be punished. It is a form of theft. It is insidious, it is secret, it reaches out into the trade, and not only wrongs me, but is an imposition on other men who purchase the article relying on my commercial signature, otherwise called my trade-mark. Therefore there ought to be some stringent legislation.

My friend's objection, after all, is not sound when he says there should be no penal legislation attached to this bill; and he intimated he would move to strike it out. I beg his attention to this, that every State except three that has given us trade-mark laws has attached to those laws the penalty of imprisonment for their infraction; every one. Why, in Nebraska it is not exceeding twenty years, if I am right about it, and the other States range down. I believe in Kentucky and Indiana there is a money fine only. But if it is right to protect the trade-mark at all, then we should give the owners of trade-marks that protection which will be efficient. Every State which has legislated on it has found it necessary to have penal legislation for the enforcement of the law. Therefore, by abundance of reasoning and by experience, we should, if we have here a trade-mark law, make it efficient by the same class of penalty.

But my friend says, "You are multiplying offenses before the United States courts," and he regrets that prosecutions are multiplied. No man regrets more than I that the courts are troubled anywhere in this States courts," and he regrets that prosecutions are multiplied. No man regrets more than I that the courts are troubled anywhere in this land, State or national, for the prosecution of anybody for violation of the law. But in the gentleman's State, as well as in my own, there will be found, I presume, for many years to come men who are not sufficiently mindful of the rights of their neighbors, men who will take what does not belong to them; and it has always been the policy of the law to restrain them by the strong arm, if necessary. Therefore, if it is sound we should have this legislation, it is also only logical we should go forward and maintain it by sufficient provis-

I submit to my friend, when he says the States have done right in their legislation, that the State legislation seems to be efficient and sufficient the country over. Mainly it is because that penal legislation has been sustained; and when he and I, therefore, find it necessary to supplement the State legislation by national acts, we shall also go forward of course to make our congressional legislation efficient as well.

I will not, of course, go into the punishment of these persons and where they are sent, or the presence of United States courts, or the frequency of the visits of the marshals. I want to say that I believe that when the whole people of this country become better acquainted with the United States courts and the evidences of their power and with the United States courts and the evidences of their power and authority they will have a great deal more respect and reverence for them. I hope the time will come when everywhere in this country the power of the United States shall be just as highly respected and just as ardently and fondly cherished as the power of any citizen's own State. It is the State and the Union together; and I know my friend joins with me in that; he has none of that unpleasant distrust for the United States courts. Carry them, if you want, to every man's door so that he sees their salutary operation every day, and I think he will rise in the morning and go to sleep at night proud in the presence of the power of the nation. I would not, therefore, strike out these provisions of the bill because they are necessary to give life and force and strength and success to it, and I would not strike them out again for any narrow reason that we may sometimes, if we should out again for any narrow reason that we may sometimes, if we should offend against this law, be called upon by the national power to respond for that disobedience.

I have nothing further to say in advocacy of the bill. With the exception specified it meets the unanimous approval of the committee, and I trust it will have the support of the House. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.]

Mr. ARMFIELD. I hope the gentleman will yield to me a portion of his time.

What length of time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. ROBINSON. What length of time does the gentleman desire f Mr. ARMFIELD. Not more than five or ten minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield to the gentleman from North Carolina after the gentleman from New York has concluded his remarks.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Speaker, but for the importance of the measure now under consideration I should not feel disposed to occupy the attention of the House for any time. Prior to the act of 1870 three or four treaties had been made between the United States and foreign four treaties had been made between the United States and foreign governments which contained provisions relating to the subject of trade-marks with a view to reciprocity of rights between the owners and users of such trade-marks residing abroad and those transacting business in this country. Now, the trade-mark law of 1870 may be properly said to have been the outgrowth of such treaties; the beginning of a system calculated to secure these greatends to the people of both countries. Subsequent treaties were also made upon the same subject. But the question came before the Supreme Court of the United States in a criminal case under the penal provisions of the law of 1870, where the law is held to its strictest accountability, and that court was compelled to decide that it was an infraction of the Constitution, because it covered in terms the entire subject of the use of trade-marks as well between citizens of the same State as between citizens of the different States and between citizens of this country and citizens of other countries, and between citizens of this country and the Indian

Let me call attention to two passages in the opinion of the Supreme Court which are illustrative of their views on this subject. The court in one part of its opinion said:

The question, therefore, whether the trade-mark bears such a relation to commerce in general terms as to bring it within congressional control when used or applied to the classes of commerce which fall within that control, is one which in the present case we propose to leave undecided.

So that it is fair to assume, if the law of 1870 had been confined to commerce between the States and between citizens and the Indian tribes and to foreign commerce, the court would have upheld the law as a valid exercise of the power of Congress under the Constitution. Such is the power expressly delegated by section 8 of that instrument. The committee in this connection, for the purpose of relieving this bill of any doubt, have decided to leave out the subject of commerce between the States, because there is a present and pressing necessity, as I hope to show before I conclude, for the passage of some measure of this kind at the present time.

In another part of the opinion the court uses this language:

In what we have here said we wish to be understood as leaving the whole question of the treaty-making power of the General Government over trade-marks and the power of Congress to pass laws necessary to carry such treaties into effect untouched by this decision.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have the two subjects of the power of this House and the power of Congress under the clause of the Constitution giving Congress a right to regulate commerce between the States and with the Indian tribes and foreign commerce. We have, I say, that subject left entirely untouched by the decision of the Supreme Court. subject left entirely untouched by the decision of the Supreme Court. We have also left entirely untouched the power of Congress to pass laws for the purpose of carrying into effect any treaties which we may have made or may hereafter make upon this subject. The Constitution confides to the President and the Senate the treaty-making power, and when they have made a treaty it clothes Congress with the power to pass all needful legislation which may be deemed essential for the purpose of carrying that treaty into effect.

If it be a treaty relating to trade-marks, then Congress has the power to legislate to carry it into effect, and this legislation is entirely proper. Now, as I have said, the bill under consideration, and stripping it of all possible objection, confines itself entirely to foreign commerce and commerce with the Indian tribes.

There is perhaps, Mr. Speaker, no portion of the country so especommerce and commerce with the Indian tribes.

There is perhaps, Mr. Speaker, no portion of the country so especially interested in this subject as the great commercial city of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. Gentlemen from that city appeared before us to present their views with regard to the proposed law, and they gave us their opinions as to whether this bill was in accordance with the views expressed by the court in the opinion to which I have referred.

In view of the provisions of this bill and of the provision of the bill and of the provision of the bill and of the provision of this bill and of the provision of the bill and the bill and

In view of the provisions of this bill and of the urgent necessity of having it enacted into a law, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication received from one of those counsel, and a certificate from a committee of the classes of persons interested in the same subject. The House will see from this the importance of the subject and the necessity for prompt and speedy action.

The Clerk read as follows:

New York, March 22, 1820

DEAR SIR: It has occurred to me that you may prefer to be furnished with some evidence of the feeling of the public in respect of the trade-mark bill. I therefore take the liberty of handing you a paper which speaks for a large class and which explains itself.

We accept, with thanks, what the committee proposes, but will hereafter give Congress a better view of facts which, we hope, may lead to different conclusions.

With respect and esteem, your obedient servant,

ROWLAND COX.

Hon. Elbridge G. Lapham, Washington, D. C.

The undersigned, a committee appointed by the United States Trade-Mark Association, of New York, to conduct the advocacy of its interests before Congress, respectfully represent that they earnestly desire that favorable action may be taken upon the measure reported by the Committee on the Judiciary limiting the registration of trade-marks to owners protected by treaties. They sign this paper to prevent the possibility of it being made to appear that said association is in any sense opposed to the speedy enactment of a measure demanded by every consideration of justice and good faith.

Mr. LAPHAM. It will be seen from this communication, as well as from the letter of the Secretary of State, which my colleague upon the committee [Mr. ROBINSON] has had read, and from the letter of the Commissioner of Patents, which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCoid] caused to be read, that there is an urgent necessity at this time for having enacted into the form of law a provision which will guard our rights under the treaties which are now existing. Frauds upon trade-marks, which have been multiplied under the act of 1870, are almost as numerous. Mr. Speaker, as the trade-marks themselves. are almost as numerous, Mr. Speaker, as the trade-marks themselves. I have been furnished with a chart carried by one of the traveling I have been furnished with a chart carried by one of the traveling agents of these pirates upon the rights of the owners of trade-marks of persons who have filed their applications and secured their rights to trade-marks between this country and Great Britain and the Continent of Europe, which I exhibit [holding up the chart] for the purpose of illustrating the extent to which this system is carried on. You here see the devices which a traveling agent for the pirates carries with him, being almost exact imitations of the actual trade-marks registered under the law, with which he goes from man to man and from country to country, and imposes upon honest and unsuspecting purchasers a fraudulent article instead of the genuine article. This shows the necessity of the penal provisions of the bill in question. The imitations are about fifty in number, covering many of the leading manufactures used in commerce. ing manufactures used in commerce.

Thrice is he arm'd that hath his quarrel just.

But the men who carry on this nefarious traffic are more than thrice armed, as you will see from the specimens the agent carries along with him.

I do not deem it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to dwell at greater length upon the necessity at this time of legislating upon this subject, and of passing the law which has met the approval of the Committee on the Judiciary, and which meets the approval of the counsel who are interested in this question. I cannot close, however, without saying a word or two upon another subject with reference to which my friend from Iowa [Mr. McCod] is so deeply interested. While I concur in this legislation and believe it ought to be adopted as a remedy for present evils, I am yet of the opinion that a law to be ample should not only secure the rights of persons engaged in foreign commerce and with the Indian tribes, but should secure the rights of people engaged in commerce among the different States, and should be carried to the extent of embracing the whole subject of trade-marks, State and national.

trade-marks, State and national.

What is a trade-mark? The analogy between it and a patent is very strong indeed. It is the original discoverer who secures a patentright and only the original discoverer. It is the original finder of an article which a man can physically appropriate to his own use which article which a man can physically appropriate to his own use which gives him a right of property. If a man digs a nugget of gold out of the bowels of the earth, or with a bar or pick cleaves it out of the crevices of the rock, he has the physical power to appropriate it at once to his use and it becomes his property. If it happen to have been a nugget lost by some one who had been a prior owner his discovery gives him no right of property. So in the domain of patents; if a man invents, although he may be an original inventor as to himself, an article which had been previously used by some one else, he acquires no right of property. It is only when he is not only the original but the first inventor that he can exercise and have the right. The same rule applies to trade-marks.

Let me illustrate. Mr. Speaker, by two instances which occur to me.

Let me illustrate, Mr. Speaker, by two instances which occur to me. I remember a case arising in my own State where an action was brought to restrain the owners of the Empire Spring, at Saratoga, from using upon their bottles the label "Congress Empire Spring." The proprietors of the Congress Spring filed the bill to restrain the use of that label upon the ground that it was a trade-mark to which they were entitled. The counsel for the defense, the Empire Spring, arwere entitled. The counsel for the defense, the Empire Spring, argued "You might as well go up on the mountain-tops and bottle and label the air and claim an exclusive right to it as to claim the exclusive right to bottle and label the water as it bubbles from the perpetual springs in obedience to a law imposed upon matter by the hand of the Creator. But the court of last resort in my State said, "that by this use of the term or label 'Congress Spring,' which has been employed by the proprietors of that spring until the virtues of the water are known all over the civilized world, they have acquired a right which cannot be invaded, and the insertion of the word 'Empire' between 'Congress' and 'Spring' is a mere device and does not excuse the persons so using it from the consequences." And they held that the action was well brought.

Take a case in reference to inventions. The late Ross Winans, of Baltimore, was without doubt an original inventor of the idea of the eight-wheel car to be used upon railroads, one of the most beneficial inventions in the whole history of railroads in this and in other countries. It enables a long car to be run with speed and safety upon down grades and short and reverse curves. So far as he was condown grades and short and reverse curves. So far as he was con-cerned the idea was his own. And yet when he came into court to try his title he was beaten. And how beaten? In building the Bos-ton court-house, many years before his invention, the contractors had brought down from the Quincy quarries upon a tram-road with short curves and steep grades, on four-wheel cars or trucks, the blocks of granite that went into the main walls of the building. When the contractor desired to transport the long columns which were to be placed in the front of the court-house, he was put to his "trumps". to use a familiar expression—to know what he should do. He did not know how to obviate the difficulty and danger. A common laborer stepped out of the ranks and said: "I will tell you how to do that;" (it was the idea of the old-fashioned lumber-wagon with a long reach put into it, to carry logs to the saw-mill;) "take two of these trucks and put them as far apart as the length of your column, and put a bar or reach between them, and you will get along without any trouble and run around the curves and on the down grade with safety."
The contractor did so, and the courts held that, although that was all the use ever made of it, it was a complete answer to the claim of Mr. Winans for his invention, and he was defeated in his action.

Mr. Winans for his invention, and he was defeated in his action. Therefore between this subject of patents and the subject of trademarks there is a close analogy. The same reason which would induce me to have patents subject to national regulation would induce me to have trade-marks subject to national legislation and copyrights subject to national legislation also. I am in favor of and believe that there will ultimately be found to be a necessity for a constitutional amendment upon this subject, giving to Congress the unquestioned power and entire control over the whole subject of trade-marks. The conflicting legislation of thirty-eight States will not be ample for protection at home and cannot give it abroad. But for the present, because it takes time to secure the adoption of a constitutional amendment, to protect us for the present under our treaties and to save our reputation with the nations with whom we are in treaty, I am in favor reputation with the nations with whom we are in treaty, I am in favor of passing this bill, which is not obnoxious to any objection, and waiting until the future to secure the better remedy which a constiwaiting until the future to secure the better remedy which a constitutional provision will furnish us.

I now return to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] the remainder of the time which he so kindly yielded to me.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I do not desire to protract the discussion or postpone the vote on this bill; but as the bill under discussion bears the name of the Armfield bill I desire to say a word or two in regard to it.

First of all, I desire to disclaim all responsibility for the bill in its present shape. It has been so altered by the committee that has had it in charge, both by leaving out what I put in and by putting in what I did not have in it and do not approve, that I must disclaim all responsibility for the paternity of the present bill.

My principal object in framing the bill which I introduced was to afford protection to the trade-marks that are used in interstate commerce. I regard the protection of trade-marks used in foreign commerce as merely an incident of my main design.

I had then, and I beg leave to say that I have now, very little doubt of the constitutional power of Congress to legislate upon trade-marks used in the commerce between the States. The Committee on the Judiciary tell us in their report that we have no power under the Constitution to legislate in regard to trade-marks, except under the treaty-making power given by the Constitution. They say in their report that while they think Congress cannot so legislate with regard to trade-marks under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes, yet they think that trade-marks used in the commerce with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes can be protected under the treaty-making

Now, if this be so, if it be a fact that Congress has no power to legislate upon the subject of trade-marks except under the treaty-making power, then it is perfectly clear that the bill now under discussion and reported from that committee is itself unconstitutional, because it has no reference whatever to the treaty-making power.

The very first clause of the bill stating what trade-marks may be registered, says "that owners of trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations or with the Indian tribes" may register their trademarks. There is no limitation upon the kind of trade-marks that may be registered, except that it shall be a trade-mark used in commerce with foreign nations or with the Indian tribes.

There is a limitation as to the residence of the person who may register a trade-mark. The bill says, "provided such owners (of trade-marks) shall be domiciled in the United States, or located in any formarks) shall be domiciled in the United States, or located in any for-eign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States." That is not a restriction upon the kind of trade-mark to be protected. Any trade-mark used in foreign commerce or in commerce with the Indian tribes may be registered and shall be protected, provided the person applying for the registration and protection is domiciled in the United States or in a country that has a treaty with the United States or has a law protecting the trade-marks of citizens of the United States. Therefore, upon the committee's own showing, upon the ground which they themselves take, their bill is unconstitutional. But as I disagree with themselves take, their bill is unconstitutional. But as I disagree with the committee in the conclusion to which they have arrived, there is no reason in all this why I should vote against their bill.

I believe that Congress has the power to legislate for the protection of trade-marks. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to differ from the report of the committee in this: he does not agree with the committee that the only power of legislating over trade-marks arises under the treaty-making clause of the Constitution. He believes with me, and not with the committee in their report, that Congress has this power under that clause of the Constitution which allows Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations. which allows Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, with the Indian tribes, and between the States. He believes that under that clause we have the power to legislate upon the subject of trade-marks. But he says that, in order to remove all objections to the constitutionality of this bill, the committee have seen fit to leave out that part of my bill which protected trade-marks used in commerce between the States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am utterly at a loss to see how this can remove any objection to the constitutionality of the bill. The clause of the Constitution which gives Congress power to legislate in regard to commerce between the States is the very same clause that gives it power to legislate in regard to commerce with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes. The eighth section of article 1 of the Constitution provides that Congress shall have power—

To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

These different branches of commerce are all included within the same clause. If it be constitutional for Congress to legislate in regard to trade-marks used in commerce with foreign nations and with the Indian tribes, it is equally constitutional for Congress to legislate in reference to trade-marks used in interstate commerce.

Mr. LAPHAM. The gentleman will allow me to say that the difference is this: there can be no treaties made between the States or between a State and a foreign country.

Mr. ARMFIELD. That point might be good if the gentleman rested the authority upon the treaty-making power, which I understood him not to do.

I regard it as of more importance to protect the trade-marks used in interstate commerce than to protect those used in foreign com-merce. Our first duty is to our own citizens. In any laws of this kind passed to prevent persons from being imposed upon by counterfeiting articles of food, medicine, or anything else, should we not first protect our own people and make the protection of foreigners a secondary consideration?

The trade-marks used in commerce between the States are much more valuable and numerous than gentlemen seem to suppose. These trade-marks are new things, which have sprung up within the last few years. They were almost totally unknown to the courts of this country and of Europe until the last decade. As illustrating the value of trade-marks I may mention that there is one trade-mark used in my own State upon smoking tobacco which, the owners claim, is worth—the property in the trade-mark itself—$100,000.

But, Mr. Chairman, although the committee have seen fit to strike out the clause relating to articles used in commerce between the States, I am willing to support the bill. It still contains some good States, I am willing to support the bill. It still contains some good features. It protects commerce with foreign nations, and enables us to perform our treaty obligations. For this reason I am willing to support it, provided the severe penalties embraced in it be struck out. The bill which I had the honor to introduce embraced no penal clauses. It did not make the violation of the law a criminal offense. I thought, and still think, that the civil remedies which the courts now give, and would give under this bill if these penal clauses were struck out, would be sufficient to protect the title to trade-marks. I am opposed upon principle to piling up penalties in the legislation of the country. I do not think it necessary, in order to protect trade-marks, that a man who violates the trade-mark law should be subjected to imprisonment for two years and a fine of $1,000. Nor do I think it necessary, in order to protect trade-marks, that we should allow a man to swear out a search-warrant, enter the house of any citizen, and, if he finds in his possession counterfaited labels to deach him before. swear out a search-warrant, enter the house of any citizen, and, if he finds in his possession counterfeited labels, to drag him before a court, indict him, and punish him criminally, if he can be convicted of having these counterfeited labels in his possession with intent to defraud. The question of intent would be for the jury to determine upon any evidence satisfactory to their minds; and the mere fact that a man had in his possession counterfeited labels might be deemed sufficient to make him liable to imprise named in the positions for transfer the make him liable to imprise named in the positions for transfer the make him liable to imprise named in the positions for transfer the make him liable to imprise named in the positions for transfer the make him liable to imprise named in the positions of the manual positions. make him liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for two years and a fine of $1,000.

I shall, therefore, cordially support the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] to strike out these penal clauses. If that motion should prevail, I shall cheerfully vote for the bill, because, although it does not go half so far as I think it ought to go, although it does not do all the good I desire to see done, yet I would take what I can get now, and wait for further legislation in the

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. There are two or three formal amendments which I desire to offer on behalf of the committee, and also two amendments that I submit on my own behalf—one striking out section 20, the section authorizing searches; and the other striking out all the sections after section 13, being the penal parts of the bill. The remarks which have been made fully explain all these amendments. I send them now to the Clerk's desk, and if there be no objection I desire they shall all be considered as pending, and I call for the previous question on the amendments and the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, insert, after the word "country," the words "or tribes."
In section 6, line 3, strike out the words "by them."
In section 16, lines 3 and 4; in section 17, lines 10 and 11; in section 18, lines 7 and 8; and in section 19, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "the statutes of the United States" and insert "this act."

Amend by striking out section 20; and Amend by striking out all of the bill after section 13, being the penal parts of the bill

Mr. ROBINSON. It is understood the first amendments read are by the whole committee, and the other motions to strike out are individual motions of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I so stated.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I hope the gentleman will not press his demand for the previous question. I would like to inquire of the committee who reported this bill, who is to be benefited by its passage? Are the people of the United States to be benefited by protecting for-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question to the House.

Mr. WARNER. I demand a vote on the first amendment.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding, after the sixth line, the words "or tribes;" so it will read: "or located in any foreign country or tribes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the second and third amendments which come from the committee will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments moved by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hammond] will now be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McKENZIE. I move that the House take a recess until 7.30 o'clock this evening, the object being to consider bills on the House Calendar providing for the construction of public buildings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the gentleman's motion in one moment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the House do now adjourn.
Mr. McCOID. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. McCOID. My point of order is that the report of the Committee on the Judiciary includes the joint resolution amending the constitution. That being so, of course the unfinished business is yet before the House undiressed of

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. That is my understanding. I do not know what the understanding of the House is.

Mr. McCoid. That was the understanding of the committee. I raise the point of order that the motion now pending is the unfinished business, being the joint resolution to amend the Constitution on the subject of trade wasks. on the subject of trade-marks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read from the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. N. J. Hammond, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported the following bill as a substitute for H. R. No. 2573 and H. Res. No. 125, a bill to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same.

Mr. CARLISLE. That whole matter has already been disposed of Mr. CARLISLE. That whole matter has already been disposed of by the action of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair agrees to that.

Mr. McCOID. I would like to read from the remarks of the gentleman who made the report in this connection to show—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is quite willing to hear what the gentleman from Iowa may desire to read; but the House having accepted the substitute of the Committee on the Judiciary in light of the resolution the whole matter has been disposed of lieu of the resolution, the whole matter has been disposed of.

Mr. McCOID. That was not my understanding, and I would like very much to ask the gentleman from Georgia to state his understanding of it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I can only answer the gentleman from Iowa as I did before. Of course I cannot speak for the House. I did state to the gentleman that I supposed there would be a vote on his resolution also. I did not oppose that.

Mr. McCOID. The resolution is not inconsistent with the bill at all, and the bill is not properly a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. MILLS. Is there not a motion pending for a recess?

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a privileged report.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I insist on my motion that the House adjourn. Mr. WILSON. Mr. WILSON. Am I not recognized to make a privileged report? The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia was not recognized until after the motion was made to adjourn. That, of course, takes precedence.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there wereayes 64, noes 57.

RAILWAY POSTAL CARS, ETC.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, asked and obtained unanimous consent to have reprinted for the use of the committee certain bills in reference to the establishment of a court of pensions.

J. T. PICKETT.

On motion of Mr. McLANE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 5829) for the relief of J. T. Pickett; and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BARBER, from the Committee on Claims, by unanimous consent, introduced as a substitute for House bill No. 364 a bill (H. R. No. 5996) to secure the enforcement of the act of June 25, 1868, regulating the hours of labor; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules, it cannot come back by a motion to reconsider.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of War dated March 3, 1880, recommending an appropria-tion for the relief of Captain John C. Bates and Jonathan A. Teckly, with accompanying papers, be taken from the Committee on Military Affairs and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. ATKINS objected.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced as above recorded; and accordingly (atfive o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 28, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

STEPHEN A. M'CARTY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that yesterday in the matter of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 96) authorizing the President of the United States to reappoint Stephen A. McCarty a lieutenant-commander in the Navy, an omission was made to correct the title to correspond with the body of the joint resolution by changing "reappoint" to "appoint." The Chair directed the engrossing clerk to make that change, and now makes that announcement to the

SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. Anthony, Mr. Ransom, and Mr. Hamlin as the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the printing of 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in obedience to law, a statement of the clerks and others employed in the several bureaus of his Department during the year 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMPLETION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a memorial of the Washington Monument Association, relative to the commorial of the Washington Monument Association, relative to the completion of the monument. The memorialists ask that this memorial, with the accompanying papers, may be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned respectfully represent: That at a meeting of the Washington Monument Association, held in this city on the 1st of April, they were appointed a committee "to take charge of the interests of the monument before Congress;"

That, in accordance with this appointment, they have called upon Colonel Casey, the engineer in charge of the work, for a condensed statement of the precise existing condition of the monument, and of the plans and purposes of the commissioners to whom the supervision of its construction has been consigned; and that they now respectfully ask leave to submit the statement of Colonel Casey to the consideration of Congress, and to express their earnest hope that it may lead to such definitive action as will insure the early completion of this long-deferred tribute to the Father of his Country.

Thirty-two years have now nearly expired since the corner-stone of this monument was laid, with solemn rites and imposing ceremonies, in presence of the President of the United States and of the Senators and Representatives of that period. The original certificates given to the thousands of early subscribers to the work bore the names of John Quincy Adams, James K. Polk, Zachary Taylor, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, George M. Dallas, Albert Gallatin, Henry Clay, and Daniel Webster, all "earnestly recommending the project to the favor of their fellow-countrymen." The names of Chief-Justice Marshall and of James Madison had been previously associated with the enterprise as the successive presidents of our association. Under the influence and encouragement of these great names the work proceeded anspiciously for seven or eight years. Costly stones were presented by not a few towns and cities and States, and associations of every sort throughout the country, to take their place in the interior of the structure, where their inscriptions could be read by all who should ascend the steps intended to lead to its summit. Many similar stones were soon welcomed as offerings from foreign lands. Meant

The financial embarrassments from which the business and people of the country were suffering about that time, and the great national convulsions which soon followed, furnish an ample explanation of the cessation of all efforts to advance this work for many years. But with the happy return of domestic peace and prosperity, and the renewed assurance of the perpetuity of our Federal Union, the desire became general, here and in all parts of our land, that the monument to Washington should no longer remain unfinished, and the measures which have since been adopted to this end are familiar to Congress and the country. They are succinctly, but sufficiently, set forth in the statement of Colonel Casey.

That statement warrants the assertion that all reasonable, or even unreasonable, doubts as to the security of the foundation have now been removed, and there is abundant testimony, from the highest scientific sources, that by a most ingenious and skillful process, which has been carried on by the authority of Congress, the base of the monument has been rendered capable of sustaining as great a weight as it has ever been proposed to place upon it, and that the shaft, when carried up to its contemplated height, will be able to withstand the force of a wind of double the velocity of any which could reasonably be the subject of calculation or conjecture.

The undersigned are not unmindful that strong efforts have been made of late jecture.

The undersigned are not unmindful that strong efforts have been made of late to throw discredit on the design of the monument, and that various plans have been presented for changing the character of the structure. Nor has the association, which the undersigned have the honor to represent, ever been unwilling that such modifications of the design should be made as should be found necessary for the absolute security of the work. With this view they gave formal expression a year ago to their acquitescence in the general plans of the accomplished American artist, Mr. Story, who had kindly given his attention to the subject. But, now that the strengthening of the foundation has been successfully and triumphantly accomplished by a signal application of skill and science, they cannot forbear from making a respectful but urgent appeal to Congress to give their final sanction to the prosecution and completion of the work without more delay, according to the plans recommended by the commissioners appointed by Congress, with the President of the United States at its head, and by the engineer under their direction. Any other course, they are convinced, would be likely to postpone the completion of the monment for another generation, to involve the whole subject in continued perplexity, and to necessitate vastly larger appropriations in the end than have now been asked for.

The main element of the original design of this monument was an obelisk. The pantheon proposed for encircling its base was long ago abandoned. The simple obelisk is all that is contemplated.

It has been objected in some quarters that the ancient obelisks were all monoliths—massive single stones, cut whole from the quarry. But our country has been proud to give examples of both political and material structures which owe their strength to union; and this monument to Washington will not be the less significant or stately from embodying the idea of our national motto, "E Pluribus Unum."

But our country has been proud to give examples of both political and material structures which owe significant or stately from embodying the idea of our national motio, "E Plaribus Unius."

When the well-known monument on Bunker Hill was originally projected, more than half a century ago, an obelisk of this composite character, constructed of separate blooks of hewn granite, was agreed upon by the most distinguished artists and architects of that day. F. L. HARVEY, JR., Olerk.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 19, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Agreeably to your request that a succinct account of the project for the completion and the condition of the work upon the Washington National Monument should be given your committee, I have the honor, with the sanction of the joint commission for the completion of the monument, to report as follows:

ADMINISTRATION.

Under the authority of the act of Congress of Angust 2, 1876, and joint resolutions of June 14, 1878, and June 27, 1879, the monument is being constructed under the direction and supervision of a joint commission, consisting of the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, the Architect of the Capitol, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and the first vice-president of the Washington National Monument Society.

The project or design of the work is an obelisk, five hundred and fifty feet in height, faced with white marble and backed with dressed granite rock.

Of this structure one hundred fifty-six feet is already finished. The base of the monument is fifty-five feet square, the top will be thirty-four feet six inches square, and it will be crowned with a pyrimidion or roof fifty feet in height.

The proportions of the parts of this obelisk are in exact accordance with the classic proportions of parts of this style of architecture as determined after careful research by Hon. George P. Marsh, American minister at Rome.

The shaft, as proportioned, both in dimensions and weight, will be entirely stable as against winds that could exert a pressure of one hundred pounds or more per square foot upon any face of the structure.

The project includes the preparation of the foundation so as to enable it to carry this structure. This preparation or strengthening consists in making the existing foundation wider and deeper in order to distribute the weight over a greater area, and in bringing upon each square foot of the earth pressed no greater weight than it is known to be able to sustain.

CONDITION OF THE WORK.

1. Preparation of foundation.—This consisted in placing a mass of Portland cement concrete beneath the existing foundation, extending downward thirteen and a half feet; underneath and within the outer edge of the old foundation, eighteen feet; and without this edge, twenty-three feet; then of taking out the old foundation from beneath the shaft for a sufficient distance back to obtain a good bearing upon the new masonry which is built out upon the slab first mentioned. This work is so far advanced that it will be entirely completed by the 15th of June.

of June.

2. Preparations for the shaft.—The other operations have consisted in the erection of the interior frame-work for the staircases and elevator within the shaft, which frame-work will be used in the construction of the masonry; the collection of granite and marble for continuing the shaft; and the preparation of the machinery for raising the stones to the top of the shaft and setting them in place on the walls.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The only appropriation for this work as yet made by Congress is $200,000 contained in the act of August 2, 1876, which sum will be exhausted by the end of August, 1880.

The estimate for completing this work is $677,000, and the time required will be four working seasons.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY, Lieutenant-Colonel U. S. A., Engineer in Charge.

Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP, Chairman of Committee of Washington Monument Society.

United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C., March 31, 1879.

Dear Sie: Linclose, as possibly of interest, extracts from a letter I have just received from Hon. George P. Marsh, our minister at Rome. These extracts refer to the Washington Monument question. Mr. Marsh is among the most learned and accomplished of those in any country who have given the subject of architecture and monumental art attention.

Very truly, yours.

Dears Mrs. Edmunds: By a letter from the sculptor Mead to Mrs. Marsh, I understand that the main feature of the Washington Monument is to be an obelisk of great height, surmounted by a colossal statue, and with bas reliefs at a suitable height from the base. I believe I have not only seen but sketched every existing genuine—that is, Egyptian—obelisk, for no other can fairly be said to be genuine. The obelisk is not an arbitrary structure which every one is free to ever with such form and proportions as suit his taste and convenience, but its objects, form, and proportions were fixed by the usage of thousands of years; they satisfy every cultivated eye, and I hold it an esthetical crime to depart from them.

In its objects the obelisk is monumental, its inscriptions having reference to and indicating what or whom it commemorates. I do not think bas reliefs too great a departure from the primitive character of the inscriptions, because we can come no nearer an alphabet answering the purpose.

The most important point is the form and proportions of the structure, as to which the modern builder of obelisks transgresses greatly. The Egyptian obelisks do not, indeed, all conform with mathematical exactness to their own normal proportions, but (probably from defects in the stone) frequently vary somewhat from them. When truly fashioned, however, they are more pleasing to the eye than when devlating from the regular shape.

The obelisk consists: Eirst, of a naked shaft, with or without inscription, the height of which is ten times the width of its base, so that if the base of the shaft is fifty feet square, the height of the shaft must be five hundred feet. For optical reasons (which cannot be considered in the Washington Monument, it being tool late the faces of the shaft are slightly convex. The dimensions of the shaft are reduced as it rises, and in this point the ancient obelisks vary more than any other, the top of the shaft varying from two-thirds

ROME, April 25, 1879.

Dear Mr. Edmunds: I am much obliged to you for yours of April 25, 1879.

Dear Mr. Edmunds: I am much obliged to you for yours of April 2, with General Casey's letter and the two congressional documents. I am agreeably surprised to learn from General Casey's interesting letter that the normal proportions have been so nearly observed hitherto in the construction of the obelisk. In fact, it being difficult to obtain such vast masses of granite rock, even in the quarries of Izene, entirely free from flaws, the Egyptians were very often obliged to depart more or less from the proportions most satisfactory to the eye, and the Washington obelisk conforms so nearly to those proportions, except in two points, that it is hardly subject to criticism. These points are, the batter, which is more rapid than in any obelisk known to me, and the pyramidion. Perhaps the designer adopted the proportions from considerations of stability, as a summit considerably less than the base would give greater security, and when the dimensions are all so great differences of proportion are less appreciable.

As to the form and proportion of the pyramidion, the existing obelisks are more uniform than in the measurements of the shaft, and I think that not merely on the give the pyramidion of the Washington obelisk a height of not less than fifty feet. In any case, if the height of the pyramidion is not greater than the side of its base, the summit will have a truncated shape quite out of harmony with the soaring character of the structure.

Infer from General Casey's drawings accompanying Mr. Corcoran's letter that the summit will have a truncated shape quite out of harmony with the soaring character of the structure.

I infer from General Casey's drawings, accompanying Mr. Corcoran's letter, that the plan of a sort of temple-like excrescence from the base—a highly objectionable feature—is abandoned. It is curious that we do not know precisely what the Egyptian form of the base was; some authorities state it was a die of larger dimensions than the shaft, and with sides battering at the same rate as the shaft, but I do not find satisfactory evidence that this was by any means universal, though it would certainly be an appropriate and harmonious form. Of course, any desirable base can be constructed around the shaft. There are obelisks the surface of which indicates that they were stuccoed, and this suggests that if the shaft of the Washington obelisk shall, from time or difference of material, be found to be too particolored, surface uniformity of tone may be obtained by the same process.

We have no knowledge of any Egyptian obelisk much exceeding one hundred feet in height, though some ancient writers speak of such monuments of considerably greater dimensions. The extreme difficulty of obtaining monolithe exceeding one hundred feet renders it probable that the measurements of the authorities referred to were wague estimates rather than ascertained dimensions.

Yours, truly,

GEO. P. MARSH.

BROOKLINE, MASS., August 1, 1878.

My Dear Sir.: Your favor of the 20th ultimo reached me yesterday. I that you for sending me the copy of Mr. Story's letter, which I have read with great interest. I am only a second vice-president of the Monument Association, and am not included in the commission for completing the work. I had no part or lot in the original design of the monument. John Quincy Adams had been relied upon to deliver the oration at the laying of the corner-stone. On his death in 1848 I was called on, as Speaker of the House, to take his place, and I have occasionally since then been instrumental in raising funds for the prosecution of the structure. As an original question, I might have desired a different design; and I had no small part in inducing the building committee, many years ago, to omit the pantheon at the base, and to confine the design to a simple obelisk. After that was arranged and when the monument had reached so considerable a height, I was very averse to changing the plan. A whole generation of men, women, and children had contributed, in larger or smaller sums, to this particular monument; and States, cities, and foreign nations had sont stones for its completion. To tear it all down, with a view to improve the design, was abhorrent to me. Story called to see me, when he was in Boston, and I told him that, so far as I was concerned, my first wish was to finish the monument as a simple obelisk, but that, if a change was unavoidable, owing to any insecurity of the foundations, his idea of turning it into an ornamental Lombard tower was the best plan I had seen suggested. His letter increases my appreciation of his design, though I am afraid that if would involve an amount of money and time which would postpone the completion for another generation. As it is, I understand the whole question to be settled, and that the commissioners are now going on to strengthen the foundations and carry up the obelisk to four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birthday of Washington in 1882, l

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the attention of my colleague on the Committee on Treasury Accounts, the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] and inquire whether he is prepared to make his report this morning? I think yesterday it was agreed we should make it to-day it to-day.

Mr. INGALLS. We are ready, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I present the report of the Select Committee to Investigate the Finance Reports, Books, and Accounts of the Treasury Department, and with it I propose to submit a few remarks only. Of course I shall ask that the report and evidence be printed. I wish that order made now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order to print will be made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator from Kansas wish to present the views of the minority now or will he wait until after my remarks?

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to say that he desired to submit some observations on the report of the majority. When he has concluded, I shall ask leave to submit the views of the minority, with some remarks of my own, which will detain the Senate but a very few moments.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a short time. When the report is printed and laid before the Senate, I shall probably review it more generally.

It will be recollected that when I first called the attention of the Senate to the apparent changes and alterations in the official finance reports, it was said that I was in error, that none existed, &c. Some Senators laughed at the idea. Others thought it was impossible that there could be in the Treasury accounts as officially reported errors or changes of figures. I believe it is now generally admitted that I was right, and the only thing left is an explanation of the facts. Both was right, and the only thing left is an explanation of the facts. Both the majority and the minority reports, as submitted, contain sundry conclusions, and the majority report has a number of recommendations which will be called up hereafter.

Previous to the appointment of the committee I made several speeches in the Senate, in which I stated that the official reports to Congress relating to the public debt and the receipts and expenditures appeared relating to the public debt and the receipts and expenditures appeared to have been changed, the changes involving many millions of dollars. In November, 1877, the Senate passed a resolution, appointing a committee to examine and report upon the Treasury accounts, books, and finance reports. Our examination was confined almost entirely between the years 1860 and 1871. The result of that examination I now submit to the Senate.

The report and the evidence show that every extrement made in

The report and the evidence show that every statement made in each of my speeches in the Senate to be substantially correct, including the one relating to the public debt in which I said there appeared to be many changes which involved many millions of dollars. Now, if you compare the statement of the Register with that of the other officers of the Treasury, you will find that in some years there were between ninety and one hundred million dollars difference in the between ninety and one hundred million dollars difference in the figures as stated. Whether or not they really exist is another question, but as stated they certainly exist.

The fiscal year of the Government ends June 30. The Secretary's office originates all warrants. Notice of the number and amount of the last warrant issued in each year is given to all bureaus or divisions in the Treasury Department. The official statement is made up in November, affording ample time to correct all errors, and make a true statement to Congress.

The official finance reports agreed previous to 1869 and agree since 1871; but between 1869 and 1871 many and large changes were made in figures and amounts.

The report and testimony show that in November, 1870, the Secretary of the Treasury notified the Register in writing to change the figures and amounts as previously given to Congress. The changes went back to 1833, and apparently largely increased the public debt, as the following table will show, from 1860:

In 1862 the debt had been reported to Congress at $514,000,000 in round numbers by the Register and by the Secretary. In 1870 that amount apparently was changed and to-day it stands $524,000,000 in round numbers, an increase of $10,000,000. Again, in 1863 there was a similar change of $20,000,000 in the public debt. In 1864 there was a change of $75,000,000 in the public debt. Another fact relating to this matter is that in 1870 both the Register and the Secretary agreed, but as the tables appear in the report of 1870 they disagree largely. The testimony on pages 26 and 37, and to this I call special attention, shows that three items, amounting to $6,293,827.76, in 1870 were added to the public debt by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, when neither of the amounts was on the Treasury book. In other words, between six and seven million dollars was added to the public debt statement—the witness, Dr. Guilford, says to make them lic debt statement-the witness, Dr. Guilford, says to make them "harmonize."

The Register is the official book-keeper of the Government; yet he was ordered to add millions to his debt statement, and obeyed the

From the beginning of the Government to 1870 the accounts of the Treasury Department were kept by what are known as "issues and redemptions." In 1870 the new system of keeping them by what are called "receipts and expenditures" was commenced, which caused a difference of $116,104,831.45; that is, the public debt was one hundred and sixteen millions more than the receipts and expenditures

Up to 1869 what are known as Pacific Railroad bonds were included in the public debt statement, amounting on June 30, 1869, to $58,638,230. This amount was dropped and not included in the debt statement of 1870, which ought to have reduced the debt that amount; but if you compare the statements of the Secretary and Register, as reported in the official finance report for 1870, the debt is not decreased, but increased between ninety and a hundred millions.

The testimony shows (page 73) that to make a careful examination of the public debt, receipts and expenditures, between 1860 and 1870 would require four or five years, with four or five experienced clerks. Yet the fact is a new clerk in four and a half months made the examination upon which the many and large changes were made, going back nearly to the beginning of the Government.

The proof is that bonds, bank notes, legal-tender notes, revenue stamps are delivered by the Printing Bureau to the loan division, Comptroller, Treasurer, &c., and no check between the parties named. There should be a check; that is, the Register or some other officer should receive, enter, and deliver bonds, notes, &c. Upon the correctness and integrity of the chief of the loan division depends whether or not the true amount of bonds issued is correctly reported or in circulation. I repeat, upon the integrity of one officer, apparently a very proper and good officer, and upon the integrity of his office, depends whether the country knows to-day the true amount of the bonds issued.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are they not registered in the Register's office?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No. Mr. EDMUNDS. Are not all the bonds registered?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course all that pass through the Register's office are registered, but I say to the Senator that the loan division can to-morrow issue or could at any time have issued a bond and the Register's office never might have seen it under the system practiced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator-not to interfere with him—only for information—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It does not interfere at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask how any bond that appears good on its face can get out without having the signature or countersign of the Register of the Treasury?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I said it depends upon the integrity of one officer. If that officer directs the Register to issue a bond for $10,000, when only $1,000 has been paid into the Treasury, I reassert that there is no check upon him, nor has there been.

The erasures, scratches, changes, or alterations on the ledgers of the Treasury Department amount to thousands and affect many hundred millions of dollars. The erasures and alterations on the day-books or journals are so numerous that we did not undertake to count them. Leaves are cut or taken from the books and no one can account for them; warrants taking from the Treasury millions of money are miss-g; others are scratched and apparently altered. Official statements and reports from the War, Navy, and Interior Departments differ largely as to the amounts of money received from or charged by the Treasury Department. No officer of the Treasury De-partment has kept or can furnish a statement of accrued interest on bonds sold—the amount collected is supposed to be many millions. The accounts and statements of the different officers of the Treasury Department do not agree between 1860 and 1870 by large amounts as to the cash in the Treasury at the end of the various fiscal years or as the cash in the Treasury at the end of the various fiscal years or as to the amount of interest paid each year.

The total and net receipts and expenditures for the years between 1860 and 1870, as reported by the Secretary, the Comptroller, and the Register, when compared with the Treasurer's accounts, differ hundreds of millions. Notwithstanding this, we are told these four officers are checks on each other. The Secretary's and the Treasurer's statements as to bonds belonging to special and sinking funds for the year 1870 differ millions. Warrants transferring hundreds of millions of dollars from the Treasury are scratched and apparently altered. Some warrants, said to take large amounts from the Treasury, are missing and cannot be produced. are missing and cannot be produced.

The only witness examined by the committee not employed in the Treasury Department was Mr. Saville, who was chief clerk when the changes referred to in official statements were made. Much information by parties not in the employ of the Government was offered, some stating that they could show frauds, &c. But the committee uniformly responded that their duty was to examine and report as to uniformly responded that their duty was to examine and report as to statements, accounts, and books of the Treasury Department. No evidence was taken by the committee looking to the misuse of money or frauds of any kind. It is certain that between 1869 and 1871 many changes in the public-debt statement and the statement of receipts and expenditures were made, which apparently largely increased the total of the debt and affecting the receipts and expenditures, extending back thirty or forty years, changing the amount as previously ing back thirty or forty years, changing the amount as previously reported, some years many millions.

I shall at an early day ask the Senate to take up the recommendations of the committee, of which there are about eight, looking to the remedying of a good many of the evils that a majority of the committee think exist in the Treasury Department.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the efforts of the chairman of this committee have been much more largely directed to the attempt to support and verify the statements made in speeches by the Senator from West Virginia on this floor than to ascertain the truth in regard to the integrity of the accounts of the Treasury Department. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] and myself are not able to concur with the report and conclusions of the majority of the com-

Two years and a half of continuous labor at a vast expense, with a corps of trained assistants, have failed to disclose one single fact that has not been fully known to Congress and the country since 1871. No one who chose to inspect the public records could fail to observe that the Finance Reports of 1870 and 1871 do not agree with the finance reports prior to that time in their tabulated statements relating to the public debt and the receipts and expenditures; but the majority of the committee fail to say that all of these differences have been explained and have repeatedly been shown to be corrections, the result of a careful revision and analysis of the books of the Treasury

by competent clerks in the office of the Secretary.

In November, 1871, the chief clerk of the Department, by direction of the Secretary, instructed the Register to make certain changes in his tabulated statements, to conform them to those that had been previously made in the Secretary's office. The Register did make the changes, but not until he had carefully examined the books of his own office by his own clerks, and satisfied himself that the corrections were proper, his only objection being that he did not think it wise to vary from statements that had been published by previous administrations. None of the differences or discrepancies indicate that any change has ever been made in the original books of entry, or that the final result has been changed, or that the accuracy of the books has been affected; but on the contrary the testimony taken bepooks has been anected; but on the contrary the testimony taken before the committee clearly shows that in the process of making the examinations which resulted in the revised tables no book and no record was altered in the minutest particular, and that any competent person to-day can take the records now accessible in the Department, and verify for himself the accuracy and propriety of every variation in the tabulated statements.

The explanation offered by the Secretary of the Treasury, on page 20 of the Finance Report of 1871, as a note to the first publication of the revised tabulated statement of the public debt, is a brief, simple, and accurate statement of the whole cause of difference which will be entirely satisfactory to any intelligent person; and the subsequent examination of the public-debt accounts which has been continued through all the years since that time, and which is now progressing and almost completed, fully sustains the accuracy of that note of explanation.

It is true, as the chairman of the committee has said, that an examination of the books by the experts of the committee disclosed numerous instances where alterations and erasures, and in some cases numerous instances where alterations and erasures, and in some cases mutilations, had evidently been made; but in no instance were the experts able to discover that any of these alterations or erasures were other than what they purported to be, that is to say alterations made to correct errors and omissions which occurred at the time, and the necessity for which was fully sustained by all the corresponding records and papers in the files of the Department.

When the enormous volume of business done at the Treasury Department is considered, it is only just to say that the books, accounts, and records are well kept and accurate, and the system of book-keeping and accounting now in force is probably as good and as efficient as can be devised. It is possible that a committee of expert accountants might be able to unify and harmonize the varying systems now in use; but no change should be made without very careful examination at the hands of the very best and most practical talent that can be obtained for the purpose.

Mr. President, the public credit is an indispensable element of the national life. It is inseparably connected with the national honor and the prosperity of every citizen. He who would needlessly assail it or wantonly impair it is a common enemy. Let it be understood that the public accounts have been tampered with and falsified, that the officials are reckless, incompetent, or dishonest; let distrust be aroused and confidence in national integrity be destroyed, and this country would suffer a deeper wound than would be inflicted by pesti-country would suffer a deeper wound than would be inflicted by pestilence or famine or disastrous war.

We think that the report of the majority of the committee is unjust in its innuendoes, its insinuations, its hints, its partial statements, its half-truths. It is a protracted suppressio veri, and fails in every particular when allegations of wrong have been made to report the innocent and satisfactory explanation. It fails to state what we believe the evidence discloses, that the apparent discrepancies in the statements of the public debt and receipts and expenditures have been satisfactorily explained, that they arise from a different assemblage and presentation of identical accounts from the same reports, which have never been changed, that there is no evidence of dishonesty or have never been changed, that there is no evidence of dishonesty or fraud on the part of any official, that the erasures and alterations on the books and warrants are innocent and were rendered necessary by errors and omissions that are incident to all business transactions.

Our views, Mr. President, are presented more at length in the report of the minority which I forward to the desk, and which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that it is worth while for me to ask the floor for a moment after the concise, correct, and clear statement made by my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Ingalls;] but concurring in the views of the minority, which he has submitted, and in the statement which he has made, perhaps I may be permitted to add a word or two. Having devoted my time with him as carefully and as earnestly and honestly as was in our power, following the Senator from West Virginia in his hunt during the last two years and a half for something wrong in the books of the Treasury Department, I have come to the conclusion, and I think every one will who reads not only the report of the majority but the views of the minority, that the great difficulty with the chairman of this committee is his utter inability to understand the difference between the majority that the great difficulty with the chairman of this committee is his utter inability to understand the difference between the majority is the majority of the majority and the majority is the majority of the majority and the majority of the major ence between a change in the mode of stating the public debt and a change of the public debt itself. Throughout two and a half long years of investigation we have met with that difficulty at every step-that there was no difference in this examination between a change of the mode of stating the public debt and a change of the debt itself.

The evidence from the beginning to the end, without a particle of contradiction or attempt at contradiction, shows that not a figure has ever been changed in any book of the Treasury Department since its entry upon that book; that the statement of the public debt upon the books of the Treasury Department to-day is exactly what it ever has been; that there have been in two bureaus of the Department two methods of keeping the account of the public debt: one by issues and redemptions—that is, with the bond that is issued on one side and what is paid to redeem that bond on the other; and the other method of keeping the public debt was by receipts and expenditures, what is received for a bond on one side and what is paid out in money on the other. A moment's reflection will show that these two accounts cannot agree unless a bond is always negotiated at par and without expense to the Government. The one book keeps the bond on one side as an issue and on the other side the redemption of that bond, without any account of discount in negotiating the loan or the expense of it. The other statement on the other books in the other bureau kept the account not only of the bond, but of what it cost to negotiate the bond and what it cost to redeem it, including discount and all expenses attending the negotiation.

Here were two statements of the public debt in the Treasury Department published each year, one that of the Register, and the other that of the Secretary, side by side, resulting from two different methods. In 1870 the Secretary deemed it wise to reconcile these two, the one by issues and redemptions never having had accompanying it anything in reference to the expense of loans. It also had upon one anything in reference to the expense of loans. It also had upon one side various items of public debt that had no corresponding entry on the other side. For instance, the debt of the Revolution assumed by the United States and bonds of the United States issued for it had upon the books of issues and redemptions these two items balancing each other; but on the other books there were no receipts to correspond with the bonds issued, and the Secretary went into the elaborate work of going back to the negotiation of the loans of the Revolution and all other items to make out a new tabulated statement that would show an accurate history of each loan, and so that the debt of the United States could be shown upon paper and be put forth as his report of all the debt of the years back; but he did not alter anybody else's statement; he never altered a figure of the past. When he put forth from year to year the actual cost to the Government of each loan on the one side and the receipts from it on the other in his new table from 1871, it did not agree with the figures in the past. All that he explained in his report. That has disturbed the chairman of this he explained in his report. That has disturbed the chairman of this committee; that is perfectly incomprehensible to him; and he insists upon it in his report that the public debt has been changed hundreds of millions of dollars in this way; and that is the trouble that has cost this Government the expenses of this examination for two and a half long years and the patient labor of this committee

Then the Senator has found upon the books of the Treasury Department entries which to the eye appear to have been erased at some time, one figure taken out and a new figure put in the place of it, and he says that these affect millions of dollars. He finds an entry upon a book of the Treasury Department where a figure 2 at some time it is perfectly evident has been erased and another figure put in the place of it. It is an entry of millions of dollars. But he fails to tell the public that that was an entry in three separate books of account kept in the Treasury Department, two of which kept by double entry are compared at the end of each month and a balance-sheet struck, and the third is compared with these two at the end of each quarter, and the erasure was in one and not in the others; and every witness on the stand has testified that never a figure has been altered since these trial balances have shown the three sets of books to agree

Then, sir, the chairman of the committee has thought it his duty to bring forward here, not only in his report, but in the remarks he has just made, that there are warrants missing from the Treasury Department, covering, he says, millions of dollarsmoney into the Treasury or warrants to take it out. He has said, it is fair to remark in his speech now, in parenthesis, (which the spelling-book says is something to be read in a lower tone of voice, and not necessary to make sense,) that it is true there are duplicates and triplicates of these warrants in the Treasury Department, so that, though there be a warrant lost, there is a duplicate and a triplicate of that warrant in the Treasury Department open to reference and examination by anybody. In the transactions of the Treasury, covering hundreds of millions of dollars, there have been found three or four instances where one of the three copies of a covering-in warrant or a warrant authorizing the paying out of money has disappeared. Recorded upon the books of the Treasury Department, in three distinct places, is the same warrant—two distinct places beside this, and two of the originals are left.

Of what profit to the country has it been that a committee has been two years and a half trying to discover such a great truth as this, winding up with the statement that the committee has taken no evidence to show that there has been fraud. It would become the candor of the committee, it seems to me, if they had found no evidence of fraud, to have said that there was no appearance of fraud. But what was the purpose of the committee? It started out with these questions put to a witness: Have you read the speeches of Hon. Henry G. Davis, delivered in the Senate of the United States on a certain occasion? Have you compared the figures in the speeches with the tables presented here? Are there any discrepancies between the speeches of Hon. HENRY G. DAVIS and these tables? If so, point them out. The "be all" and the "end all" of this committee and its conclusions is that on the whole Hon. HENRY G. DAVIS has accurately stated the fact that from 1871 forward, by a new method of stating the public debt by receipts and expenditures, rather than by issues and redemptions, it results in showing more accurately all the receipts and all the expenditures and the exact liabilities of the Treasury. Not a witness has intimated that a figure in the Treasury Department has ever been altered, since the books at the end of each month and each quarter have been compared with each other and found accurate to a penny—not one.

As to the covering in warrants, one copy of one of which had disappeared, the witnesses were asked to take every item in those warrants and trace them from the time the item came into the Treasury to the time it went out, and see if it was not accurately set forth in the two copies of the covering-in warrants that remained in the Treasury Department, and they declared that they found them perfectly accurate.

I regret, and I think my colleague on the committee [Mr. InGALLS] does, that the committee did not find it within the line of their duty to give the Treasury Department the advantage of this.

Sir, I ought not to let this matter pass from the consideration of the Senate without applying the Senator's own complaint about scratches in the books of the Treasury Department to the experience of the committee itself. The very witnesses who were employed to take the blotters and ledgers of the Treasury Department and turn them over leaf by leaf and hold them up to the light of the sun, and see if they could not discover that when a wrong figure was written either by accident or by mistake, a figure that ought not to be there, and then another put in its place—the very witnesses in making out their tables found themselves falling into the same mistakes, and the testimony is abundant that upon their own original tables furnished the committee to convict the Treasury Department of some improper alterations of the books made countless erasures of the same character on the very tables they furnished.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. You mean the tables furnished by the experts?

Mr. DAWES. The experts furnished tables, and in making out their own tables when they made a figure that they did not intend to make, they erased it and put another one in its place; and the testimony will show, unfortunately for the position of the Senator from West Virginia, that they were asked to point out on their own tables the scratches and erasures precisely like to those they found upon the books of the Treasury Department. Honest men, experts themselves, books of the Treasury Department. Honest men, experts themselves, endeavoring to do their duty, making out large tables, they could not make out a single column of figures without finding it necessary with an eraser to erase one figure and put another in its place; and they said themselves on the stand that the erasures they found on these books were precisely the erasures found upon the books of any merchant's house that they had ever known.

This is the sum and substance, the result of these two years and a half work that the effort of the Senator from West Virginia has been directed to, arising, as I said in the beginning, entirely from the inability on his part to understand the difference between a change in the statement of the public debt and a change in the public debt itself.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has labored about as hard as the Senator from West Virginia has for two years, and I think the labor that he has performed now has given him more trouble than the two years of the Senator from West Virginia. But that has little to do with this subject. It will be noticed that each of my colleagues who compose the minority of the committee, has avoided facts. Neither of them has controverted a single figure or a single fact that I have stated, either in their minority report or in what they have now said. They have gone on with general statements, and said this, that, and the other, but I challenge either of them to put his finger on a single fact stated in the committee's report that is not borne out by the witnesses. There is not a single statement there which is not so sustained. I have stated more than twenty facts, and neither of the Senators in their replies has referred to them except in a general way.

Mr. President, I stated that in a short time I would review the report; and when Senators get the printed reports of the majority and minority on their desks, it will then be time to call attention to the figures. Meanwhile let me say as to the credit of the Governthe figures. Meanwhile let me say as to the credit of the Government that I probably am as careful of it as either of the Senators. It should be borne in mind that these alterations took place between 1860 and 1870, and none since that time of which we know anything. My own belief is, though that is incidental, that the accounts now are much more correctly kept than they were between 1860 and 1870; and so far as my knowledge goes there are now no discrepancies.

But the Senator from Massachusetts has referred to discrepancies in the statements of the cicrks. The Senator knows that in a single instance on a single statement he happened to discover probably half a dozen—I do not think they exceed half a dozen—where figures which the clerks had got wrong in some way were attempted to be corrected. The Senator seeks to apply that in comparison to the great ledgers of this Government! I stated, and restate, that the erasures and scratches in the day-books and the journals are so numerous that the committee did not undertake to count them; but it is the ledgers that I speak of where they are to be seen by thousands, involving thousands of millions of dollars.

Now, as to the warrants, the Senator well knows that it is the original warrant that is now missing, and instead of one I think the number is twenty or thirty that cannot be found, some of them transferring from the Treasury more than $100,000,000. What are stated to be duplicates are there, but the originals are not there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the money appear to be accounted for, or is the money gone with the warrants?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Vermont will have to go to the Treasury and inquire as to that himself. I only say to my friend

Mr. EDMUNDS. The committee has been instructed to do it.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not going to answer as to the money. I only say to my friend from Vermont that if you compare the Treasurer's accounts with those of the other three officers there are hundreds of millions of dollars difference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not answer the question. I want to know the judgment of this committee as to what has become of this money for which the warrants as the Senator says are missing. Is the money missing too, or is it merely the evidence of the fact that is

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suppose the money was found by somebody and got by somebody, I do not know who.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean that it is out of the Treasury or in ?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Out; transferred by the warrant.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Not stolen or robbed?
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will excuse me for not referring to the last word "stolen." I have not referred to that in any form or manner. From the beginning to the end of my talk in the Senate or in the committee I have not referred to anything as being stolen, or to any fraud. This committee was charged to investigate the Treasury accounts and to see whether or not there were changes or alterations, and whether they agreed, and they have con-changes or alterations, and whether they agreed, and they fined themselves to that line entirely.

Mr. INGALLS. They were instructed to do much more than that, the Senator from West Virginia will allow me to say. They were instructed to inquire into the nature of them, by whose authority they were made, and such other facts and circumstances as they might deem necessary to the proper elucidation of the subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Well, Mr. President, the authority

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Well, Mr. President, the authority is in writing with the Secretary.
Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Whether changes were made by the Secretary of the Treasury or by his authority, was the inquiry. That authority in writing is in the report.
Mr. INGALLS. I should like to have the resolution read.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator from Kansas wants it read, when I am done he can have it read. I have no objection then.
Mr. INGALLS. Thenk you.

Mr. INGALLS. Thank you. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In the early part of the examina-Mr. DAVIS, or west virginia. In the early part of the examination of witnesses by the committee, when the Senator from Mest Virginia asked some questions that the Senator from Massachusetts thought were outside of the resolution, he very promptly stopped him and had the resolution read, and it was decided then, I believe, that the resolution confined the committee to the Treasury accounts, books, and statements, and they have confined themselves all through the whole examination to those particulars, and in no instance was a witness called outside of the employ of the Department except one, Mr. Saville, who was chief clerk at the time the alterations took place. At a later day I expect to call up the report, and ask that the recommendations of the committee be acted upon.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to have the resolutions

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.
Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator from West Virginia sits down will he allow me to put a question? What has been the cost in money, as near as the Senator can tell, of this investigation?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am glad Senators on that side are getting careful about money and committees, and I am glad the Sengetting careful about money and committees, and I am giad the Senator has asked the question. The committee was appointed by a pretty unanimous vote. The committee was instructed by the Senate to employ two clerks—not experts. Two clerks have been employed.

Mr. INGALLS. And one stenographer.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not spoken of the stenographer yet. Two clerks have been employed from the beginning of the investigation or soon afterward till the present time, paid at the regular rate of clerks, a per diem of $6. I believe it amounted to the neighborhood of $10,000. Then there is the expense of the stenographer. I think the whole will exceed $10,000 by a few hundred. The entire bill of the stenographer has not yet been presented; but probably between ten and eleven thousand dollars will cover the whole expense of the committee. Not one cent in any form or manner has been expended except for the payment of two clerks at $6 per diem and the stenographer. In no other way has money been expended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the total expense?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Between ten thousand and eleven the present delivers.

thousand dollars.

Mr. INGALLS. I am advised over $16,000 has already been audited.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is very much like many of the other statements of the Senator. I should like to inquire of the Senator where he gets that information?

Mr. INGALLS. From an expert. [Laughter.]
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That corresponds, I fear, with many of the other statements of the Senator from Kansas. Now, I ask him who gave him that information, and whether he knows it to be true?
Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator dispute it?
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do. I do not think it is so.

Mr. INGALLS. We can have a resolution calling for the informa-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator can get it without that. Mr. CONKLING. It may be owing to a difference in book-keeping. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from West Virginia leaves the subject I should like to ask him what legislative act the committee

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Iowa asks a very proper question. The committee make, I think, eight different recommendations. I cannot carry them all in my mind; but one of them is that the heads of the different branches, especially the Secretary, shall examine and report in the light of this report to the next Congress in what manner the apparent evils pointed out by the commit-tee can be remedied. Another one is that there shall be some check upon the issuance of bonds, bank notes, &c., by the Treasury De-

Mr. BUTLER. I submit in reply to the Senator from Iowa that we can have the report read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is pretty long.

Mr. BUTLER. If this information is desired, I submit that that would be the shortest way to get it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be content with having the proposed bill read if the committee recommend legislative action.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the resolution read which measures the jurisdiction of this committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to investigate the finance reports books, and accounts of the Treasury Department, particularly with reference to differences, discrepancies, and alterations in amounts and figures that have been made in them, if any such there be, especially in the annual statements of the expenditures of the Government, revenue collected, and the public debt contained in said reports; and if any such differences, discrepancies, and alterations be found to exist, to report the same and the extent and nature thereof, the years wherein they occur, by what anthority made, if any, the reasons that induced them, and to report generally such other and further information bearing upon the subject as to them may seem best; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to take testimony, to employ a stenographor and two clerks, and leave to sit during the session of the Senate; and that the expenses attending this investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the committee; and said committee shall not be dissolved by the expiration of the present session of the Senate, but shall exist until it shall make its report or shall be discharged.

Mr. CONKLING: What is the date of the resolution?

Mr. CONKLING. What is the date of the resolution?
Mr. EDMUNDS. This resolution was passed on the 19th of November, 1877, and I wish to call the particular attention of the Senate, because this is really a very important matter, to what this committee was directed to do, and then I wish the Senate to bear in mind a comparison between that and what, if I correctly understand the honorable chairman, it has reported that it has done and has omitted to do. The committee was commanded-

To investigate the finance reports, books, and accounts of the Treasury Department, particularly with reference to differences, discrepancies, and alterations in amounts and figures that have been made in them, if any such there be, especially in the annual statements of the expenditures of the Government, revenue collected, and the public debt contained in said reports; and if any such differences, discrepancies, and alterations be found to exist, to report the same and the extent and nature thereof, the years wherein they occur, by what authority made, if any, the reasons that induced them—

And then to report such further information as may bear on the subject. If that is not a command to inquire not only into the fact, which the eye will generally show where there appear to be discrepancies in the accounts in the different bureaus of the Department, where there appear to be erasures and alterations, but to report to us the nature of those circumstances and the reasons why they exist, then I am incapable of understanding the English language.

Therefore, Mr. President, it was the duty of this committee not only to tell us what they say is obvious to everybody that the two sets of books in these two bureaus of the Department do not agree in their totals and that in all these sets of books are the set of books. their totals, and that in all these sets of books, more or less, there are alterations and discrepancies, but the nature of those discrepancies, whether mere accidents, errors that have been corrected, or whether fraudulent and dishonest, working or intended to work injury to the Government. It appears that the committee has thought it was not within its jurisdiction to inquire in that regard; at least if I understand the chairman it has not inquired. They have taken the bark from the tree that we sent them to inspect and have not gone to the root of it at all or touched its body. They were commanded if they found a state of things to exist which the Senator says they have, found discrepancies, erasures, &c., to tell us the nature of those occurrences.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. If he will wait a moment, I will give way. They were commanded to tell us the nature of those occurrences. Now, the essential and in-trinsic nature that the people of the United States either debtors or creditors, tax-payers or voters, care most about, or ought to care most about, is whether any money that belonged to the people of the United States has been fraudulently misappropriated or taken away, or whether any money belonging to the people of the United States that ought to have been paid into the Treasury and responded for has been kept out of it. And if I understand the chairman of the committee, he says they have not gone into this question of fraud or embezzlement or whatever it may be called.

Now, I will hear the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to suggest to the Senator that my understanding of the remarks of the chairman of the committee was that there were discrepancies existing upon the books which showed a different statement of the public accounts and money, and that no satisfactory explanation could be given by any person connected with the Treasury Department in reference to these discrepancies and the alterations which appear upon the books. I think without hearing the report read it is utterly impossible to understand fully all the committee have done; but if I am right in my understanding of the remarks of the chairman of the committee he did state specifically that there were alterations in the books of which no satisfactory explanation could be given, and that as a result it was found that there were discrepancies in the statements of the public accounts and public debt in various years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly the Senator has said, I presume, or will now adopt, all that the Senator from Delaware imputes to him; but what does that amount to? It amounts to the fact that was known before and stated before this committee was appointed, that there were these differences in the books of these two bureaus of this Department, and I do not know but erasures and alterations. Anybody who knows anything would suppose that there would be some, perhaps too many. That we all knew before. Now, we come to the question of a satisfactory explanation. It is not a satisfactory explanation to some minds for a clerk to say, "I changed a figure 1 to a figure 2 because I had made a misentry; I should have entered a figure 2;" or if it is at the foot of the column, "I changed the figure 9 to the figure 8 because 8 is the true footing and I footed it wrong first when I put in 9." That is not satisfactory to some people, and in some cases; it is justly unsatisfactory, because in some cases you ought to have a clerk who knew enough to put it right the first time. I do not know but that we ought to insist upon that inasmuch as Senators cannot be appointed clerks and all of us could not escape getting turned out upon that ground. So the answer that this dis-crepancy is not satisfactorily explained is no answer at all unless the committee tell us what they found the fact to be about the causes and reason of this discrepancy or this alteration, and whether the transactions that it now professes in its changed condition to represent to have taken place actually did take place or not.

Well, Mr. President, if this was intended as a campaign performance,

Well, Mr. Fresident, it this was intended as a campaign performance, I can imagine why the committee did not go into finding out what the truth was about the transactions themselves, because it leaves an innuendo that can be made on the stump. Of course no Senator would make it, but some other fellow might take this report and say, "Here it is; evidently there is something pretty bad here; the money is all gone probably; just see these discrepancies," and stop there; whereas if the committee had examined and reported the truth, wherever it fell, as to the nature and cause and reason of these apparent differences and real differences in the books, then the public would have known what the truth was. Perhaps that is not what was wanted—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to allow me to make a statement of figures. This report will be taken up soon and we shall then, of course, discuss it. The Senator taken up soon and we shall then, of course, discuss it. The Senator taken up soon and we shall then, of course, discuss it. The Senator taken up soon and we shall then, of course, discuss it. to allow me to make a statement of ngures. This report will be taken up soon and we shall then, of course, discuss it. The Senator from Kansas said the cost of this investigation was $16,000. I said between ten and eleven thousand dollars was the expense of the committee. The actual cost, as I have now got the facts, is $10,428.

Mr. INGALLS. Does that represent the amount paid, or the amount and ited?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Just sit down a moment and I will let you know all about it. I was about stating, but the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas do not like to be tripped up, as they have been, and they jumped up so quickly that I did not get out all I intended to say.

There is, as the financial clerk reports, a small bill yet due the stenographer. The amount I have named includes all except that small bill. It may be $100 for aught I know, or thereabout.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the unfinished busi-

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of William H. Thompson was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 4247) to change the name of the steam pleasureyacht W. J. Gordon to Salmo was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee or Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 5896) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Plums to insert after line 233:

For the purchase of seeds and implements, as provided in article 8 of the treaty of 1868 with said Indians, subject to the provisions and limitations of said treaty, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BECK. I desire now to ask the Senator from Kansas to permit the vote on that question to be postponed until the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations can first be acted on, so that we may then have the bill perfected as it comes from the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and then we can return more intelligently, I think, to act on other amendments, and this among them. I hope the Senator will allow that to be done.

Mr. PLUMB. I accede to the request of the Senator from Kentucky very cheerfully, and for the present will postpone the amend-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This question will be considered post-poned. Does the Senator from Kentucky desire the same rule to be applied to all amendments?

Mr. BECK. All outside those of the Committee on Appropriations

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be observed.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator mean that we shall run through the bill, and then offer our amendments after the committee's amendments are acted on?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 234. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Crows, in line 393, after the word "meat," to insert "and such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may require;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to furnish flour and meat, and such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may require, $65,000; in all, $92,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to increase the appropriation "for settlement, support, and civilization of Kickapoo Indians in the Indian Territory, lately removed from Mexico, and such as may remove," from $4,500 to $5,000, in line 425; and in line 426 to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the tribe from $9,179.05 to

Mr. BECK. The change was made because in that particular item there was a difference between the Department and the House Committee of $500, and we made the change so as to be able to confer with the House in regard to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for the Navajoes, line 506, after the word "of" to strike out the word "same;" and in the same line, after the word "treaty," to insert "of June 1, 1868;" so as to make the clause read:

For last of ten installments, for pay of two teachers, per sixth article of treaty of June 1, 1868, $2,000; in all, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, after the word "agriculture," in line 525, to strike out "(one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five Indians)" and insert "and roaming;" so as to make the clause so as to make the clause

Second of ten installments, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior for each Indian engaged in agriculture and roaming, in the purchase of such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper, as per sixth article of treaty of May 10, 1868, $35,000.

Mr. BECK. We propose changing the words "and roaming" from where they are now to line 525, so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior, for each Indian roaming and engaged in agriculture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That transposition will be made and the amendment considered as agreed to in that form.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Otoes and Missourias, to strike out from line 580 to line 583, in the following words:

For support of industrial schools at the Otoe agency, the amount to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sales of the lands of said Indians in Nebraska, $6,000; in all, $15,000.

Mr. BECK. We were advised by the Department that those Indians from the proceeds of the sales of their lands in Nebraska have now a sufficient fund for that purpose, and it is desired that that clause be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, in line 852, before the word "persons," to strike out "twenty-one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For eleventh of thirty installments, to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior, for persons roaming, $185,000.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senate that the committee struck out "twenty-one thousand" in line 852, and "fourteen hundred and twenty" in line 856, because we were not sure, and neither was the Department, that it was the exact number of persons either roaming or engaged in agriculture. That is all there is of that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 856, before the word "persons," to strike out "fourteen hundred and twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For eleventh of thirty installments, to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior, for persons engaged in agriculture, $28,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 880, to reduce the total amount of appropriations for the Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, from $1,402,300 to $1,382,300.

Mr. BECK. That is simply a mistake in addition which we corrected; that is all.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the removal, settlement, subsistence, and support of Indians, in line 1052, to increase the item "for the support of industrial schools, and for other educational purposes for the Indian tribes," from $65,000 to $75,000.

Mr. BECK. I think it better to read a short letter from the Secretary of the Interior in regard to that increase, so that the Senate and the House, if necessary, may see the reasons why we have made the change. I desire to put it in the RECORD. We give them $75,000 for the current year. The estimate is $75,000. The House allowed $65,000. Our Committee on Appropriations have increased it to $75,000. Secretary's letter reads thus:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, April 26, 1880.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 26, 1880.

Sir: In compliance with your verbal request for a statement showing the necessity for the increase of the appropriation for Indian education from $60,000 to $75,000 I have to state that an increase even to $100,000 would still fall far short of providing school accommodations for all the Indian children whose parents are now ready to put them in school. To reduce the amount below $75,000—the sum allowed last year—would occasion the closing or contracting of schools already established.

During the year 1879 there were in operation (exclusive of those among the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory) fifty-two boarding and one hundred and seven day schools, attended by seven thousand Indian children; an increase of nearly one thousand over 1878. The increase will undoubtedly be greater for 1880, and ought to be greater still for 1881.

During the current year three-fourths of the educational fund of $75,000 has been expended in carrying on 12 boarding-schools, with an attendance of 750 pupils, and 21 day-schools, and the remaining fourth has been applied to the enlargement and repair of school-buildings. There have been opened during the year 7 new boarding-schools and 6 day schools. In addition to maintaining those already established, it is of the utmost importance that during the coming year buildings shollshed it is of the utmost importance that during the coming year buildings shollshed for Port Peck agencies, who have necessary of the verbal and advantages whatever, and for the 13,000 Indians at the San Carlos, Colorado River, Western Shoshone, and Fort Peck agencies, who have necessary of the verbal day schools have hitherto been provided. Moreover, from 25 boarding-schools new in operation comes a call for increased freilities to exceed the commodate next year the children who have this year been denied admission for want of room. It is extremely doubtful whether with the recent rise in prices an appropriation of $7

Hon. James B. Beck, Chairman Sub-committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

The extract from the report referred to, appended to the letter, is:

The extract from the report referred to, appended to the letter, is:

The results, after trial during the few years past of the peace policy imperfectly carried out as it has been, prove beyond a doubt that the eventual civilization of Indians may be reached through the education of their children; and further, that it can be brought about more speedily by that method than by any other. Many adult Indians can, of course, in the mean time be taught to raise their own subsistence from the ground, to herd cattle, or to do mechanical work; but while self-support is one of the cardinal points to be reached, civilization, the ultimate end, can only be accomplished through an education of the head and heart. The Navajoes and the Moquis Pueblos are capable of self-support, but having no schools are still degraded heathen, apparently no nearer civilization than they were half a century ago. Such education can be given only to children removed from the example of their parents and the influence of the camps and kept in bearding schools. Experience shows that Indian children do not differ from white children of similar social status and surroundings in aptitude or capacity for acquiring knowledge; and opposition or indifference to education on the part of parents decreases yearly, so that the question of Indian education resolves itself mainly into a question of school facilities.

But the figures contained in the tables herewith fall far short of indicating a purpose on the part of the Government to make this question one of speedy solution. At a low estimate, the number of Indian children of school-going age, exclusive of those belonging to the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory, may be placed at 33,000—an underestimate, several tribes not reported. Of these, not less than 8,000 could, within a short time, be gathered into boarding schools, except for the fact that the teachers are yet to be employed, the school buildings are yet to be erected, and the funds for both, and for feeding and clothing the scholars, are yet to be appropriated.

The whole number of children who can be accommend the simple school of the school o fact that the teachers are yet to be employed, the school buildings are yet to be erected, and the funds for both, and for feeding and clothing the scholars, are yet to be appropriated.

The whole number of children who can be accommodated in the boarding-schools now provided at the various agencies is only 3,461. To these may be added 5,970 more, who can find room in day schools—those expensive makeshifts for educational appliances among Indians—making a total of only 9,431 Indians who have yet been placed within reach of school facilities. And when it is considered that the 50 youth who spend from one to three years in a boarding-school must step from that into the social atmosphere created by 500 youth and 2,500 other members of the tribe who are still in ignorance, it can readily be seen that the elevation of an Indian tribe is being attempted by a method at least as slow as it is sure, and that what should be the work of a year will be protracted through a decade, and the work of a decade through a generation.

In many cases this policy is not only shortsighted, but in direct contravention of treaty stipulations, as, for example, the treaty of 1868, with the Kiowas and Comanches, which reads as follows:

"And the United States agrees that for every thirty children between said ages [six and sixteen years] who can be induced or compelled to attend school, a house shall be provided and a teacher competent to teach the elementary branches of an English education shall be furnished, who will reside among said Indians and faithfully discharge his or her duty as teacher. The provisions of this article to continue for not less than twenty years."

The one boarding-school at the Kiowa and Comanche agency, which will accommodate one hundred and twenty pupils, is filled and the other three hundred and eighty children are waiting their turn. To comply with treaty stipulations with these two tribes would more than absorb the entire fund appropriated for the civilization and education of all the Indians in the Indian T

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator what is the purpose of this fund? Is it for schools in Kansas and other places, or is it for the schools among the Indians?

Mr. BECK. For schools among the Indians entirely. So I am advised.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1076, to increase the appropriation "for the support of Indians at Fort Peck agency" from $85,000 to $125,000.

Mr. BECK. In regard to that increase for the Indians at Fort Peck I will say to the Senate that we were advised it was important to increase the appropriation for the benefit of straggling Indians, who would otherwise give us trouble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1097, to increase the appropriation "for the transportation of Indian supplies" from $225,000 to $250,000.

Mr. BECK. Our information was that as $225,000 have been allowed for the current year and there was a deficiency of $25,000, and the same for last year and there was the same deficiency, if we do not allow $250,000 there will be a deficiency again, and we thought it was best to meet it at once.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the miscellaneous appropriations, to strike out from line 1171 to line 1174, in the following words:

That all laws and parts of laws creating or authorizing the commission of ten citizens provided for in the act of 10th April, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Expenses of Indian commissioners:
For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that, as that amendment may give rise to some debate, it be reserved, and that we go on with the other amendments to the bill.

Mr. BECK. There are several amendments left to be acted upon, and if we can come back to this before any other amendments are taken up than those of the committee, I have no objection to the suggestion being carried out.

Mr. INGALLS. That is my proposition. I have sent for a volume that I have not yet received, and I should like to have the amendment passed over until it comes to hand.

Mr. BECK. That is right. Let it be temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The amendment will be passed over, there being no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for the pay of Indian police," line 1184, after the word "equipments," to insert "and rations;" and in line 1186, after the word "reservations," to strike out "sixty" and insert "eighty;" so as to make the clause

Pay of Indian police: For the services of not exceeding eight hundred privates at $5 per month each, and not exceeding one hundred officers at $8 per month each, of Indian police, and for equipments and rations, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, $80,000.

Mr. BECK. I propose to have read, I believe I will read it myself, our Secretary having read so very much that he must be fatigued, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the necessity for an increase of this Indian police. I desire it to appear in the RECORD for future use, if not for the Senate just now. The Secretary of the Interior says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, April 26, 1880.

Sir: In reference to your verbal request of the 24th instant, the following statement of facts and recommendations are submitted for the information and action of your committee concerning the item of appropriation for pay of Indian police for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, embraced in the bill making appropriations for the Indian service for the mext fiscal year, now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill referred to contemplates an appropriation for the "pay of not exceeding eight hundred privates, at $5 per month each, and not exceeding one hundred officers, at $8 per month each, of Indian police, and for equipments, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, $60,000."

I find upon an examination of this item that the amount proposed to be appropriated will not be sufficient for the support of the force employed, for the reason that no provision is made for the subsistence of police at agencies where rations are not furnished.

At this date there are forty-two agencies at which police are employed, seven-that no provision is made for the subsistence of ponce at agencies where rations are not furnished.

At this date there are forty-two agencies at which police are employed, seventeen of which are non-ration agencies. It is an established fact that Indians cannot be employed at these agencies at the salaries specified, unless subsistence is furnished, and as an Indian so employed is compelled to devote his whole time in the discharge of his duties, some provision should be made for the support of himself and family.

At the seventeen agencies referred to, there is employed a force of three hundred and four policeman. Five persons is about the average to a family. To subsist this number of families the daily rations would amount to 1,520, or an aggregate of 554,800 rations per year.

I, therefore, urgently recommend that the item "pay of police" be amended as follows: After the word "equipments," insert the words "and for subsistence of police and their families at non-ration agencies," and that a sum of not less than $80,000 be inserted as the amount to be appropriated, in lieu of $60,000, the amount named in the bill.

The Indian police force has proved itself the most effective instrument for the preservation of order, maintenance of peace, and protection of property, not only on reservations, but also in their vicinity, that has yet been found; and its discontinuance at any point would be a most serious injury to the service.

I, therefore, most urgently urge the increase of the appropriation as above recommended.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary,

Hon. James B. Beck, United States Senate.

The committee made the recommendation in accordance with that

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1192, to insert:

For additional clothing not specifically appropriated for under the treaties with the various tribes, to be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior in cases where necessary, $60,000; and he shall cause report to be made to Congress at its next session thereafter of his action under this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 1205 to 1220, in the following words:

For this amount, to pay the following-named persons the sums annexed to their

Mr. BECK. The committee recommend the striking out of those lines because of the information received from the Department of the Interior in regard to the matter, which I will read. These items were passed on by Congress favorably a few years ago, and therefore they seem to have very high recognition, but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs advised the committee that he was not satisfied as to the interior and I desired a passet to be represented stating the facts. their justice, and I desired a paper to be prepared stating the facts, which paper reads thus:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, April 27, 1880;

Sir: In answer to your verbal inquiry in relation to certain claims in favor of J. D. Abbott, M. C. King, M. L. Brittain, and Scroop Enloe, amounting to $744.38, for the payment of which an appropriation was made in House bill No. 4212, I have to say that an appropriation for the payment of these claims was inserted in the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Interior Department for the fiscal year 1877, approved August 15, 1876, and under instructions from the Department these claims were forwarded to the accounting officers of the Treasury for the settlement under said act, without any recommendation from this office; but no payment was made by the Treasury Department, the claims not being considered proper ones. The act of August 15, 1876, states these claims to be for expenses incurred by Silas H. Sweetland, special agent sent by the Indian Department to make per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokes in 1879, whereas the accounts show that the claims are for merchandise, &c., furnished a number of Indians in 1868, and have no connection whatever with expenses incurred by Special Agent Sweetland.

This office is also informed that after the refusal of the Treasury Department to pay the claims the parties brought suit in the Court of Claims for the amount claimed by them. In view of that fact, and of the additional one that the claims are not considered proper ones against the United States, I respectfully recommend that the amount appropriated for the payment of the same by House bill. No. 4212 be not concurred in by the Senate.

Very respectfully,

Hon. JAMES B. BECK, United States Senate.

R. E. TROWBRIDGE.

That is all the information we had upon the subject.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not concur in the recommendation of the committee to strike out these clauses These claims, constituting altogether $744, were appropriated for by the act of 1876, in the Indian bill, and because the act was not mandatory upon the officers of the Department they refused to pay them upon some ground I know not what. The items were inserted again by the House, and now at this late moment the Senate committee have stricken out the appropriations to pay these men. I have telegraphed to the Department for some information, but have not been able to obtain it this morning; there has been no response to my telegram as yet; but I am informed upon authority which I deem entirely reliable that however these claims were connected with the acts of this agent, Sweetland, who was sent out there, they were recognized by the council of the band of Cherokees who, in solemn council held in the year 1874 or 1875, directed the Treasurer of the United States to pay these claims out of the reserved fund of the Cherokee band, and that that direction of the council of the Cherokee Nation is now upon file in the Treasury Department.

Whether in the opinion of the Indian Commissioner or not this is a proper claim it seems to me is not a matter for him to decide after the Government of the United States has recognized it as a proper claim to be paid out of the fund from which the money is to come. I hope as these parties had their claim recognized by the Government four years ago and have been compelled to wait so long that they will not be compelled to wait still longer. The fact that they have gone into the Court of Claims and are endeavoring there to get their claims allowed it seems to me constitutes no argument in favor of the Senate allowed it seems to me constitutes no argument in favor of the Senate refusing them here. The amount is very small, and after they pass through the Court of Claims and the lawyers by whom they are handled the amount will be so small that there will be nothing left for the benefit of these claimants. If there is anything due them the Government ought to pay them, and charge it to the fund out of which it is to be paid, and not compel these men to exhaust the little pittance that is due them in endeavoring to get their claim through the Court of Claims.

the Court of Claims.

Mr. BECK. The committee acted upon the information I have given, first, that the officers of the Treasury Department did not regard these as proper claims, that being the language used; second, because they purport to be for one thing in the bill that passed and for another upon their face; and, third, because they are now before the Court of Claims, where their justice will be fairly tested, and there is a provision of law to pay all judgments so rendered. For those reasons the committee ask that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I will say in addition to what has been said by the Senator from Kentucky, that these belong to a class of claims which are usually provided for in the sundry civil bill, and that there are probably several hundred similar claims which are pending before Congress and before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not see any reason why these cases should be selected in order that they may be appropriated for in this bill and others refused admittance into the bill. Any evidence of the justice of these claims that may exist can be presented, and the Senator from North Carolina can have ample time to make up his case and present the evidence substantiating these claims, and if found correct he can have them incorporated in the sundry civil bill, which is the bill in which provision is usually made for individual claims arising out of Indian affairs.

Mr. VANCE. I simply desire to say that the reason why these claims should be paid, although there are outstanding six or seven hundred others, is simply because Congress has once authorized their payment and the will of Congress has been defeated by the subordinate officers of the Treasury Department. I think that fact gives it some preference if archive the subordinate of the congress of the treasury Department. erence if nothing else. . Suppose there are seven or eight hundred claims; suppose there are seven or eight thousand claims; if these are just claims why not pay them? The money does not come out of the United States Government; it comes out of the fund that belongs to these Indians themselves.

Mr. WITHERS. Which is held in trust, however, by the United States Government. The Senator will understand me; if these are just claims I agree with him that they ought to be paid, but the other bill is the bill in which they ought to be appropriated for, and not this bill.

Mr. VANCE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him when this information was obtained; whether it was before the committee when the amendment was agreed on ?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir, the information was before the committee, and we requested that it should be furnished in writing, as we did not wish to have to answer by mere verbal statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 11, noes 21;

Mr. EATON. If I may be permitted, I desire to suggest that unless the Chair is satisfied that a quorum is not present the roll need not be called. Evidently there is a quorum here. I should think the yeas and nays on the amendment would arswer.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

That will do as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call of the roll has commenced, but by unanimous consent it can be dispensed with.

Mr. WITHERS. Let us have the yeas and nays, and then if a quorum fails we can have a call of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. There is no objection to the yeas and nays being taken on the amendment. That will develop the fact whether there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the year and nays will be considered as ordered upon this amendment. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. By reference to the Indian appropriation bill, approved on the 15th of August, 1876, I find that an appropriation was made for J. D. Abbott for $175; M. C. King, $212.03; M. L. Brittain, $232; Scroop Enloe, $125.35; with a proviso:

That the amounts due J. D. Abbott, M. C. King, M. L. Brittain, and Scroop Enlos be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees.

I understand these are the identical sums for which provision is made in this bill, and that the reason why it is necessary cause in consequence of the unlawful failure of the officers of the Treasury Department to comply with an act of Congress the money was not paid. It seems to me that we ought to pay but little heed to any communication from the Secretary of the Interior or any other officer in view of the fact that Congress has once declared that the money should be paid and the President has signed the bill making the appropriation for the payment of these identical sums. If that failure is due to the fact that certain executive officers have disobeyed the law, I should be very much indisposed to agree to the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations. I think the amendment ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator know upon what ground the claims were not passed by the accounting officers? I do not, and I ask for information.

Mr. INGALLS. After Congress had said that the claims were just and valid, after they had passed both committees and both Houses of Congress and the bill had been approved by the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon some outside report, said that, in their judgment, the claims were improper and ought not to be paid; that is, after the bill had been passed and

Mr. WINDOM. If that be true, I think we ought not to pass them in this appropriation bill. If anybody has discovered a reason why these claims should not be paid, it is proper to refer them to the Committee on Claims, where they can be examined. I, for one, will not consent to a claim going into any appropriation bill about which claim there is a dispute. As the Senator from Kansas has shown that there are questions which have arisen as to whether these claims should be paid or not, I think it is the duty of the Senate to strike them out as the committee has recommended, and let them go where they can be investigated.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say to the Senator from Minnesota, in support of what he has said, that we are advised now by a communica-tion from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who made a verbal statement to us on Saturday, that these claims, after having passed Congress, were sent to the accounting officers of the Treasury and not allowed. I read:

These claims were forwarded to the accounting officers of the Treasury for the settlement under said act, without any recommendation from this office, but no payment was made by the Treasury Department, the claims not being considered proper ones. The act of August 15, 1876, states these claims to be for expenses incurred by Silas H. Sweetland, special agent sent by the Indian Department to make per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokees in 1879, whereas the accounts show that the claims are for merchandise, &c., furnished a number of Indians in 1868, and have no connection whatever with expenses incurred by Special Agent Sweetland.

In addition to that, they are now before the Court of Claims, and the justice of them is being tested there. I desire my colleague on the committee to know of these additional facts to fortify his conclu-

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand that an appropriation bill is not mandatory on the officers of the Treasury to pay such a claim; that the appropriation authorizes it but does not direct it unless it is so stated in express terms.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not. The accounting officers must examine each account which is presented. The mere fact that an appropriation was made two years ago does not change the duty of the accounting officers to make an examination of each claim and see whether the account is correct and whether the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. INGALLS. Then it rests wholly with the officers of the accounting department of the Treasury to say that upon an inspection of certain documents and papers, in their judgment both Houses of Congress and both committees and the President have made a mistake in a deliberate legislative act, and interpose a veto to prevent the execution of the will of Congress. I do not believe that is right, and if it is the practice the sooner it is changed the better.

Mr. ALLISON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Yes, sir. Mr. INGALLS.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand from this communication, the appropriation was made four years ago on account of the per capital payments to the North Carolina Cherokees, and when the claim appeared at the Treasury Department it was for supplies and clothing furnished in 1868. Would any accounting officer pass such a claim as that and allow it to be paid? It seems to me that no accounting officer would or could.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is doubtless in the power of Congress to make a mandatory appropriation, but I do not understand that this appropriation is mandatory but merely permissory, and depends upon the examination of the accounts.

Mr. WINDOM. I think this provision of the bill as it came from the House is mandatory, if I have understood it rightly in a hasty reading. The provise adds:

Provided, That the smounts due as above set forth be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees; and the proper accounting officer of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sums to the above-named persons.

I have not found the original act. I fancy that that was not mandatory, but that it is designed to be made so in order to correct the

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that this provision is exactly the act of 1876 with the mandatory clause added.

Mr. WINDOM. That is what I supposed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that the claims as formerly passed could not be allowed because they were not due for the purpose stated in the law, but that this provision intends to have

mr. VANCE. I beg leave to say in regard to that point that I suppose the reason why it was not made mandatory was because it depended upon the concurrence of the Eastern band of Cherokees, and they having concurred, as I understand, there is nothing more for the officers of the Department to do, it seems to me, but to pay the ac-

Mr. BECK. I desire to be made part of the record a letter from the Secretary of the Interior upon that subject, which I will hand to the Reporter without reading, if I may be allowed to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read sec-

The Committee on Appropriations proposed to amend the section by striking out the following provise from line 18 to line 29:

And provided further, That all officers and agents of the Army and Indian Bureau are prohibited, except in a case specially directed by the President, from granting permission in writing or otherwise to any Indian or Indians on any reservation to go into the State of Texas under any pretext whatever; and any officer or agent of the Army or Indian Bureau who shall violate this provision shall be dismissed from the public service. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed and required to take at once such other reasonable measures as may be necessary in connection with said prohibition to prevent said Indians from entering said State.

Mr. BECK. The committee determined to recommend that that provision be stricken out for want of sufficient information in regard to it. We saw that the Indians were prohibited from going into the State of Texas on any pretext whatever, and we were not aware why there should be such a prohibition in regard to that particular State; and, not having the information, we thought we would leave the question open to discussion with the House when the conferees get together, as they generally do on bills of this magnitude. But I understand from the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Coke,] as well as from his colleague, [Mr. Maxey,] that they can now give very good reasons why this clause should not be stricken out; and if they can, the committee have no feeling about it, but, on the contrary, will unite with them if the Senate should think the reasons are good. I hope the Senator from Texas will be kind enough to state the reasons.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, this provision was inserted in the bill at the request of the entire Texas delegation in Congress. This request was made in obedience to repeated solicitations of the governor of Texas that such a law be passed. The necessity for such a law arises from the fact that every year Indians from distant reservations have gone down to Texas for hunting and other purposes and have almost invariable deved text upon the people or or fraction. almost invariably depredated upon the people on our frontier. They have stolen a large amount of stock, horses, and killed a great many cattle, and have killed and scalped a great many men, women, and children. It has frequently been the case that these raiding parties, who have destroyed property and life on our frontier, have had in their pockets permits from the Indian agencies where they belong to go down into Texas to hunt. The Government of the United States has not a foot of public land in Texas. There is no hunting-ground there belonging to the Government of the United States; and we believe the Government has no right to grant permission to Indians to go down there and hunt upon territory to which the Government has

There is no game in that country now; it is all gone. A permit to hunt means a permit to go down into Texas, greatly to the alarm of our frontier people and to endanger not only their lives but their property. So well is this fact known, that while I was governor of Texas, I received information from Fort Sill that a number of Indians would leave there at a certain time on a hunt into Texas, and I informed the commander of the frontier troops of the time when the Indians would be in Texas. He went and met them, and when he met them they were in full war paint, fully armed, and within thirty miles of one of the most flourishing settlements upon the frontier, traveling directly toward it, and he fought them there, losing several men and a large number wounded, but drove the Indians out of the State. That was a hunting party; and that hunting party had the permission of the agent at Fort Sill to go down into Texas. A party of Indians going into a region to hunt where there is no game means danger to the people, danger to their property, and alarm to the whole frontier.

The State of Texas has kept for the last ten years a force upon the frontier for no other purpose in the world than to protect the people against Indians, when there is not an Indian reservation in Texas, not an Indian who can lawfully be in Texas, and when the only Indians who go down there at all are Indians that are permitted to roam there from reservations where they are supposed to be under the charge of Indian agents.

We desire the passage of this clause into a law in order to save the State the expense of keeping troops in the field; we desire the passage of this law in order to give safety to our people and protection to

We hope that this amendment will not be concurred in, and I make the specific point in conclusion that the land in Texas which does not belong to individuals belongs to the State of Texas; that the Government of the United States possesses and has no land in Texas, and that it is not proper that the Indians whom the Government assumes the right to control and keep upon reservations should be permitted to go into that State to trespass upon the lands of others.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, in addition to what my colleague has said I desire to state very briefly the reasons which have induced the Texas delegation in both the Senate and House of Representatives to unanimously concur in asking Congress to enact the portion of the appropriation bill now proposed to be stricken out by the Committee on Appropriations in the amendment under consideration.

governor of the State of Texas, Governor Roberts, officially sent to me, as the senior member of the delegation, a complete state ment of the outrages which have been committed upon the frontier people of Texas by Indians coming on our territory. That was an official paper of such grave importance that I called the delegation official paper of such grave importance that I cannot the delegation together. We conferred about it, and as to the proper course to pursue, and it was agreed among ourselves that our colleague in the House, Mr. Wellborn, who belongs to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, should present something like what we have now in the House bill before us, and my colleague here, [Mr. Coke,] who is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, was charged by the delegation with presenting such a section here. It is a matter to us of grave consequence. The charges made by the governor of Texas were abundantly sustained by proof. We not only did that, but we called upon both the Interior Department and the War Department in regard to the matter, and laid the subject before them.

The question has been asked why should Texas be singled out and this provision be made applicable to Texas alone. It has been well said by my colleague that the United States owns no public domain within the borders of the State of Texas. All that country there is the property of the State of Texas; the public domain belongs to that State, hence no Indian reservation can be placed within her borders. But what is the fact? Just beyond our borders and in close proximity to our borders is the great reservation at Fort Sill, and across the border, in New Mexico, the Fort Stanton reservation is placed. Some officers at these places are in the habit of granting permits for the Indians to go off the reservation and hunt. They do go down into Texas, and what is the result? The official report that the governor sent to us was that they had been depredating upon the settlements, killing cattle, and interfering with the people.

What is the size of the pan-handle of Texas, as it is called there, that is the size of the par-handle of Texas, as it is called there, that is to say, that portion of the State lying north of Red River? It is true that Texas is called a State ordinarily, but it is in fact an empire. The territory of Texas north of Red River, and which is called the pan-handle, is about two hundred and twenty-five miles east and west, and about one hundred and forty miles north and south. Five years ago that was almost an unknown land. During the last few years it has become settled up, and there are now, acthe last few years it has become settled up, and there are now, according to the best information I have, about three hundred thousand head of cattle inside of that pan-handle, and settlements are going on everywhere. It was but this morning I received a letter from Clarendon, in the pan-handle of Texas, dated April 22, 1880, from a very intelligent gentleman, James H. Parks, deputy surveyor, and he says of the little village in which he lives:

Two years ago not an inhabitant nor a head of stock for one hundred miles south-east, south, and west. Now we have one hundred and fifty residents, twenty-seven thousand head of sheep, and fifty thousand head of cattle that were not known to the region they now occupy.

That is only in one settlement. I speak of this to show the amazing increase of that pan-handle country in the last two years. Here is a great country—two hundred and twenty-five miles east and west, one hundred and forty miles north and south—rapidly filling up with a splendid population gathered from the Northern and Northwestern a spicified population gathered from the Northern and Northwestern States, settling there in one single neighborhood with fifty thousand head of cattle and twenty-seven thousand head of sheep, and all gathered there in two years. We should be untrue to our duty if we did not ask Congress to protect us and those people who are set-

Now, when you go to one of these Departments, under that dual, miserable, and abominable system of Indian government, a disgrace to any statute-book, you find one Department will say, "the responsibility is not on us;" if we go to the other they tell us the same thing; and thus with all the efforts of the Texas delegation we have not been able to ascertain whether the War Department is responsible or the Interior Department is responsible, but the fact remains that our property is depredated upon. This clause in the bill is to prevent any man, whether he be an agent of the Interior Department or an employé of the War Department, from giving a permit to authorize Indians to go down there to hunt, not game, but to hunt women, children, cattle, horses, and what we have there, and thus break up this infant settlement, which is so important to the State of Texas and the general walfare of the country because this great wealth of them. the general welfare of the country, because this great wealth of thousands of cattle and sheep adds to the general wealth of the country.

It is for these reasons, and not in any spirit of captiousness, but in the true spirit of a desire to protect our people, that we have asked that this clause should be put on the bill; and if any other State were similarly situated I would not hesitate to say that I should sustain that other State in a similar effort; but I apprehend there is no State in this Union that can say she has a country which two years ago was a terra incognita, and which now is getting settled in the manner which I have just read—a tract two hundred and twenty-five miles east and west and one hundred and forty miles north and south a territory large enough to make a first-class State itself. We want to protect that country, and this we regard as the best possible means that the wisdom of our delegation could devise to secure that object.

These are the reasons, which I have presented as briefly and as clearly as I could.

Mr. BECK. After consulting as well as I could with the members of the Committee on Appropriations who are present, I think I am authorized to say for them-I know I am for myself-that the committee agree with the Senators from Texas. The only obstacle I found in the way was the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Eaton] who agreed with them, I believe, except that he was not prepared to leave the words "except in a case specially directed by the President."

Mr. EATON. I am very free to say that I agree with the Senators from Texas that this amendment ought not to be agreed to. I have no doubt that the clause ought to stand except some of the words.

The proviso reads:

And provided further. That all officers and agents of the Army and Indian Bu-an are prohibited, except in a case specially directed by the President.

I have yet to learn that the President of the United States should have the power to give permission to bands of Indians to roam over Texas, or Vermont, or Connecticut, or Maine, or Kentucky. I desire those words to come out.

Mr. MAXEY. We have no objection that the words objected to should be stricken out. I do not know that I have the right to men-tion the fact here, but I understand that that part of the clause was not offered on the part of our delegation in the House; it got on there not by their wish. I have no objection on earth to the motion suggested by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. I desire those words stricken out.
Mr. MAXEY. I refer to that part allowing special permission of the President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COKE. I would suggest that it might possibly occur that it might be necessary to use some of these Indians as scouts under some circumstances, and in that event there should be authority reserved, and the words proposed to be stricken out would allow authority to be exercised for that purpose.

Mr. EATON. Then do I understand the Senator from Texas to say that whenever a general in command of troops, or a colonel of a regiment in command, desires to use an Indian scout, it will be necessary for him to go to the President of the United States in order to get permission in writing?

Mr. COKE. I simply made the suggestion that it might be necessary for a military purpose that that clause should remain. I gave that as an illustration. I am entirely willing it should be stricken out, or I am willing that part should remain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not rise to debate this knotty problem, but simply to put in an humble and I know ineffectual word in favor of agreeing to the amendment of the committee, on the ground that the clause proposed to be stricken out is undertaking important legislation on an appropriation bill where it has no place. It belongs to a careful consideration either by the Military Committee or by the Committee on Indian Affairs and ought not to be in this

I do not suppose that suggestion will do any good; but for fear my constituency might be impugned by somebody on one side of the Chamber or the other, and being perfectly sincere in my opposition to this kind of legislation on appropriation bills, I wanted to say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out from line 18 to line 29 of section 4.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read section 5. The Committee on Appropriations proposed to amend the section by

And that the several appropriations herein made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the said tribes respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment Just read, and I presume it may as well be offered now.

Mr. BECK. We have only two other amendments, and I hope the Senator will allow us to get through with them.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to waive my right to amend the proposition.

Mr. BECK. No right is waived at all.
Mr. PLUMB. Very well.
The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 6, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, anthorized and directed to invest in the bonds of the United States, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 4 per cent. per annum, the unexpended balance of the money appropriated to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewas of Lake Superior, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874; the said bonds and interest thereon to be applied as provided in said act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, semi-annually, to place to the credit of the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewas, of Lake Superior, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment," approved April 1, 1880, interest upon the unexpended balance of money belonging to the said Indians appropriated under the provisions of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874, and now to their credit on the books of the Treasury, said unexpended balance and interest thereon to be applied as provided in said act.

Mr. BECK. The committee instruct me to move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "interest upon," at the end of line 20, the words "twenty thousand dollars being;" so as to read:

Interest upon twenty thousand dollars, being the unexpended balance of money belonging to the said Indians.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. BECK. I desire only to say that this amendment was drawn at the Department, and was believed to be an improvement upon the language used in the section of the House bill.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Now I desire—

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Ken-

Mr. Flows. I was to can the attention of the Senator Holm Retrieved to that provision. I see it does not mention any rate of interest. Was that designed to be omitted?

Mr. BECK. The act referred to provides for the rate, 4 per cent. At the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] the amendment proposing to strike out lines 1171 to 1174, inclusive, and to continue the Indian commissioners, was passed over. Is the Senator now ready to consider that?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it the desire of the Senator from Kentucky to consider that amendment at the present moment?

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Kentucky is ready to consider it, and it is the only committee amendment left undetermined.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand the Senator from Colorado desires to call attention to some other amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I rise with some diffidence because I have to differ with the Committee on Appropriations. They provide, on page 47, $8,000 for the support and civilization of the Utah Indians at Uintah, and $3,000 for the employes, and then they add up the items and they say the two sums make $11,200. I suggest to the Senator that unless they have changed the arithmetic very recently, that needs a little

Mr. BECK. Senators have observed no doubt the vast number of items in this bill and the large number of calculations that had to be made. The House and the Department went over it as carefully as they could, and we have discovered at the top of page 37 one error and perhaps there are more. That is very obviously an error in the calculation, and it shows the importance of reading over the bill so as to be correct.

Mr. TELLER. It is an error, is it?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir; evidently.

Mr. TELLER. The "two hundred" before "dollars" ought to be stricken out.

Let it be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the correction will be made by striking out "two hundred" on line 1152.

Mr. BECK. I shall be happy if any other errors are pointed out. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to strike out the clause from line 1171 to line 1174 and insert in lieu thereof the words printed in italics as lines 1175 to 1179, relative to the Indian commissioners.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in 1869, when there was great apprehension of frontier disturbance and of further Indian difficulties upon the plains, an appropriation of $2,000,000 was made—

To enable the President to maintain the peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, bring them, where practicable, upon reservations, relieve their necessities, and encourage their efforts at self-support; a report of all expenditures under this appropriation to be made in detail to Congress in December next. And for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act—

And for the purpose of assisting him in the expenditure of this specific amount, he was authorized—

To organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may, under his direction, exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of the appropriations made by this act.

The act of April 10, 1869. In pursuance of the authority conferred by that act this board of Indian commissioners was appointed, it will be observed, for a specific purpose; it was not to be a continuing organization; and this is a singular illustration of the uniform tendency of all appointments of this class to become chronic and grow into something permanent and absolutely unavoidable, eventually. It was provided in the first place that these gentlemen should serve entirely without compensation, but they were authorized to employ a clerk. They have continued in service ever since that time, now for about eleven years, having been re-established from year to year in annual appropriation bills, expending on an average $10,000 or $15,000 per annum, and they have so far evaded the original purpose and design of the act that instead of employing a clerk they have hired one of their own number as secretary, so that he receives a stated compensation for his services.

I have sent to the Library, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the document-room of the Senate, and to every other public office that I could reach for the purpose of obtaining the annual reports of this board of commissioners since the time they were first organized in 1869; but thus far without effect. I believe they have been published, but they are not accessible.

Concurring as I do with the opinion of the House of Representa-tives, that if these gentlemen ever had any reasonably just or proper functions they have long since been performed; that they have become an ornamental excrescence upon the Indian service; that it would be just exactly as wise to appoint ten gentlemen, eminent for their philanthropy and for their humanity, to superintend the purahases of the Quartermaster's Department or the expenses of any other branch of the Government, I hope before we are called upon to perpetuate this anomaly that the chairman of the committee will give us some information as to the necessity why this board should longer continue. I understand that they do nothing; that they have no functions defined by law; that they wander about the country from point to point in Pullman cars, endeavoring as a kind of close corporation, under the guise of superintending the purchases of Indian sup-plies, to secure contracts for themselves or for their friends, and that it is utterly impossible to point out one single good or valuable act that has ever been performed by this board since the time they were

As at present constituted, these ten gentlemen are as follows: Under the language of the statute they are supposed to be eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy. They have received that decoration and that embellishment only by a designation from the President to serve upon this board. The chairman is Mr. A. C. Barstow, of Providence, Rhode Island; the secretary is Mr. William Stickney, of New York avenue, corner Fifteenth street, Washington, District of Columbia, who I understand is a banker in this city, and who, in addition to his emoluments as a banker in this city, and who, in addition to his emoluments as a banker, receives compensation as secretary of this board from the Government. General Clinton B. Fisk, New York City; David H. Jerome, Saginaw, Michigan; E. M. Kingsley, Clinton Place, New York City; W. H. Lyon, New York City; B. Rush Roberts, (who is also the minister plenipotentiary from the Quaker organization to superintend that portion of the aboriginal was that has been confided to that portion of our religious corrections. race that has been confided to that portion of our religious organizations;) Albert K. Smiley, Providence, Rhode Island; General George Stoneman, California; and Charles Hutton, New York City, consti-tute the remainder of the board. Here are four gentlemen from the city of New York, two from the city of Providence, Rhode Island; one from the city of Washington, one from Michigan, one from Maryland, and one from California.

land, and one from California.

Mr. SLATER. No Ohio man?

Mr. INGALLS. No Ohio man. Ohio has been singularly and strangely overlooked. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been no vacancy recently.

Mr. INGALLS. Probably not. Now, a mere statement of the location of these gentlemen, a statement of the functions they are called upon to perform, is sufficient to show the absolute folly of continuing this appropriation longer. Why it is that four gentlemen in New York City, two in Rhode Island, and one from Washington, and three from other interior and eastern States, who have no personal connection whatever with Indian affairs, who have no Indian constituencies direct or remote, who live in communities not affected by Indians, should be allowed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Interior should be allowed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Interior without compensation in managing the Indian Department of this Government, is past comprehension; and I am surprised that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have disagreed with the de-liberate action of the House in recommending that this board be longer continued.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, this is the last of the committee's amendments. Of course there will be others offered by Senators, at least I assume there will be. I desire to say in as few words as I can why the committee, as I understand it, refused to consent to the repeal of the provision in the House bill with regard to the Indian peace commission.

A hold in my hand the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the House. That bill contained a provision for the expenses of the Indian commissioners, allowing them $7,500. It was stricken out in the House. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have recommended precisely in the language of the Committee on Appropriations of the House that the provision should be retained, allowing, however, $10,000; and perhaps it is a sufficient answer to what was done in the House to say that the committees of both bodies, who are presumed to have looked into this matter and examined it carefully, have concurred in recommending that this commission ought to be continued, so that we are not running counter to what may fairly be assumed to be the intelligent opinion of that portion of

This commission was organized ten years ago, and so far from not baving done any good as is now charged by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] I am personally cognizant of the fact, having served on the Committee on Appropriations in the House when it was in operation, that there have been hundreds of thousands of dollars saved by the action of that peace commission as it was called. I remember when Mr. William Welsh, of Philadelphia, was president of it, and when Mr. Lang from Maine was an active member, with others whom I could name, that great irregularities were brought to light by their exertions and when investigations were had which resulted in making great improvements in the Indian service, resulting in the appointment as Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the present Superin-tendent of the Census, General Walker, instead of a man who, howtendent of the Census, General Walker, instead of a man who, however honest he may have been, was shown to be unfit for the place. I know, and there are gentlemen before me who know, that that commission examined carefully into many of the accounts of the Department, superintended the purchases of clothing and supplies, aided in every possible form and in all the efforts that were made for the purpose of aiding the Indians in their advancement toward civilization by education; indeed in a variety of other ways they have done very great service. The fact that they were not in any way connected with the Indian Bureau or its business or its rings, instead of being an objection to them, as it seems to be in the mind of the Senator from Kansas, is the very reason why it is important that a class of men not connected with any of these things should have a right to revise, superintend, examine into, and see what contracts are made and how the business of the Indian Bureau is being carried on.

This fact had great weight with me. The present Secretary of the Interior, in whose personal integrity I have the highest confidence, came before the sub-committee last Saturday and said that he desired very much to have the aid and co-operation of this body of men continued, because in the great ramifications of that Department, with sixty or seventy agents, far removed from his personal supervision, the very fact that these men could look over their acts and the purchase of the supplies for their posts would aid him, in addition to the supervisors he had to send out from time to time, in detecting whatever there was of fraud that might be attempted on the Government or the Indian, and in seeing that purchases were honestly and carefully made. He desires all the aid he can have, and he wants the aid of these gentlemen. Here is a bill appropriating $4,735,602.72, and this item of $10,000 merely for traveling and other expenses is an exitem of $10,000 merely for traveling and other expenses is an extremely small sum to be economizing upon, when the Secretary of the Interior, who in my judgment has more than he can attend to—for, be it remembered, he has the Patent Office, he has the Land Office, he has the Pension Office, he has the Census Office, he has the Indian Office, he has all the various bureaus and divisions that exist under the laws regulating his Department to supervise and watch—surely he needs all the help that he can get in order to see that frauds are not committed. We cannot decently hold him responsible if we fail to allow him the assistance he assures us he so much needs.

I agree that if I had the management of this matter I would require the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to report directly to the President and directly to Congress. I would not continue that office as it has been for years in such a complicated condition that when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did one thing and the Secretary desired another, or there was entanglement as to whether things had been carried on properly or not. I would fasten responsibility some-where. As the Senator from Texas very well said awhile ago, all is at loose ends now; each can throw the responsibility on the other, and nobody seems to be responsible because nothing can be found out. We have that condition of things to deal with now; it is a complicated condition. The Secretary of the Interior is, nominally at least, the responsible head, and he comes to us and asks that he shall be allowed this assistance. He says that it is valuable.

I have before me the report made the other day by these gentlemen. I do not know the present peace commissioners. I have not served upon any of the Committees on Indian Affairs lately, nor examined npon any of the Committees on Indian Affairs lately, nor examined these bills carefully; and I desire to say now that I am merely attending to this bill by chance because the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Wallace,] who would have charge of it if present, is obliged to be absent; therefore, I am not perhaps as well advised as I would otherwise be in regard to all the details of it. But in years gone by I have known a great deal about Indian affairs, and I have seen the service rendered by these men.

I see before me the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] who was chairman of the committee on which I served when these men were evanined before us time and again. I know at that time ex-were examined before us time and again. I know at that time extremely valuable service was rendered by them, and this is the report made the other day, sent to me by the Secretary of the Interior evidently with his approval, when I desired to know why he wished them retained. It is their report of March 9, 1880, the close of which alone I will read:

Subsequent reports show from year to year that the careful supervision of purchases has secured for the Indians better supplies, and for the Government greater chases has secured for the Indians better supplies, and for the Government greater economy.

The work of the board through its executive committee in examining accounts has been very onerous, requiring constant attention and the employment of clerical belp. Although their decisions are not final, and may be overruled by the Department of the Interior, it is believed that a large aggregate has been saved to the Government by their vigilant scrutiny and their wholesome influence upon a certain class of dealers and contractors. For example, a remote agency was being supplied by private purchase, or private contract, and the bills coming before the committee were rejected on account of exorbitant charges. Flour was charged at $14 per sack. In the next bills the charge was $11 per sack; and the same agency was afterward supplied by contract, after public letting, at $5.90 and $4.90 per sack.

Besides these efforts to promote economy of administration, the board have exerted a more general and important influence, which is exhibited at length in their published annual reports. They early enlisted the earnest co-operation of religious bodies of all denominations, and have held annual conferences with representatives of those bodies for consultation regarding the interests of education and Christian culture.

This was deemed appropriate, inasmuch as these societies already sustained missionaries among many of the Indian tribes, and had expended large sums of money for the erection of buildings and the churches and the employment of teachers.

Much time has been spent by members of the board in visiting Indian agencies and holding councils with Indians to encourage them in the pursuits of industry and in the education of their children. They have done much to enlighten and correct the public sentiment of the country respecting the rights of Indians, and have especially labored to secure, through just legislation, for all Indians unquestionable titles to their lands and homesteads.

Mr. INGALLS. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. BECK. From the report of the board of Indian commissioners, dated Washington, March 9, 1880.

Mr. INGALLS. That is their own statement of what they have done themselves.

Mr. BECK. It is sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior, as I understand, as an addition to his statement of the reasons why he desired to retain them, and as giving us in as good language I assume as he could give himself his reasons for his desire to retain the aid of these gentlemen. I understand that the Secretary of the Interior adopts and indorses their statements by sending it at my request to the committee for our use. The facts stated are so well expressed that the Secretary could not have expressed them much better, and I could not do so half so well as they. I read, it therefore, as a part of my remarks. They add:

Much time has been spent by members of the board in visiting Indian agencies and holding councils with Indians to encourage them in the pursuits of industry and in the education of their children. They have done much to enlighten and correct the public sentiment of the country respecting the rights of Indians and have especially labored to secure, through just legislation, for all Indians unquestionable titles to their lands and homesteads. To this end bills have been drawn up and laid before Congress, with the convictor. that the bestowment of lands in severalty, as provided in the pending "allotment bill," would give a new impulse to industry, inspire the Indian with a sense of manhood, and aid largely in the adjustment of the Indian question.

I do not know personally that they have done all these things.

I do not know personally that they have done all these things.
Mr. INGALLS. They say they have.
Mr. BECK. They say they have, and I assume they have, if they are as good men as some of the commissioners I knew some years ago; are as good men as some of the commissioners I knew some years ago; I will name Mr. Lang, of Maine, and Mr. Welch, of Pennsylvania. I have no reason to doubt that they are men of the same character. I feel sure that they have repressed much of the thieving that political agents who have been sent to those agencies for political purposes and fraudulent contractors in ring combinations have sought to perpetrate upon the Indians and the Government.

I have always believed and believe now that the whole of the present system of managing the Indians is wrong; that the wild Indians ought to be under the charge of the War Department; that the old Army officers ought to be our agents, and for their services be allowed full pay. They are men who have the respect of the Indians, men who will not steal. I believe that the Commissary-General and the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army should furnish the Indian supplies instead of the contractors who have to be watched by the Secretary, watched by the board of commissioners, and who are generally, with the rings they combine with, too strong for us to secure honesty even by the utmost vigilance of all.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator allow me—
Mr. BECK. In one moment. But we have to deal with things as they are. Having to deal with a bad system, having to deal with bad men who have been trained in the arts of dishonesty, I desire to give the Secretary when he asks it in the interest of honesty, in the interest of economy, in the interest of the Government and the Indians, he held of those men who he says are men of character to supervise. the help of those men who he says are men of character to supervise and investigate those transactions and to keep these frauds down. I will not for the sake of $10,000 expense in a bill that appropriates $4,700,000 refuse him that aid. Now I will answer any question the Senator may wish to ask.

Senator may wish to ask.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish simply to say that a residence of nearly a quarter of a century upon the frontier satisfies me that the Senator from Kentucky is exactly right.

Mr. BECK. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. MAXEY. I concur with him that this bureau ought to be given the Wey Department and Utypet that the question will be kent to the War Department, and I trust that the question will be kept before Congress until that object is accomplished.

Mr. BECK. I have never doubted that it should be there. I desire to say to the Senator from Texas and to the Senate that I was so stubborn about it, aided by the Senator from California (Mr. Sargent) now no longer in the Senate, that we refused in 1870-'71 to make appropriations to carry out those absolutely ridiculous treaties that we are now providing for, and Congress placed $3,000,000, if I recollect the sum, in the hands of the President of the United States, General Grant to carry it on through the War Department, and for General Grant, to carry it on through the War Department; and for $3,000,000 that year he carried it on better than it was carried on with six or seven million dollars afterward. It was only when the Senate agreed to make no more Indian treaties and consented to record upon the statute-books that they would not, that the House agreed to pass any appropriations to carry out those treaties or even to recognize

But I cannot help these things. They are upon us and we must make the most of them. The best Commissioner of Indian Affairs that I ever had any business to transact with, indeed, I think the ablest man, and the most honest man that ever was in that office, the present Superintendent of the Census, General Walker, whose salary I was willing to double in order to keep him, took charge of this bureau under General Grant, and if he could have been kept there in three years he would have brought order out of chaos, but he could not be retained. He made a report, a few lines of which I will read to show that he made the best defense for the present system that could be made by anybody. While I admit that many of these things for which we provide are ridiculous, such as the carpenters, and engineers, and millers, and blacksmiths, and educators at tribes where in many instances you could not have caught a young Indian with a lasso, far less take him to school. General Walker said, (I will read from his report:) from his report:)

This want of completeness and consistency in the treatment of the Indian

This was in 1872---

This want of completeness and consistency in the treatment of the Indian tribes by the Government has been made the occasion of much ridicule and partisan abuse, and it is indeed calculated to provoke criticism and to afford scope for satire; but it is none the less compatible with the highest expediency of the situation. It is, of course, hopelessly illogical that the expenditures of the Government should be proportioned not to the good but to the ill desert of the several tribes; that large bodies of Indlans should be supported in entire Indolence by the bounty of the Government simply because they are andacious and insolent, while well-disposed Indians are only assisted to self-maintenance, since it is known they will not fight. It is hardly less than absurd, on the first view of it, that delegations from tribes which have frequently defied our anthority and fought our troops and have never yielded more than a partial and grudging obedience to the most reasonable requirements of the Government should be entertained at the national capital, feasted and loaded with presents. loaded with presents.

Yet he proceeds to show that is all reasonable, and it almost proved to be so. I remember, and the Senator from Massachusetts remem-bers, when Red Cloud and Spotted Tail were here fresh from the warpath the committee visited them; and they went home after seeing the power of this country, and they have aided us and been our best friends in many regards ever since. Things that appear to be ridiculous sometimes have worked out well, as General Walker shows. He adds:

He adds:

It is not a whit more unreasonable that the Government should do much for hostile Indians and little for friendly Indians, than it is that a private citizen should, to save his life, surrender all the contents of his purse to a highwayman; while on another occasion, to a distressed and deserving applicant for charity, he would measure his contribution by his means and disposition at the time. There is precisely the same justification for the course of the Government in feeding saucy and mischievous Indians to repletion, while permitting more tractable and peaceable tribes to gather a bare subsistence by hard work, or what to an Indian is hard work. It is not, of course, to be understood that the Government of the United States is at the mercy of the Indians; but thousands of its citizens are, even thousands of families.

Then he proceeds to give his reasons and allowed.

Then he proceeds to give his reasons, and closes the paragraph in these words, to which I agree:

It is right that those who criticise the policy of the Government toward the Indians and ridicule it as undignified in its concessions and unstatesmanlike in its temporizing with a recognized evil should fairly face the one alternative which is presented. There is no question of national dignity, be it remembered, involved in the treatment of savages by a civilized power. With wild men as with wild beasts the question whether in a given situation one shall fight, coax, or run is a question merely of what is easiest and safest.

We are dealing with this problem now; we have to go through with; it cannot be placed under the control of the War Department, as

I think it ought to be, or it seems that it cannot.

Mr. TELLER. Why not?

Mr. BECK. Because we cannot get the Senate or the House of Representatives to act upon it, or for some other reason it is not acted upon. Therefore we have to face it, and we have to meet it with all our responsibilities and the Secretary of the Interior has to meet it with all our responsibilities. I repeat, he has to take care of every branch of that great Department—the Land Office, the Patent Office, the Pension Office, the Census Office, the Indian Office, and all—and he comes before the committees of the two Houses—and they agree with him—and says: "I have a body of men who are appointed by the President, reputable men, who ask for nothing but a few thousand dollars to pay their expenses, and $10,000 is the smallest sum. I want their help in the midst of this incongruous system to help me disburse honestly the $4,700,000 you are giving. I desire to guard the Indians against frauds of contractors and agents who are put over them by the President and the Senate, many of whom could not be confirmed except that they are the pets of Senators. These agents are not appointed because of their merits, but appointed because of favoritism, and they expect, many of them, as they have in years gone by, to make money out of $1,500 a year." When the Secretary says I want the help of honest, disinterested men who are recognized as men of integrity all over the country, who are seeking to civilize and Christianize and advance the civilization of these Indians, and to guard against the misconduct of men who may be imposed upon the country and may cheat the Indians placed in their charge, I for one am not going to deprive him of that check and that safeguard when he urges it as earnestly as he does. If the Senate sees fit to vote it down, it can do so.

I have stated perhaps more in detail than I ought (for I have said more than I intended) the reasons that influenced me as a member of the committee, and I believe influenced the committee in complying with the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. INGALLS. Do I understand the Senator to say that Indian agents are appointed by political influence now?

Mr. BECK. Many of them.

Mr. INGALLS. And that it is through favoritism with Senators that they secure their confirmation? If that is the Senator's statement, he is profoundly ignorant of what the Committee on Indian Affairs believe to be the policy pursued by the Administration upon Affairs believe to be the poincy pursued by the Administration upon that subject, for the nominations are sent to us without one particle of political influence. They are made on the recommendations of boards of religious control, who are nominated by various organizations of churches in this country. When we apply for information as to their characteristics and qualifications we are met with the statement that these men are sent here by such and such organs of churches, and that if we do not see fit to confirm them we can do as about it.

Mr. BECK. I merely want to correct myself. I was not endeavoring to make any question about what is done at this time, perhaps it was wrong to allude to appointments at all; yet it may be because they are recommended by other people and because Senators are not authority and the high character of these men, to do a great many consulted about it that the Senator finds so much fault with what is things that it would not dare to do but for that.

going on now. I do not know; I do not care. There never was an Indian agent appointed at my suggestion or on my recommendation, nor any one appointed that I knew, as far as I recollect. All I desire is to give the Secretary the aid he desires, which I think he needs, with the swarm of contractors and agents he has to deal with.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this document, which I have never seen until just now, appears to be a document issued by the board of Indian commissioners to convince the public that they have been of some service.

Mr. INGALLS. "For he himself hath said it."

Mr. TELLER. It ought to be, I suppose, authority, because who should know more about it than this board of commissioners? I think that if the board had not published this document there would have been a general impression all over the country that they had done comparatively nothing; but of course who can gainsay what the commission say? They say that the price of things since they have been in control has been much less, that the purchases made in 1870 were much higher than in 1873. That is a most astonishing statement on a falling market, with railroads going into the country where these supplies were to be delivered. It is a most remarkable thing that an agency that is two or three hundred miles nearer a railroad than it was two or three years before, should have its sup-rairoad than it was two or three years before, should have its supplies at less than it had three years previous; and that is the sum total of the horn that they have blown for themselves.

I do not know very many of these commissioners, and such of them as I do know are reputable gentlemen. I do not mean to say anything against them, but I do mean to say that they stand in the way of the administration of public affairs, because they divide the responsibility with the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and nobody can put his finger on the party who is to blame. An instance occurred not long ago, since this Congress has been in session. They let here at the Indian Bureau a contract for cattle to be delivered to some Indian reservation or some Indians, I do not just remember where. They named the kind of cattle that they wanted. They were to be cattle raised either in the State of Missouri wanted. They were to be cattle raised either in the State of Missouri or the State of Kansas, what the western people speak of as domestic cattle, as distinguished from the Texas cattle. I am not very familiar with those things, but I think I can safely say that there are Senators on this floor who know there is a difference of at least four or five dollars in these cattle, and in many instances even more than that. They were to buy about twelve thousand of these cattle. Every man who bid, bid for what we would call domestic cattle, except one. man who bid, old for what we would call domestic cattle, except one. They either bid eo nomine or they bid by saying "we bid for cattle according to your advertisement," which had been for domestic cattle, speaking shortly. One man, however, made a bid within fifteen cents, if I recollect, of the lowest bid for domestic cattle, a bid for Texas cattle, which had not been called for, and they let the contract to him, to the detriment of the Government and the Indians at a certain loss of from fifty to sixty thousand dollars. a certain loss of from fifty to sixty thousand dollars. When it was criticised by a Senator, not myself, who was familiar with these things, it was immediately said by a member of this commission "That Senator is the worst man in the whole Indian ring." I went to a member of this board, in whom I have the utmost confidence, who I believe to be an honest man and a gentleman. I said, "This thing is a disgrace to your board; it is a disgrace to the administration of Indian affairs that you should have allowed such a thing to pass; if it was done purposely it is evidence of fraud; if it was an accident it is an evidence of your neglect. When I said that be said accident it is an evidence of your neglect. When I said that he said, "It cannot be possible." I gave him the facts. Within an hour he went to another member of the board and said "these are the facts." He asked "How do you know?" Said he, "Senator Teller, of Colorado, has given me these facts." He replied, "Why, do you not know that Senator Teller is the worst Indian ring man there is in all the public service to-day?" That has been about the way that this commission have served the country.

A good many things that are not creditable to the Indian adminis-tration have occurred since this board have been placed there. This board, in which the people had so much confidence, have been placed there to overlook and see that no frauds were committed, and to see that the contracts made with the Indians were carried out. I do not suppose that one member of the board out of five knew what the contracts are. To my certain knowledge there were contracts in existence that were being disregarded by the Administration, and these members of the board never protested that they should be fulfilled. There was money due to the Indians that was not paid to them, and no reason for withholding it, and the board took no steps to see that it was paid. The Ponca Indians, as the Senators tell me who have it was paid. The Ponca Indians, as the Senators tell me who have investigated that question, were taken not simply in violation of their treaty but taken from land to which they had a title in fee and removed down to the Indian Territory, and no protest came from this board of Indian commissioners. The Department committed other atrocities upon the Indians, and yet this board has never lifted its hand nor its voice in defense of the Indians.

It is said that they go over to New York and that they there inspect the goods. How often do they go there? How much time do they spend in inspecting the expenditure of this $5,000,000? It is apparent to everybody that they do not do it. That is a pretense, and it enables the Department, if it sees fit, under color of this high

When this Texas cattle business came to the public attention it was discovered that this board had passed upon it and had approved the contract—a contract that the Department itself had to back out of in a short time, simply because it was afraid of a public investiga-tion of it. Yet the board had passed it and had declared that it was

There is another thing that is not so old that it ought to be forgotten. Charges were make against a public officer connected with the Indian Bureau, the Commissioner—charges of a serious character, implicating his management and his integrity both. A member of the board brought the matter before the board, and it is apparent to everybody that the board intended, if it could be done, to exculpate this man and to save him from disgrace. Some members of the board wrote letters to others and protested that this ought not to be done. They said "It will disgrace the board and it will disgrace the Indian administration." What they were put there for was to see that the administration." What they were put there for was to see that the administration was an honest one, and they were afraid of an investigation that would show that it was not an honest one; and but for an accident, I may say, this man would have still been in public life with the indorsement of that board which they gave him when he came into public life. When he was appointed and came into public life, a man bankrupt financially and morally, these men indorsed him and held him up as an honest man, and congratulated the country that the Government had found so worthy and so lated the country that the Government had found so worthy and so able a man. He went out of office, it is said by some, because he failed to turn over to the Secretary and let him look on the opposite side of some paper that had an indorsement on it. He went out of office because he was morally convicted of an attempt, and a successful attempt, to make one of his subordinates commit perjury before a committee; and then, and then only, were the board willing that he should go out of office. Only when this man said, "I have committed perjury before your committee, but I committed it at the instigation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs," could this board be found ready and willing to say that they had discovered all the crimes that were being committed, and let him slide out. I say that but for the action of one single member of that committee that man would still have been in office, supported and indorsed by this same would still have been in office, supported and indorsed by this same board of Indian commissioners.

I say they are not simply useless but they are positively injurious, if the Commissioner is an honest man; and I have not any doubt about that with reference to the new Commissioner. I do not mean to say by this that the Secretary of the Interior is not an honest man; I have not intended to reflect upon him in that matter, knowing the Secretary cannot give attention to these details; I understand that; but he must rely upon his officer, and if the Commissioner is an honest man he does not want this board. If he is not an honest man, this board from their past history are not suitable persons to watch a dishonest man.

They go over to New York, they say, and inspect the supplies. I say again that they do not do that; the supplies cannot be inspected by this board. They may appoint some member or their secretary to do it; and he may be an honest man, or possibly he may not be. They may send one man to do it and he goes there and does it, and it is no more likely that there will be a fair examination of the supplies than if they sent any clerk from the Department. It is no more likely that there will be an intelligent supervision than if they sent any subordinate or picked a man up from any of the public offices here and sent him to New York.

But I notice that they have not rectified any of the evils. I notice that there is as much cheating going on now as there was in 1869. I notice that there is as much cheating by subordinates as there was then. I notice that the Indians have not made quite as much progress as some of them claim. I notice now that all over the country wherever there are wild Indians there is a state of insubordination wherever there are wild Indians there is a state of insubordination amounting almost to rebellion against authority. In New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Dakota, everywhere, if the Indians are not on the war-path actually they are preparing to go, and are only restrained by fear of the Army. Since we have been here at this session of Congress, I am told from reliable authorities that there have been more than a hundred people in New Mexico murdered by Indians. I can say that since this session convened there have have been dians. I can say that since this session convened there have been twelve or fifteen citizens of Colorado murdered by Indians. Everywhere the same condition of things exist, and this commission has not made matters any better than they were before.

I want to leave matters so that the responsibility shall rest upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. I do not want any divided responsibility. If it were a mere matter of $10,000 or $15,000 in the expenditure of so much money, I would not complain if these men were not in fault. It is not that. would not complain if these men were not in fault. It is not that. They stand in the way; they are a public nuisance, if I may use the term, because they are obstructing the public service, not intentionally; they have all get a theory, every one of them, a theory that is impossible usually of execution; they have all get some suggestion to make, and they have not the authority to carry it out. If the Commissioner thinks best to receive it and accept it, he does so; and if he does not think best, he does not receive it. So they are left with a simple supervision to see that the flour is of good quality and that the sugar is of good quality; and out of the ten thousand articles that go out they see now and then a sample, and that is all. They have not broken up the system of letting the contracts in New York City to furnish beef when they could get it on the Kansas prairies; of purchasing flour in New York that ought to be bought in Kansas or somewhere in the West. The whole thing is managed by a little coterie at New York. They may be honest, they may not. From the condition of things generally it is fair to presume that they are not. As one of them said to me, "If this board ever had any usefulness, we have outlived it long ago." So I say of the board.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I have listened with great attention to the arguments that have been made by the Senators from Kansas and Colorado. It seems to me that the whole question resolved.

Kansas and Colorado. It seems to me that the whole question resolves itself finally into this, whether the supervision of the Indian agents by a commission of reputable gentlemen, admitted to be reputable by the Senators who have attacked them, is likely to result in bene-

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator consent to an interruption there?
Mr. WITHERS. Certainly.
Mr. INGALLS. I should like to ask the Senator under what theory of government a commission of ten intelligent and philanthropic gentlemen is selected without compensation to assist the Secretary of the Interior, and why he alone is thus favored, when he has but sixty or seventy agents employed under him and $4,000,000 to expend, while the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Sec-retary of State are left without this invaluable method of co-opera-

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator has propounded a conundrum which, with all due deference to him, I say has nothing to do with the question. The reasons which may have influenced Congress in passing the law which created this commission I presume were such as commended themselves to the body at the time the law was passed. Committee on Appropriations have not endeavored to take any cognizance of that question at all; but they look at it in this light: The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, who are at the head of this Indian service, testify that the services of the commission as at present constituted are of great value and benefit to them. I do not know whether that is so or not; I have merely their word for it. The objection that these men are not useful men comes from those who attack them. My own conviction is that the testimony of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who are brought more directly in contact with these men and who are more directly and officially interested in the proper performance of their functions, is better authority than the mere statement of the Senators who oppose the proposition.

Whether a cattle contract has been carried out in good faith or not is not the question here. I do not suppose it would be possible for these commissioners under any circumstances to prevent cheating at the Indian agencies by Indian agents. With the most active vigilance they could exercise they could not entirely prevent it; but they can to some extent certainly exercise such supervision over it as will oper-ate as a safeguard to that extent at least. Whether they inspect supplies or not I cannot say. I think they do, and the Secretary of the Interior says they do, and that in consequence of that the supplies are of better quality than before this commission was created.

If there be as much cheating, if there be as much stealing as be-fore these gentlemen were appointed, all I have to say is that the information laid before the committee is entirely at fault, because precisely the contrary statements were made before us, and by gentlemen who I presume are cognizant of the facts of which they speak.

It is not necessary for the Senate to undertake to revive the old question of whether the present Indian policy of the Government is the best that could possibly be devised, whether it is best to transfer them to the War Department or not. These are not vital issues upon this bill or upon this amendment. The question is, shall this bill, which appropriates millions of dollars according to the provisions of existing law, allow this supervision of the amount avanded take. existing law, allow this supervision of the amount expended; shall these commissioners created by law remain?

Mr. INGALLS. This is not in accordance with any existing provision of law. These ten commissioners were appointed for a temporary, specific purpose, and have been continued from time to time by annual appropriations.

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly, but they were created by the provisions of a law which is referred to in the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I have not seen the law.

Mr. WITHERS. It is the law of 1869. I do not wish to detain the Senate if they are ready for a vote, but I want to call attention to the fact that if the views of the Senator from Colorado are to prevail, and if he really desires to hold to strict responsibility the Secretary of the Interior for the management of the Indians, he cannot expect to hold him to that responsibility when that Secretary asks the aid of this commission, and says it is indispensable for the proper management of his Department, and you refuse him the aid he asks. Senator from Kansas is clearly mistaken in his assertion that there was no provision of law for it.

Mr. INGALLS. No. I did not say that. I said they were organized for a temporary and specific purpose in the appropriation bill of 1869 to superintend the appropriation disbursements of that year.

Mr. WITHERS. I understood the Senator from Kansas to challenge the correctness of the statement which I made that this commission was created by existing law, and I merely wish to show that that statement was literally correct; otherwise, whence the necessity of repealing the law to which he refers which created this commission?

But I want to go back to the point I was discussing, and that is the impossibility of holding the Secretary of the Interior responsible for a faithful and honest service in the Indian Department when you a faithful and honest service in the Indian Department when you deny him the services of a class of men that he considers very important, if not indeed indispensable, in securing that sort of administration. This is to be done at an expense of $10,000; these men receive nothing themselves. When these philanthropists, these gentlemen of high character, these gentlemen who are admitted by those who oppose them to be men of most reputable standing in the community, so serve, I think it is certainly as little as the Senate can do to continue them in the service when they must of necessity operate as a check against the fraud and rascality perpetrated by agents upon the Indians against the fraud and rascality perpetrated by agents upon the Indians and the Government alike.

Mr. INGALLS. The pretense that the members of this board serve without compensation is just as empty as any other claim that is made without compensation is just as empty as any other claim that is made in their favor. There were $15,000 appropriated for their expenses last year, and in the settlement of their disbursements it appears that they expended for salaries of secretary, clerk, and messenger, $6,212.30; and to get around the provision of the law declaring that they shall serve without compensation they make members of their own board secretaries, and then pay them a salary. Then, in the next item is "the purchasing committee, including the employment of a special clerk to examine agencies." In order to secure still further compensation they appoint certain of their number a purchasing committee and pay them a salary. So that while they nominally serve from philanthropic motives, they manage by this method of whipping the devil around the stump to secure pretty fair compensation for their services, and the Senator will observe, if he will refer to the statement of their expenses, that the actual traveling and office the statement of their expenses, that the actual traveling and office expenses bear a very small proportion to what is paid for salaries. It is a "penn'orth of bread and an intolerable deal of sack."

Mr. WITHERS. The statement of the Senator has not at all changed the statement which I made. The law provides no salary for these gentlemen. That they do appoint secretaries and clerks, and other agents, I regard as certainly true.

agents, I regard as certainly true.

Mr. INGALLS. Of their own number.

Mr. WITHERS. It is impossible that the duties with which they are charged can be properly discharged without those officers; but in this day of high salaries I should suppose men occupying the position they do in society could scarcely be employed at the salaries which could be supplied out of this appropriation. But it is useless to discuss that, because the fact remains that they are allowed no salary except the necessary expenses for the working of the commission. When a commission is created which has for its object the prosection of the Indians and the Government alike, against rapacious and thieving agents and contractors, when we have the testimony of the head of the Department, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that these duties are discharged with efficiency, that they have effected a great reform in the administra-tion of that Department, and when the Secretary says that he desires tion of that Department, and when the Secretary says that he desires they shall be continued and that an appropriation be made for their continuance, I, for one, am unwilling to say that he shall be held responsible for the efficient discharge of the service and deny him the agency of these men upon whom he relies to protect the Government and the Indians alike against depredation and fraud.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the act which has been referred to was passed on the 10th of April, 1869, doubtless in an appropriation bill, as stated, but it was re-enacted as a part of the Revised Statutes by section 2039:

by section 2039:

There shall be a board of Indian commissioners, composed of not more than ten persons, appointed by the President, solely from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

So that, whether it was a temporary law originally or not, it is now a part of the law of the land. I object to the whole system. The system is wrong of designating, as this law goes on to do, that:

System is wrong of designating, as this law goes on to do, that:

The board of commissioners mentioned in the preceding section shall have power to appoint one of their own number as secretary, who shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation as the board may designate, payable from any moneys appropriated for the expenses of the board.

The board of commissioners mentioned in section 2039 shall supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States; and shall inspect all goods purchased for Indians, in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose duty it shall be to consult the commission in making purchases of such goods.

What is that? There are ten commissioners appointed said to be eminent for philanthropy. What is the course pursued? When I asked the question several years ago of the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] when that question was up, who recommended this man as an Indian agent; where did your information come from; he made the same reply which has been made to-day by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] that these agents are appointed, not upon the recommendation of Senators, not upon the recommendation of anybody so far as is known, except through the churches. The point get the recommendation of that church to be appointed Indian agent. It violates, as I conceive, that principle of the Constitution which makes no distinction whatever among citizens of the country on account of their religion, but intends that the most honest and reputable and faithful man is the man who should be appointed.

The effect of that, therefore, is where two men are presented, one perfectly satisfactory, perfectly honest, and perfectly proper, such as understands all about the business, if he happens to be an outsider the is ruled out, whereas another man who receives the recommendation of a church is appointed without any regard whatever for his qualifications but simply because the church indorses him. Sir, the principle of that is wrong. That the intent of that law was good, I do not question. I do not know anything about it; it was adopted before I came here, and ever since I have been here I have opposed the principle of the thing. I say that the law should never make distinctions among citizens because of their religion; and if a man is an honest, competent, faithful, and capable man, whether he is in a church or out of a church has nothing in the world to do with his appointment as an Indian agent. But this philanthropic board select these men as the churches dictate; and the appropriation has been asked for by the committee to carry out the system. As I said on another branch of this bill, I regard the whole system of Indian control as radically wrong. It ought to be under the War Department, so far as the wild tribes are concerned. But so long as these laws remain unrepealed, I think it is but just to do what the law says should be done, and make the appropriation for the traveling expenses.

I have said what I have because I want to place upon record the fact that I regard the whole system as radically wrong in the control he is ruled out, whereas another man who receives the recommendafact that I regard the whole system as radically wrong in the control of Indians. Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, this seems to be a question of economy more than anything else. It has been argued that this is an expenditure of $10,000 in an unwise and unprofitable way. In an appropriation bill that provides for the expenditure of almost $5,000,000, an item of $10,000 is comparatively a small part of the bill, and the tenacity with which the opponents of this measure cling to the idea that it is a waste of money brings up the old adage, which everybody has heard, of saving at the spigot and wasting at the bung-hole. Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senator from Colorado—if he will allow me to relieve him from the necessity of interrupting me—does not see anything good in existing things touching the Indian administration, whatever they may be called.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to interrupt the Senator long enough to say that he does injustice when he says I put it on the score of economy. I distinctly stated that I made no question on the matter of money, but that it was an obstruction of a proper service and a right service.

Mr. DAWES. The injustice I did the Senator was just this: the Senator himself had a grievance against this board of his own. It is an obstruction, it is a nuisance so far as the Senator's view of the proper administration of the Indian Department is concerned.

Mr. President, it had its origin, as has been stated by the Senator from Kentucky, in a temporary exigency when the Indian service of this country was in a demoralized condition, and when the differences between the two branches of Congress, in reference to the appropriation of money for carrying it on were so wide as to threaten an utter stoppage of all the appropriations for that service. It was a method devised at the commencement of the administration of General Grant, and it was the beginning of a change in the administration of the Indian Bureau; and whether it has been in all respects just what it ought to be or not, it is not necessary to consider in determining the question whether we shall abolish it or not. But compare the administration of the Indian Bureau since that day as a whole, and the condition of the Indians as a whole, the character of the men who have had to do with the Indians, and there are few who would join with the Senator from Colorado in saying that this Indian commission has been a nuisance.

The Indian commission have saved the country, as the statistics show, many hundreds of thousands of dollars. They have relieved the administration of Indian affairs of very much of the reproach which lay at its door before they came into existence. They have gone on helping the Indian Bureau to a better tone and a better administration of the affairs of the Indian Department. It is at best one of the most difficult of all the Departments of the Government, as those Senators who have had to do with making provision for them will not fail to testify. It must be governed by different rules from those that apply to any other.

The Senator from Kansas wants to know why a board of commissioners should not take hold and aid other bureaus. There is no other bureau that requires the personal cognizance of individual men at once honest and devoted to their work in all parts of the country at a distance from the eye of accountability here at Washington and which I make, and which has caused me always to oppose this entire system, is that there is an indirect attempt to connect church and state together and place the Indian Bureau under the auspices, control, and direction of certain churches, the practical effect of which, in my judgment, is a premium upon hypocrisy and a discount upon honesty, because that class of men who are seeking to get rich in four years on $1,500 a year by being appointed Indian agents will practice any sort of hypocrisy on earth to get into a church and then of this board, but rather in pursuance of the plan indicated and developed by the work of this board. They have not done all that was hoped for by those who created the board. They have done a great deal, and they have kept a great deal of harm and scandal out of the Indian Bureau. Whatever good has come from recent investigations, which the Senator from Colorado has criticised, originated in the board itself; those investigations were prosecuted by members of the board and brought to a head by the indomitable perseverence of the board and brought to a head by the indomitable perseverence of members of the board.

Mr. TELLER. "Member" you should say.

Mr. DAWES. Members of the board, resulting as they have; and whatever friction has within the past year sprung up between the board and the administration of Indian affairs has largely been removed by the perseverance and fidelity of the board itself. Now, here is a Secretary of the Interior charged with a multiplicity of complex and diversified duties, among which is this, enough for one man to devote his whole attention to. He is to be held responsible, and the Senator from Colorado says he desires to hold him personally responsible, without this aid for the administration of the Indian Department. But he has the whole Land Office likewise; he has the But he has the whole Land Office likewise; he has the whole of the Patent Office besides; he has a great variety of duties important and spread all over the country. He is Secretary of the whole Interior of this country, and he cannot be held responsible without being furnished with the necessary aids, and he appeals to Congress not to deprive him of this aid. Now, until there shall be some reorganization of the Indian Bureau and it be put upon a new basis, put upon a different basis, I, for one, am not disposed to strip it of all aid to carry out the law substantially in the method it has been doing for the last ten years. There has been less scandal among Indian agents the last ten years than in any previous ten years I have known of. There have been difficulties in the selection of Indian agents by the churches to which allusion has been made, but that has nothing to do with this board. This board does not recommend the Indian agents. They are appointed on the voluntary recommenda-tion of associations of churches of different denominations, independent of and disconnected with this board. This board is not to be held ent of and disconnected with this board. This board is not to be held responsible for any mistakes that may have been made in that regard. This board has been faithful in the main; has contributed very largely to the economy and good character of the Indian service. That greater economy should exist there, that there should be less trouble and less friction, every one knows who has had anything to do with providing appropriations for the supply of the wants of the Indians; but as compared with years previous to the existence of this board, those who are familiar with Indian matters I think cannot fail to see that this board has contributed from year to year vastly more than the pitiful little sum of $10,000 which it has cost.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the five-minute rule be applied to the debate on this bill.

debate on this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Iowa if the Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia.

Senate is not ready for a vote?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senate is I shall withdraw the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any rule authorizing that?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not press the matter now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Massachusetts seems to have strangely misunderstood me in reference to what I said about this commission. I did not intimate that I had any personal complaint against the commission. I did state that one member had charged another Senator and myself with being members of the ring. So little impression did that make on my mind that to-day I could not tell his name; I could not pick him out from this commission. I knew where he got his authority. I knew that when I criticised the Commissioner, the Commissioner said, "Pay no attention to these criticisms, because they come from men who are in the ring." I knew that was the whole trouble. I did not mean to intimate that the man was not honest, but I meant to say that the commissioners did not have the capacity to look into and to watch over and take care of these Indians, and nobody will who is not paid. It will take a man's whole time to watch the rascals who are connected with the Indian Bureau, and it will take several men to do it, from my observation.

We do not have in our part of the country any rings. There is not a man in Colorado who has a Government contract for Indian supplies; there are not any in the far West to speak of; the contracts are made with men in the city of New York and in the State of New Jersey principally. There is where they get up the little rings. I do not know but there may be some in Kansas, possibly some in Minnesota, and some in other Western States; but positively I do not believe there has been a man in Colorado for two or three years who has had a contract, or even bid for one. Men bid for these contracts in New York in such a way that a western man has no opportunity of bidding, no opportunity of putting in a proposition to furnish supplies. I have not any complaint on this score and I have not any complaint of a lack of economy in these commissioners; but I do say, the public say, now here are ten men who ought to know, and nobody pays any attention; we do not overlook the thing as we ought, because the board of Indian commissioners are supposed to do it. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not overlook it, and when you complain the Commissioner says, "I am not to blame;" the Secretary of the Interior says, "I am not to blame;" the board of commissioners say, "We are not to blame;" and so nobody is to blame. Some man ought to be at the head of it; he ought to be responsible; and if he has not subordinates enough, he ought to have them. You cannot have a divided authority in a matter of this kind.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

eration of executive business.

Mr. BECK. Let us have a vote on this one amendment.
Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate are ready to vote on this proposition J. withdraw the motion. Having reached the question of the administration of Indian affairs, so fruitful of rhetoric, I doubt whether we shall, after getting into this vortex, get out of it for the next twentyfour hours.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The true way is to stick.
Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw my motion at the instance of the com-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not occupy two minutes of the time of the Senate, for I think we ought to finish this bill to-night. The duties of this board of Indian commissioners are-

To supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States, and shall inspect all goods purchased for Indians, in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

And then comes perhaps the most important of all:

Any member of the board of Indian commissioners is empowered to investigate all contracts, expenditures, and accounts in connection with the Indian service, and shall have access to all books and papers relating thereto in any Government office.

My observation of their work in all this business in the last ten years has led me to know that the service they have performed has been of very large benefit to the country, to the Indian, to the Treasury, and to fair dealing; and why any Senators should object, as they do not put it on the ground of this little expense, to having the President of the United States appoint this number of people to watch and inquire and overhaul the accounts and make public anything that is wrong, I confess I do not understand. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to supplement by a single word what the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont have both of them said better than I could say it, and my brief remark shall be in relation to the general good that has resulted from the appointment of this commission. I shall do it in figures which have been furnished me from the Department I believe they are reliable.

They show that at the commencement of this commission there were

They show that at the commencement of this commission there were 8,646 dwelling-houses among the Indian tribes; to-day there are 23,-060. Of pupils in schools there were then 5,810; of pupils in school to-day, 12,222; acres of land in cultivation, 79,076 in 1868; 373,018 in 1878; corn raised, in bushels, in 1868, 520,079; in 1878, 3,633,943; sheep in 1868, 7,953; in 1878, 594,574; showing the material progress and prosperity of the Indian tribes and their advancement in the arts of civilization. Nothing can be clearer.

It is my good fortune to know some of the gentlemen who compose this commission, and if any word which I could add here as to their high character would be worth anything. I would be glad to add it.

high character would be worth anything, I would be glad to add it. I will say that I know them to be men of the very highest character.

I can see great good that has resulted from their administration. I hope it will be continued.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have not very much information about the benefits that have been conferred on the Government of the United States through the agency of this commission. Experienced Senators here say that very large benefits have been realized. The Senator from Vermont says there is no objection to their continuance. I think there are very serious objections to their being continuade. I think there are very serious objections to the continued in office.

In the first place there is no more reason for appointing a board of commissioners to investigate the expenditures of the officers of this Government in the Department of the Interior than there is in any other Department of the United States Government. The responsibility of this office ought to rest upon its head, and ought to rest also upon Congress and upon the President to furnish to him proper assistants in the conduct of his public duties. Now, the board of commissioners have certain duties specified in the statute, very few in number and very unimportant, so far as I can understand the statute, in their influence upon a faithful and proper administration of Indian affairs. Section 2041 provides that-

The board of commissioners mentioned in section 2039 shall supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States.

That is one duty which they cannot perform. They do not and cannot in the nature of things supervise the expenditure of the moneys appropriated for Indians within the limits of the United States. If they have the real supervision of these expenditures, then they are put in the place and stead of the Indian Department as to that one of their official duties, and the statute in itself is to be construed in reference to the entire duties of the Interior Department in connection with Indian affairs.

The Senator from Kansas explained this matter. He stated to the Senate, and in a way I suppose that is entirely authentic, that this board of Indian commissioners had its origin in an experiment. When two millions of money or thereabout were appropriated by the Congress of the United States to be expended under the supervision of the of the United States to be expended under the supervision of the President, this board of ten gentlemen was to be selected by him for the purpose of assisting him in the performance of that duty. It was the inauguration of a new policy, which policy I understand to have been abandoned, because since that time, instead of appropriating money in that way to be used by the President of the United States, we make specific appropriations to carry into effect the treaty obligations that we are under to these Indians.

These commissioners are to-

Inspect all goods purchased for Indians, in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose duty it shall be to consult the commission in making purchases of such goods.

It is an obvious fact that there is no such personal inspection by these gentlemen of the goods that are purchased. If there is a personal inspection, then it is equally true that they have not discharged their duty in some parts of the Indian country, because some commit-tees with which I have had connection have had occasion to know that the goods that have been furnished by the United States Government are many of them exceedingly inferior, almost entirely unfit for use, and carried out and distributed among the Indians in such paruse, and carried out and distributed among the Indians in such parcels that sometimes an Indian will get only a yard of calico for the clothing of his family. Testimony of that kind has been in the hands of the committees of the Senate. If these commissioners have been inspecting the distribution of goods among the Indians, they surely have rendered very little service in some parts of this country.

The next and most important part of this statute, as the Senator from Vermont thinks, is this:

Any member of the board of Indian commissioners is empowered to investigate all contracts expenditures, and accounts in connection with the Indian service, and shall have access to all books and papers relating thereto in any Government office.

If the Interior Department really needs the assistance of ten men for the purpose of supervising the thieves that may be in it, and cannot protect itself against their robberies, it is a very lamentable condition of public affairs, and I cannot see why it is not equally necessary to provide such a committee for the superintendence and investigation of all contracts and all expenditures by every department of the United States Government.

That is a false principle in government. It throws the responsi-bility of investigation and expenditure upon ten men who are selected, as we are informed, not with reference to their peculiar knowledge of Indian affairs or Indian people, but who are selected from the eastern country, from the large cities, and from those places where the merchants have a very much greater interest in Indian affairs than any one else perhaps.

It seems to me that if this commission is to be continued there should be some better distribution of the material of that body of investigators and inspectors. Some of the men who live beyond the Westigators and inspectors. Some of the men who live beyond the Mississippi River, who live out in contact with the Indians, for there are honest men there just as well as there are in other parts of the United States, and intelligent men, too—some of these men enght to be selected with a view of having the opportunity to make these investigations and these inspections on the ground.

But, Mr. President, we are not doing the Interior Department very full gradit. I think for its own obliders and for its contact and its co full credit, I think, for its own ability, and for its own integrity, and for its own powers of examination into the procedure of its own agents when we undertake to put ten overseers over that Department with a view to look into the accounts, books, and papers of that Department and see what the expenditures are, and that they are honestly made. It may be true that this is necessary. I hope the time will come in this Government when it will be no longer true. I hope that some party will get into power in the United States that can trust the Secretary of the Interior without putting ten overseers there to supervise his officers. It may be, the Senator from Vermont says that it is, necessary to have these men there to make this inspection, but if it be so, it is simply because of the corruption of the power that has exercised its authority over that Department. That is the only excuse that can be made for it. But it surely does not take ten men to keep one honest man in power, when his oath to discharge his duty under the Constitution should bind him sufficiently.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the reason why I thought they were very useful on the point I have named, was the circumstance that a few years ago having something to do about the matter in some way—I have forgotten how—I had occasion to make a special inquiry and examination into the way they conducted their business, and I found that their method and mission, which had resulted in detecting certain false vouchers in accounts, was to take the vouchers the trial that that the method and mission, which had resulted in detecting certain false vouchers in accounts, was to take the vouchers when they came in from the contractors for payment, and inspect them and compare them with the books of the Indian agencies, so as to know by a system of checks and counter-checks whether the vouchers know by a system of checks and counter-checks whether the vouchers were absolutely true and correct. In a good many instances it was found that they were not; and they were enabled not only, as I said before, to do good to the Indian but to do good to the Treasury and the good order of the Government of the United States.

It does not follow from this power that they are superior to the Secretary of the Interior. They only have special duties in aid of his general duties of supervision; that is all; and it has happened among a lot of clerks in a Department in old times—of course it is not so now—but it has happened just as they say it has been sometimes in the Post-Office, that by having constant communication with a particular clerk whose business it is to overlook a particular set of accounts, contractors or others, get him into a state of bias, get him blinded and hoodwinked, so that he does not see for one reason or another what an independent man, intelligent like these men, comes in and is able to see. It operates extremely well according to my observation, as I say, and I have had special occasion to look at it.

I ought to have said before that I should be in favor of the striking out part of this amendment on the ground that the clause in the bill undertakes to make a radical change in existing laws in a bill appropriating money, which I am always opposed to. Now then, I move to amend the amendment, in order to make it correct—it is a mere clerical mistake, no doubt—by striking out in line 1177 the word "the," and in lines 1178 and 1179 all the words down to and includ-"the," and in lines 1178 and 1179 all the words to strike out these words: ing "1869;" in other words, to strike out these words:

The fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869.

And to insert-

Section 2039 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The reference in the amendment goes back to the old act, while it should apply to the appointing section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BECK. Would it not be well to say "sections 2039 to 2042?"

Mr. EDMUNDS. But Senators will see the inserting amendment is—

Expenses of Indian commissioners:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

The only provision now in force that provides for the appointment is section 2039 alone. This has nothing to do with their duties; it merely describes the commission.

Mr. BECK. That is right. The committee agree to that amend-

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 42, line 1010, I desire to amend by striking out the word "including" where it occurs and at the end of the line inserting "and of Indian chiefs;" and then by striking out "six" and inserting "thirteen." I do this for the purpose of increasing the appropriation $7,000. I find in the debate in the House on this question that the Delegate from Montana [Mr. Maginnis] offered an amendment in substance like this and stated that there was a dispute between the Government of the United States and these Indians with reference to the time when the treaty expired, and he stated in the debate, as he has also stated to me, that the Indians understand that the treaty has still a year or two to run.

I desire to make this amendment in order that the committee may more fully examine into it, and if it is not improper that they shall adopt it. From such an examination of the treaty as I have been able to make I am satisfied this amendment ought to be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to offer an amendment, on page 36, line 874, after the word "River," to insert "Oakdale," simply to name another point from which the goods may be transported to the Sioux Indians. It is the terminus of a railroad, which is probably the nearest point to their reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us see how it will read then.

The Secretary. The clause if amended as proposed will read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, including the cost of transporting supplies for the Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Sioux Indians from the Missouri River, Oakdale, and Sidney, Nebraska, or Cheyenne, Wyoming, $1,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It simply adds another point from which they can ship the goods. It is on the direct line. It is the terminus now of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, or rather of a branch of that line. The object is to get the goods as near the Indians as possible, so as to make the transportation as cheap as possible.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, on page 54, section 5, by inserting, after line 16:

And the President may make a permanent agreement with the Miamies, of Kansas, whereby the appropriation for blacksmith and assistant and for miller for said tribe, provided for by treaties of June 5, 1854, and October 23, 1834, may be paid to members of said tribe direct in such manner as the said agreement may provide.

Mr. BECK. After a casual examination of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas it has occurred to me that it is, perhaps, a good amendment, at least to be conferred about. I do not see how it can do any harm; but I am not sure about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is legislation.

Mr. BECK. I think it is legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, and that I am opposed to.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment to which it is an amendment is in the same direction. It only enlarges the power of the President with reference to that which precedes it in the amendment of the committee, and so I think it is not out of order. But I desire to make a statement of fact which I think will dispose of any objection which statement of fact which I think will dispose of any objection which may be made by the Senator from Kentucky or by any other Senator. On page 20 of this bill there are three items of appropriation for the Miamies, of Kansas. Two of these are appropriations for blacksmith and assistant and one for a miller. The first appropriation is $411.43 and the second appropriation is $262.62. I have been informed by members of that tribe, who until within a short time have been in the city, that for twenty years that tribe have not had either a blacksmith or an assistant or a miller provided for under this treaty. In one way or another, by indirection, the money has been paid to the smith or an assistant or a miller provided for under this treaty. In one way or another, by indirection, the money has been paid to the tribe. This bill now provides that the President may pay to the tribe on their petition this money, but only the money provided for by this appropriation. There are about seventy members of the tribe, some thirteen or fourteen families. They are intelligent people, calculated to take care of themselves, and they desire to have this money paid to them. They were here for the purpose of trying to adjust their relations with the Government in such a way that they should not have to come here every year or be postponed in regard to the payments that were coming to them, and that they should not get them in small sums as they have heretofore done, which has a tendency to continue their dependence on the Government in place of giving them the opportunity they so much desire and have so long asked for, of the opportunity they so much desire and have so long asked for, of becoming self-supporting, of taking their money and using it for the purpose of buying stock and other purposes of this kind.

We give the President power by the amendment of the committee to do this for this year. I know that the employé of the Interior Department who sits by the side of the Senator from Kentucky, and on whom he relies justly for much information in regard to the details of this bill and the dealings of the Government with the Indians, will bear me out when I say that the process which has to be gone through to enable the Indians to obtain this money, this very small amount, is not only expensive but it is offensive-offensive to the Indians themselves, who are as well able to take care of this money as any other Indians that get their money direct from the Government. To avoid this machinery and the loss and trouble of the Indians, and to avoid the practical throwing away of the money by the process which is now obliged to be gone through with in order to enable them to get it, I desire that the President may make once for all an arrangement with these Indians, which he might as well be all an arrangement with these Indians, which he might as well be authorized to make for all time as for one year, in order that this thing may be entirely settled—that the Indians and the President may come to an agreement whereby the President may in his discretion pay this money to them every year hereafter as long as the Government is under obligation to pay it to them at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, but I do it sorrowfully, because I do not know but that the proposition is right; still I intend to stick to this business as far as I am concerned.

right; still I intend to stick to this business as far as I am concerned of keeping the appropriation bills free. The Indian Committee can report a bill to-morrow if they want to, to accomplish this very pur-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. PLUMB. I do not propose to discuss the point of order; but certainly it is not out of order unless the amendment of the committee also is out of order. It is only in the same line as the amendment already reported by the committee. It is something which they regarded as essential to make effective the bill which had been referred to them, and this certainly is no more objectionable than their own provision. This is a comparatively trivial matter and will never be made, probably, the subject of a substantive bill at all. It will be passed in some such way as this, or not at all. This only illustrates how completely routine governs in these matters. For twenty years these people have not had a miller or a blacksmith as provided for in the treaties, and yet year by year the appropriations are made in that way; and in order to enable the Indians to get the money at all they have had to get it by indirection. They have had no miller and no blacksmith in point of fact.

Mr. TELLER. I want to offer an amendment on page 47.

Mr. PLUMB. Has the Chair ruled on my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not understand the Chair as deciding it or I would not have addressed the Chair after the decision.

Mr. TELLER. I want to offer an amendment that I know will be objectionable if the Senator who has the bill in charge objects, but I trust he will not. I suppose there will be a committee of conference over this bill, and if he finds this is not proper the committee can leave it out. I ask to insert after the word "dollars," in line 1152:

For the purchase of stock for the Uintah band of Ute Indians now on the Uintah reservation, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to expend for that purpose.

And before the Senator from Kentucky objects I want to say why I offer this. The Ute Indians we have been in the habit of appropriating for. Last year and the year before we gave that band of Indians $12,000; we gave years before much more than that; in 1875 we gave them $20,000. Last year they had a bad season, their crops partially or quite largely failed. Owing to the troubles in Colorado there was some anxiety about the conduct of this band of Indians; but they remained peaceable and quiet, behaving themselves and but they remained peaceable and quiet, behaving themselves and staying on the reservation; and it seems to me unwise now to cut down the amount that we give them. The agent asks the Govern-ment to give them some stock-cattle. That is the best way to expend the money, and I believe if the committee had had their attention called to it they would have adopted the suggestion.

Mr. BECK. I shall be obliged to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I understand it is amenable to a point of order if the Senator makes it.

Mr. BECK. My instructions are from the committee to make the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. TELLER. I do not offer it if the point of order is to be pressed.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to inquire if the amendment of the committee in line 4, section 3, on page 52, limiting the advertising for supplies to three weeks has been adopted?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by striking out "three" and inserting "four," and I do that for this reason: a large portion of these supplies are bound to come from remote points in the country, points that cannot be reached by mail in less than one week from this place, and frequently there may be a detention which is very likely to happen that will cause at least two weeks to be required.

It will not be possible for the people in Montana and Idaho, and even in some portions of Colorado and Kansas, to send their bids in even in some portions of Colorado and Kansas, to send their bids in this limited time to any point at which bids are to be opened and the contracts awarded, after having to obtain first from the Department the blank forms for bidding and the specifiations necessary in order to enable persons to bid intelligently. They cannot be sure of doing this and making even a quick connection without any room for get-ting information or anything of that sort. They cannot get around invide of three weeks in many places. The time engit to be at least inside of three weeks in many places. The time ought to be at least four weeks. I think perhaps six weeks as provided in the bill from the House was too long, or longer than was necessary at all events, but four weeks is the very least time that ought to be allowed. My motion is to strike out "three" and insert "four."

Mr. BECK. When this part of the bill was reached before, I sent to the Reporter for insertion in the RECORD a letter from the Department which was not read. I have now sent for it, and it is here. The Secretary of the Interior says that if he is compelled to advertise for four weeks or more he will not be able to get his arrangements made to have his supplies before the fiscal year expires, and that whenever he does have any advertisements to make he telegraphs them at once to all parts of the country, and he believes now at this season of the year it is indispensable to give him the discretion and not compel him to put advertisements in for longer than three weeks. He expresses to us in the letter his very careful determination to see to it that there is absolute justice done and that the telegraph shall carry information to all these people at once, and so they will have ample time to make their bids. The letter is very full, and it would take some time to read it.

Mr. PLUMB. The specifications that accompany these bids cover two or three printed foolscap pages frequently. They are for every article that enters into the subsistence or use of the Indians at the different agencies. It would cost thousands of dollars, perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars, to telegraph them to all persons who might apply for them. They ought to be printed. The bids are required to be in precise conformity to the specifications furnished by the Department. The Department prints blanks containing the speci-fications and forms for bidding and instructions for bidders, stating upon what banks the certified checks have to be drawn, and so on. All these things require careful consideration; and it takes a person with a considerable degree of intelligence and knowledge of the thing to make an intelligent bid even then after he has the facts before him, and sometimes bids are thrown out for informality even then. To attempt to supply them by telegraph would be wholly impossible. Many persons live beyond the reach of the telegraph, and the very moment it is known that these advertisements are out people send to the Department for the specifications and blanks in order that they

The argument is, of-course, that there is not time enough; but this goes now to the question as to whether there shall be actual competition by persons who have these articles to furnish, or whether they shall be bid off at auction, so to speak, in New York City, without an opportunity for the people who are to furnish the supplies practically to bid for them.

Mr. ALLISON. While much of what the Senator from Kansas says is true, it is also true that the supplies which are to be delivered to all the agencies in the northwestern portion of our country must reach the Missouri River as early as the 1st of August, or else they must be subjected to heavy cost of transportation in other directions, because it will not be convenient for boats to carry the supplies up the Missouri River much after the 1st of August. It is for that reason that uniformly in the Army bill we have provided that that portion of the appropriation required to furnish supplies for the Army in that line shall be available immediately.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that provision made as to this bill?

Mr. PLUMB. That provision is made as to this, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but if the advertisement is required to be six weeks or four weeks it may reach beyond the time when these supplies can be sent up there. Of course I shall be glad and the committee would be glad, as I have no doubt the Secretary would be, to allow four weeks, if that can be safely done, considering the advanced time of the season.

Mr. BECK. I believe I had better read this letter. I can read it in three minutes. It tells all about the case.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR. is true, it is also true that the supplies which are to be delivered to DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 26, 1880.

Department of the Interest.

Sir: In compliance with your request for information in regard to the system of this Department in the matter of the annual purchase of supplies, goods, &c., for the use of the Indian service, I have the honor to state that, under the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, it has been customary to publish advertisements, inviting proposals to furnish the various articles required, for a period of about four weeks, in some instances for a longer time, and in a few cases for a shorter period; in the latter, however, only when Congress has not taken early action upon the Indian appropriation bill, and, consequently, when the lateness of the season demanded early and prompt shipment of goods in order that the same might arrive at their destination before supplies then on hand had become exhausted, or navigation and wagon transportation to remote and mountainous regions impracticable.

These advertisements are published in the most prominent daily and weekly journals of the country, covering Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Colorado, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Kanasas, Missouri, Indian Territory, Dakota, Iowa, and Minnesota, and the principal cities east of the great rivers. The advertisements for publication in journals at remote points, as Arizona, Montana, Texas, and New Mexico, have been telegraphed, so that in effect those journals disseminated the news at as early a date as those in Saint Louis, Kanasa City, Chicago, Sioux City, and Saint Paul. Besides, blanks for use of bidders have been simultaneously mailed to the publishers of such journals for distribution, to which fact attention is always directed in the advertisement.

At the last annual letting of contracts all of the bidders for flour, twenty-two in number, were western men; of those for beef, thirty-three, only one was an eastern dealer; for lucon, twelve bidders, all western. These bidders represent all sections of the West, thus showing that the system of advertising adopted by the Department reaches the most remo

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair this amendment is not in order. The Senator from Kansas can accomplish his object by moving to amend the amendment of the committee when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate. He can then move to strike out "three" and insert "four."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, April 28, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MRS. MARY ALLISON.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 1143, granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Allison, the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812, and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before moving the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up and considering the internal-revenue bill, I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia. Yesterday afternoon, it appears, there was some misunderstanding in regard to the report from the Committee on the Judiciary in reference to trade-marks. for that purpose, providing there is no discussion on it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCod,] who introduced the amendment to the Constitution in reference to trade-marks, desired a vote on his proposition, and I said to him that such a vote would come in regular order and I was willing to have it. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, before entering upon the consideration of the bill now presented to the Committee of the Whole I desire to say that there is an unfinished revenue bill that would stand in a higher order before the committee than this with reference to consideration; but as I have no desire to antagonize the gentleman from Kentucky who introduces this bill, I simply give notice that after the disposition of the same I shall call up for further consideration in Committee of the Whole the unfinished business, which is the bill known as the refunding bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And I desire to give notice that when the gentleman from New York shall call up the refunding bill I shall raise the question of consideration in Committee of the Whole as between that bill and the bill for the removal of causes from the State courts

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the bill now under consideration.

read at length, I shall move to dispense with the formal reading and allow the general debate upon its provisions to go on, and afterward take it up for consideration by sections. I presume that the majority of gentlemen present on the floor are already familiar with the general provisions of the bill as reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to debate the bill at this stage of the proceedings, but I shall hold myself in readiness during its consideration in Committee of the Whole to answer any questions in reference to its provisions while it is being read by sections. If, however, any other gentleman desires to be heard on the bill I am ready to yield to him for such length of time as he may

Mr. DUNNELL. I would be glad if the gentleman from Kentucky would state to the House the preparation of this bill, the views of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and other facts in connection with its preparation with which he is familiar.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the committee I will state briefly that this bill was prepared very carefully after a full consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in relation to its provisions as far as he saw fit to express himself in relation to them. There are some provisions in the bill, which affect to some extent the amount of money to be realized from internal-revenue taxes, about which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has expressed no opinion, preferring, as he said, to leave those matters solely to the determination of Congress. And I may say that with the exception of two or three provisions which affect the amount to be collected from internal-revenue taxes, there was no difference of opin-ion, I believe, either in the sub-committee which prepared the bill or in the main Committee on Ways and Means. There are, however, two or perhaps three sections of the bill which do affect the revenue and about which there was some difference of opinion in the committee. One of them is a provision which if adopted by the House would exempt the distillers and owners of distilled spirits from the payment of interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the tax for the spirits which remain in the warehouse or in the public custody for a period exceeding one year.

The whole amount collected from this source during the last fiscal year was less than $75,000. The entire amount of revenue from distillers, wholesale dealers, rectifiers, &c., was over $52,000,000 during the same period, so that the committee will perceive at once that the amount of interest on the tax is comparatively a very insignificant matter. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates that the amount to be collected from this interest during the current fiscal year will be about $150,000, and that that will probably be about the average amount in the future.

Those who are engaged in this business do not therefore complain of the amount of the interest on the tax, because, as I have already stated, it is a very insignificant sum, but it is the trouble in reference to the matter arising from the difficulty in adjusting the interest account every time a package or a few packages of spirits shall be withdrawn from the warehouses. It is of that they complain rather than

of the amount of the tax.

There is another section of the bill which proposes to exempt dis tillers, rectifiers, and wholesale dealers from the payment of what is commonly known as ten-cent stamps. These are stamps which are placed upon packages containing the distilled spirits when they are removed from the distillery to the warehouse and when the packages are refilled by the rectifier after rectification, and when the packages are changed by the wholesale dealers. The original bill proposed to are changed by the wholesale dealers. The original bill proposed to exempt also from the payment of these stamps the exporters of distilled spirits and of alcohol. But the committee, having considered that matter, came to the conclusion that inasmuch as the exporters pay no tax to the Government and the Government is at considerable expense for storekeepers, gaugers, &c., it was not unjust to allow the law to remain as it now is with respect to them; and consequently the committee recommend an amendment of the original bill which will leave the law in force so far as those parties are concerned in that respect.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue states that the whole expense of printing all the stamps used in the operations of the Internal Revenue Bureau is about $350,000, and that he thinks $75,000 is about the amount which it costs the Government annually to print these particular stamps, including those used by exporters. The rev-these particular stamps, including those used by exporters. The revenue derived from these stamps during the last fiscal year was about $290,000 or $292,000, according to my present recollection; so that this section of the bill will to that extent affect the revenue.

The next section, and the only remaining section which affects the revenue, is the seventeenth, which proposes to allow the owners and distillers of spirits deposited in the warehouses certain maximum quantities on account of evaporation and leakage. The Commissioner estimates that this will affect the revenue to the amount of about $1,750,000. The whole purpose of that section is to place the distillers and owners of distilled spirits in precisely the same situation with reference to the payment of the tax which the manufacturers of fermented liquors, ale, beer, and porter, the manufacturers of tobacco. reference to the payment of the tax which the manufacturers of fermented liquors, ale, beer, and porter, the manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, the manufacturers of proprietary medicines, perfumery, cosmetics, playing-cards, and all other articles subject to internal-revenue tax, now occupy under the law; that is, that they shall pay the tax to the Government only on the quantity which is actually sold and goes into consumption or is withdrawn for sale or consumption in this country.

Without extering now into any dispression as to the reservice of Without entering now into any discussion as to the propriety of that section, I make this general statement as to its purposes and effects. When we come to consider the bill under the five-minute rule for discussion and amendment, I will be ready to explain to any gentleman who desires it the reasons upon which the proposed legis-lation is recommended.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky one question. Does this bill apply to the manufacture of brandy from grapes and fruit?

Mr. CARLISLE. It does not affect the existing law upon that subject in any way whatever.

Mr. PAGE. Why not include that in the general bill? Could not that be done?

Mr. CARLISLE. It could be done. But the manufacture of brandy from grapes and fruit is regulated by a different code of laws to a great extent from that which relates to the manufacture of distilled great extent from that which relates to the manufacture of distilled spirits, and it was not touched in this bill. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. CONGER. As has been stated this bill has had very careful consideration in the Committee on Ways and Means, and several changes were made upon consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The report upon this subject made to the House, Report No. 1119, contains a statement of the inquiries of the members of the committee to the Commissioner, and his replies to those inquiries. If all the members of the Committee of the Whole had read the report or had their attention called to the opinions of the Commissioner as expressed at that time, I might not have desired to have made any remarks on this bill at all. There are several provisions of the bill as now modified with which I am in accord, and for which I would cheerfully vote. There are other provisions of the bill which, it seems to me, are consistent with our general system of internal revenue and of taxation upon the manufacture of distilled spirits. I desire, in a few brief remarks, to call the attention of the committee now, rather than at the time when I propose to offer some amendments to this bill, to the features of it to which I ob-

The first is, abolishing the charge by the Government of ten cents for the rectifiers', wholesale dealers', and warehouse stamps. Those stamps are furnished by the Government. There is no payment for stamps are furnished by the Government. There is no payment for the stamps in proportion to the amount of spirits represented by them. There is a tax of ten cents on each stamp. The committee propose to abolish the ten-cent stamp in all cases except the ten-cent stamp upon packages exported and allow that to remain. There is a tencent stamp provided by law to be used whenever dealers withdraw from a large package, barrel, or cask spirits into smaller packages. If a barrel be divided into packages of ten gallons each, upon each of those a stamp is required, stating from what package and from what numbered package the quantity is withdrawn, in order that the Government may trace the whisky or the spirits through the hands of the dealer and know that the smaller packages have not been filled from barrels or other packages on which the tax has not been filled from barrels or other packages on which the tax has not been collected.

The cost of preparing all these stamps for the Government, as they have to be printed and placed in books with stubs, requiring considerable clerical force, and signed by the collectors of internal revenue when they are used, is about $150,000. The cost of these packages to which I have referred is about $75,000. It is proposed that the Government shall pay this amount of $150,000 and provide these books and provide the clerical force necessary to do the writing upon them and make the signatures upon them; which is solely, as I understand it and as I believe it to be, for the benefit of dealers and of rectifiers—solely for their benefit and not at all for the benefit of the Government. It is proposed to do this at the expense of the Government. I think that is wrong.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will not the gentleman admit it is for the inter-

Mr. DUNNELL. Will not the gentleman admit it is for the interest of the Government in that it is a protection?

Mr. CONGER. The law requires the tax now to be paid upon the barrel and not upon lesser packages. It must be sold in that way with the stamp upon it. Dealers desire to sell to their customers and to smaller dealers in smaller packages for their accommodation. And it is because it may enable the Government to prevent fraud among the smaller dealers that it is useful to the Government; not in any other way. It adds nothing to the tax or to the income, but out of the income $150,000 is paid by the Government for this accommoda-

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue says that he thinks it is not a hardship that this tax should be imposed. As he says, it is simply a question whether the Government is willing to pay out in any way $150,000 for the accommodation of these dealers, not to charge it to the dealers; whether the Government is willing to forego that amount of revenue, or to pay out that amount of money without any return. When we shall reach that section, I shall move to amend the bill by striking out the provision which changes the law in regard to these ten-cent stamps

There is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, and which I do not agree entirely with the committee that ported this bill. Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] allow me to call his attention to the fact that he has fallen into an error, I think, in stating the amount of revenue derived from wholesale dealers' stamps? It was only $43,800.

Mr. CONGER. I was speaking of the cost to the Government of preparing these stamps.

Mr. CARLISLE. The whole cost was only about $75,000.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Raum says on page 28 of the report: "Last year we collected $75,000. The law took effect on the 1st of March, 1879." So that was only for part of the fiscal year.

379." So that was only for part of the fiscal year.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is reading about the interest on

Mr. CONGER. That is so. I will read from pages 26 and 27 of the report:

Mr. Conger. I understood you to say that the cost of those stamps, as they are used, is about $350,000.

Mr. RAUM. That is the amount that those stamps cost the trade. That sum comes into the Treasury.

Mr. CONGER. And you think that it is necessary to have these stamps used?

Mr. RAUM. We cannot get along without them.

Mr. CONGER. And the Government makes those stamps and prepares them for the use of the rectifiers?

Mr. RAUM. Yes.

Mr. CONGER. And the Government officials must put them on?

Mr. RAUM. Yes.

Mr. CONGER. And is there not some signature upon them, indicating the approval of the Government?

Mr. RAUM. Yes, the signature of the officer.

Mr. CONGER. So that officers have to take each one of those stamps and certify to them?

Mr. RAUM. Yes, the signature of the officer.
Mr. CONGER. So that officers have to take each one of those stamps and certify to them?
Mr. RAUM. Yes, except in the case of wholesale liquor-dealers' stamps, when they want to break a package. A gauger is not required to put that stamp on. They put it on themselves, but they have to get them from the collector.
Mr. CONGER. That is, every one of those stamps has to be prepared at the expense of the Government, and signed by some officer of the Government before they are used?
Mr. RAUM. Yes.
Mr. CONGER. Now, is a charge of ten cents apiece an unreasonable charge for the expense and trouble of preparing those stamps and furnishing them to the dealers for their accommodation? I take it that it is for their accommodation.
Mr. RAUM. Yes, it is for their accommodation.
Mr. CONGER. Then, is ten cents an unreasonable charge; it is simply a question whether the Government will relieve them from that expense.
Mr. CARLISLE. Do you know what these stamps really cost the Government?
Mr. RAUM. The total appropriation for dies, paper, and stamps for this fiscal year is $375,000. That comprises all the stamps.
Mr. CARLISLE. Have you any means of ascertaining what this particular class of stamps costs the Government?
Mr. RAUM. I suppose it costs about $75,000. That is a guess, but I can figure it out, of course.
Mr. CONGER. Does the use of these stamps require any additional service, and does the signing of them require additional time?
Mr. RAUM. Of course they have to be signed, and an application forwarded to the collector. He receives that application, he fills up the stamps?
Mr. RAUM. Of course they have to be signed, and an application forwarded to the collector. He receives that application, he fills up the stamp it as furnishing the stamps?
Mr. RAUM. Of course.

Mr. RAUM. Of course.
Mr. CONGER. Is ten cents an unreasonable charge for the accommodation of those who use this stamp?
Mr. RAUM. No I do not think it is.

Mr. RAUM. No I do not think it is. There are other portions of his statement which I will not read. The substance of his statement is this: these stamps are a necessity to prevent fraud, and they are an accommodation to the dealer. They cost the Government last year, for only a portion of the fiscal year, $75,000. Now, the question is simply whether the Government will pay out the $75,000 or $100,000 or $150,000 each year, as the case may be, for the accommodation of dealers and rectifiers? In my opinion the Government should not do it; and when the proper time comes I shall move to strike out that section of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. What section is that?

Mr. CONGER. I think it is section 16. The next point is the provision in regard to shrinkage or leakage. It is admitted by the committee, it is said by the Commissioner, and it is stated by the gentleman in charge of this bill, [Mr. CARLISLE,] that under that provision of this bill there will be a loss to the Government of $1,750,000.

That provision of the bill, which will result in a loss to the Government of $1,750,000 on the amount of taxes collected at this time, has certainly some argument in its favor. The principal one is that while spirits are held in bond there is a necessary leakage. Even when the transaction is honestly conducted there is not the same amount of spirits in the packages after they have been in bond for one year that there was when the packages were first put into bond. And there is an increased leakage for each month during the time the packages are in bond, amounting, as this bill assumes, to from one to six and a half gallons per barrel. This bill provides that there may be an allowance for leakage not to exceed a certain specified rate for each month of each year.

Mr. BARBER. For evaporation?

Mr. CONGER. For evaporation. The theory on which this is asked is that the Government should not exact a tax upon more spirits than go into the market, for more than come out of the bonded warehouse and enter into consumption. That is somewhat plausible, it is true. But all high wines, all other kinds of distilled spirits, as I understand it, except that used for drinking purposes, almost invariably pay the tax when the spirits are first distilled and put into packages or barrels. Those who manufacture the drinking whiskies asked this Government to give them one year, then two years, and then three years' time, before paying the tax which the manufactur-ers of alcohol and high wines and all other spirits pay immediately upon their production and before there has been or can be any evaporation whatever.

Now, while granting this privilege to the manufacturers of this kind of whisky by extending the time in which they shall pay the tax, I do not understand why the Government should not eventually receive the tax that would properly be levied upon the spirits at the time it goes into the Government bonded warehouse, as is now the law. There is no reason why after granting that special favor to this class of producers, they should follow it up by asking that all the consequences of delay should inure to the loss of the Government, as certainly will be the case under this bill.

Another clause of this bill proposes the repeal of the present provision of law requiring interest to be paid on the amount of the tax after one year. Thus it would seem that every favor we extend to after one year. this class of producers is followed by a demand for still further favor in releasing them from what it was stated on this floor they were perfectly willing to pay.

But to confine myself to this question of leakage. I cannot myself approve that portion of the bill. I opposed it in committee; I oppose it here; and I hope it may be modified. I have been in favor of other changes of the law embraced in this bill, because they facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits from the United States to foreign countries—not a very philanthropic motive I admit; but if we could have presented to us a bill which would encourage the absolute and entire transportation of all distilled spirits (except for manufacturing and commercial purposes) from the United States to other countries, letting the evils follow the exportation and land upon the shores of other countries which might be willing to receive the spirits with all their accompanying evils, I would labor for the passage of such a bill.

Those parts of this bill, therefore, which facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits I have favored, and I join with the committee in asking this House to approve them. Those portions of the bill which propose to relieve taxation upon our whiskies and spirits for home consumption, and would result in taking from the Treasury nearly $2,000,000 a year, and if the interest is also taken off $150,000 or $200,000 more—those portions of the bill I oppose, and I think they ought to be stricken out.

I have touched upon three points of this bill that I desire to

I have touched upon three points of this bill that I desire to see modified, and perhaps I shall myself offer amendments with that ob-ject. To the other parts of the bill I see no objection; I think they might be very properly passed. I do not desire to express my own individual views merely on this subject. I think I may safely say, not only for myself but with the concurrence of other gentlemen of the committee, that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue did not express any opinion in favor of the legislation proposed on these three subjects, but said that it was a question for Congress to determine whether it would give away this amount of income—whether the Treasury could stand this reduction of the income derived from distilled spirits.

Mr. BARBER. The gentleman will allow me to ask him in this connection whether the Committee on Ways and Means investigated as to the amount of revenue derived from distilled spirits?

Mr. CONGER. The total amount of revenue derived from distilled spirits is published from year to year in the reports of the Treasury Department

Mr. CARLISLE. I can state to the gentleman that last year the total amount of revenue collected from distillers, rectifiers, and dealers was something over $52,000,000; and this year, according to the returns for the first seven months, it will be over $60,000,000 from that source alone—an increase of about eight and a half million dol-

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe the representatives of the distillers themselves have never asked Congress to diminish the tax any further than to provide the fairest and most efficient mode of taxation. When the tax was very high it was said that it was evaded, that there was great fraud. When it was very low it did not bring in a sufficient amount of revenue. It is admitted that the present tax of ninety cents on each proof-gallon is perhaps the medium of taxation which the traffic will stand so as to bring in proper returns to the Government. This being so, there is no question that the tax upon spirits should constructively be placed upon the article at the time of the distillation, and not after it has been improved by age after lying two or three years in a warehouse. I have heard no reason advanced in favor of any other rule. There is no reason why these who are promitted to leave their spirits in the headed was son advanced in favor of any other rule. There is no reason why those who are permitted to leave their spirits in the bonded warehouse for three years should not at least after the end of the first year pay 5 per cent. interest on the amount of tax due the Government. The people want that money. "The oppressed, the down-trodden people," whom my friends on the other side picture so graphically, have a right to that money when the spirits are put into the barrel; and the whisky manufactures has no right to wrong the "roor". and the whisky manufacturer has no right to wrong the "poor, tax-oppressed people" by compelling the Government to keep his spirits in bond for three years and then remit all tax upon leakage, or upon perhaps suckage, which I have heard is one principal means of reducing the amount in these barrels. [Laughter.]

I have been surprised sometimes—I will not mention names because the chairman of the Committee of the Whole or the Speaker of the the chairman of the Committee of the Whole or the Speaker of the the chairman of the Committee of the Whole or the Speaker of the House hardly ever mentions names of members; it is considered dangerous for anybody to come within his eye when such a threat is made; I do not say that it would affect anybody if I should mention names, but I will not mention names—I say I have been surprised to see men on the other side of the House work themselves into the most violent passion at the expenditures of this Government and the throwing away of the money of the people by picturing the poverty and distress of the country, and the way in which taxation rests like a great mildew on the people, and then, sometimes on the same day, almost in the same breath, these gentlemen become marvelously excited at the infliction of tax upon whisky manufacturers and the hardship and ruin this taxation brings upon them. Those who want to know to whom I refer can look back through the Record and see that those who make the most parade of their sympathy for the "poor, oppressed, tax-paying people of the United States" are those whose sympathies are enlisted most earnestly and who become most zealous in their efforts to take the tax off whisky. The sympathy happens to run in that way. I hope that in this committee and in this Congress we shall change the laws as they now exist, so far as may be practicable and proper to do so, without making an allowance for this wonderful leakage while spirits are in bond for the benefit solely of the manufacturers. We cannot afford to do it. There are too many people in the United States who believe that the manufacture of whisky for drinking purposes, and the selling of it, and the keeping of it until it is riper and better and more destructive, are morally wrong. And just in proportion as we relieve distilled spirits in bond wrong. And just in proportion as we relieve distilled spirits in bond from the payment of tax we shall be considered by a large portion of the people of the United States as committing a wrong not only upon their moral sentiment but upon the finances of the Government.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will yield now to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. CONGER. Now, sir—
Mr. WRIGHT. I thought the gentleman was through.
Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is apt to make

Mr. WRIGHT. No; he never makes a mistake. [Laughter.] Before the gentleman sits down I wish to make an inquiry of him.

Mr. CONGER. I have not yet finished my sentence. The probable diminution of the revenue of the Government year by year, with ble diminution of the revenue of the Government year by year, with the increased manufacture, would exceed two and a quarter millions of dollars, as near as I can estimate it if this bill be passed as it is, including the issues of ten-cent stamps, leakage of nearly $2,000,000, and rebatement of interest year by year on the amount left in store. Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania can interrupt me.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do you give me the floor or to ask a question?

Mr. CONGER. To ask a question will be the safest way.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very well; you have not surrendered the floor. Then I want to know where the gentleman from Michigan derived his information as to the fact that the older whisky got by years the more destructive it became in its quality. [Laughter.] I want to know the source of his information, for my idea always has been that whisky fresh from the still was that which produced the greatest evil.

Mr. CONGER. I will answer my venerable friend, who is now ad-

Mr. CONGER. I will answer my venerable friend, who is now addressing me perhaps from his observation and experience. Although whisky becomes better by age, the temptation to drink so much more of it makes it all the more dangerous. [Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Having had the satisfactory answer [laughter] from the gentleman from Michigan in regard to the destructive quality of whisky owing to its different points of age, I will proceed to make a remark or two with regard to that part of the bill which relates to gauging.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman desize to speak in his own right

Mr. WRIGHT. Certainly, I do.
Mr. CONGER. As I obtained the floor from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] I surrender it back to him.
Mr. CARLISLE. And I have yielded to the gentleman from Penn-

Mr. WRIGHT. I have the floor legitimately.
Mr. CONGER. I wanted gracefully to yield it so the gentleman might have it. Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. WRIGHT. What I lay down as a rule, and it is incontrovertible I believe, with regard to taxation, all excises are edious things. There is no doubt about that; but the article upon which the excise is imposed ought not to be subjected to it until it is offered in market for sale. It is true some of the manufacturers have their whisky in the bonded warehouse for a long period of time, but, as I understand it, for the length of time the article is in the bonded warehouse they pay interest on the value that is assessed upon it up to the time they make sale. Is not that the law

Mr. CARLISLE. That is the law now.
Mr. WRIGHT. So it makes no difference whether it is taken out

Mr. WRIGHT. So it makes no difference whether it is taken out at the end of one year or two or three years, provided the interest imposed on its value is exacted and paid.

Now, we are informed here that the excise upon whisky yielded during the last year $52,000,000, and that those who have charge of the subject estimate the proceeds this year arising from that imposition will amount to $60,000,000. That is an immense source of revenue; nobody will question that; but whether it is a source of revenue which ought to be encouraged may admit of a different construction. tion.

But tell me what reason or justice there is in compelling a manufacturer to pay for evaporation? That is the amount of it. It is about enough in this country to assess the real thing, to assess something that has substance to it; but when you come down in the way of excise, in the application of the principle, to tax that which does not exist, which is evaporated and gone, then I say it is wrong. The whisky comes into the bonded warehouse and it is gauged. Before the day of sale, when that whisky is brought out of the warehouse, there has been an evaporation equal perhaps to some 15 per cent. Talk about $5 taken off of thirty gallons! I suppose, multiplying it

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the provision of the bill in that regard.

Mr. CARLISLE. I am not able, without making calculation, to state the percentage of the quantity this bill proposes to allow as a maximum allowance; but I can state under this bill spirits which have remained in bonded warehouses for three years will be subject to a maximum allowance of seven and a half gallons on a package containing not less than forty gallons. If the package contains sixty gallons, there can be no more than this maximum allowance.

I will say, while my attention is called to the subject, a great many packages containing distilled spirits really contain from sixty to sixtyfive gallons by reason of the fact they are put into the bonded ware-five gallons by reason of the fact they are put into the bonded warehouse very largely over proof and the tax is assessed and collected, not on the wine-gallons, but on the proof-gallons.

If, however, the spirits are found upon withdrawal to be below proof the tax is assessed upon the wine-gallons to prevent fraud by mixing with water or otherwise, and no allowance in this bill can be made upon any package of less than twenty gallons. If a package containing forty gallons is withdrawn and is found to be entirely empty, with the desired distilled mixing in the latest and leaves the adventure of the second sec without a drop of distilled spirits in it, still there can be no allowance for any number of gallons exceeding seven and a half gallons, and the owner must pay the tax of ninety cents a gallon on the whole, which is about 600 per cent. upon the cost value of the article contained in the whole package.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I apprehend that my estimate of 15 per cent. is not very far out of the way. Now, if there be 15 per cent. of evaporation between the time the whisky comes into the bonded warehouse and the time it is withdrawn for sale, is it right that the man-house and the time it is withdrawn for sale, is it right that the manufacturer should pay such a tax as this bill proposes to impose upon him when there is nothing to represent the evaporation? I say that there is no justice in that.

Now, sir, I do not stand up here as the advocate of the trade or of the manufacture of this article, but it has become of vast importance in the affairs of our Government and is especially connected with our forces of the trade or of the trade or of the manufacture of this article, but it has become of vast importance in the affairs of our Government and is especially connected with our finances; for the tobacco and the whisky produce immense revenues to the Government; and while we are putting upon these two articles this large burden of a high excise tax, let us put it upon the article when it comes into the market for sale and not at the moment of its manufacture. If the manufacturer puts the article into a bonded warehouse and pays interest from that time until it is sold, that is load enough to impose upon him under any circumstances, and not to impose upon him the additional load of paying a tax upon air, upon evaporation, upon no substance whatever. It is all wrong. Otherwise I give the bill my sanction with regard to its main features, and I only rose to call the attention of the committee to this tax, which I believe to be an unnecessary hardship imposed upon the manufacturer; and I hope it will not be sanctioned by the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall occupy the attention of the committee but a few minutes in the consideration of the pending bill. This bill is a favorable addition in the main to the work of perfecting the in-ternal-revenue laws of this country pertaining to whisky, and I have no doubt the House, when it comes to understand the bill, will recognize the fact that it owes a debt of gratitude to the sub-committee which prepared it, and as I was not a member of that sub-committee

Which prepared it, and as I was not a member of the state two of these points I concur with him, and after saying what I have in hearty praise of the main body of the bill, I will call attention very briefly to the points in which I differ. The first is that amendment which is found here in section 4, on pages 3, 4, 5, and half of the sixth. I do not object to what is in that at all. What is contained in that section is all right, but I do object to something that has been kept out of it, and which essentially changes the revenue laws. Gentlemen will remember how great a trouble the whisky men were in here men will remember how great a trouble the whisky men were in here a year and a half or two years ago about having a large amount of whisky on hand when the price was down very low and the time was coming when they were compelled by law to withdraw it from bond and pay the tax on it. They were here in force representing to us that it would ruin large numbers of the holders and manufacturers if they were compelled at that time to withdraw the spirits from bond and pay the tax as required by the law.

Therefore, as a matter of kindness toward them and to save them from ruin or from trouble, this House passed and the Senate cona longer period, but on condition, in order to prevent the Government from being a loser, that they should pay an interest on the tax after the time when it was due and up to the time of its payment. In other words, they were permitted to have the privilege of paying the interest upon the tax due instead of paying the tax itself. That we regard as a just thing, a fair help to men who were in distress, as well as a remuneration or equivalent to the United States by getting interest on the tax due, on the ground that the Government was itself paying interest, and if it extended the time when the tax was due it should require interest on the money. That argument was fair and right and cogent then, but it is proposed to change it in this section. That, however, can be rectified by an amendment I understand my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has ready, merely to restore to that section the language that is here left out, putting in the language that was in it before.

Mr. KELLEY. Will my friend from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the foreign importers at that time were not holding their spirits in the custom-houses, in the custody of the Government, without payment of duty, and without payment of interest on those duties; and whether it is fair and equitable in this Government, when giving three years to our own producers, to charge them interest, while it holds the goods of the foreign producer, competing with them, for a like term of three years and makes no charge for interest? I do not believe in any such discrimination against the productions of my counlieve in any such discrimination against the productions of my countrymen. If we are to discriminate, I say leave the American spirit free from interest and impose it upon the duties that fall due upon free from interest and impose it upon the duties that rail due upon foreign spirits.

Mr. GARFIELD. The plan of injecting one gentleman's views into another gentleman's speech is not perhaps conducive to a harmonious presentation of what one wishes to present. Still it does not disconcert me at all. I only say on that subject, without any controversy, this House, believing it was doing a generous thing to get the distillers out of trouble, made this arrangement, which they understood was entirely agreeable to the distillers, a little over one year ago. And now, having got from us the concession of benefit, they ask us quietly to drop out the protection of our own interests which accompanied that benefit. All I want is that the House shall understand the two things side by side; and if we are to take off this part of the benefit reserved to the Treasury, whether we ought not also to take off the consideration on which it was based and not allow the whiskies to lie so long in bend.

not also to take off the consideration on which it was based and not allow the whiskies to lie so long in bond.

The other point is as to the question of outage. And here I admit it is by no means a one-sided question. At first I thought it was wholly a one-sided matter, and I saw no ground whatever for the other side to put in the claim that this bill presents. I will try to the constant of the strength of both state in a few words what I understand to be the strength of both sides. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISE] inform me what is the per cent. of manufactured Bourbon whiskies? What proportion of all the whiskies is Bourbon?

Mr. CARLISLE. I think about one-third; but I will not pretend to be accurate. I do not mean the Bourbons alone; but I mean what are called the fine whiskies, the rye, Bourbon, wheat, &c., manufactured in Maryland, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Tennessee, and to some extent in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the Robertson County whisky. Mr. CARLISLE. Yes.

Mr. GARFIELD. For the purposes of my argument, what my colleague on the committee [Mr. CARLISLE] suggests is sufficient. In league on the committee [Mr. CARLISLE] suggests is sufficient. In order to enable gentlemen who have not paid special attention to this to vote intelligently, they ought to know that there are two kinds of whisky produced. Much the larger part of all the whisky produced in the world is now made and rectified by what is called the process of continuous distillation; that is, after the whisky is manufactured from the first process of distillation it is put through a rectifying process by mechanical means, so that when it is finished and brought and through the process it is not profest at it will averable. That works out from that process it is as perfect as it will ever be. That may called the whisky produced by the process of continuous distillation until it is perfectly rectified. A large majority of all the whisky produced is of that kind—two-thirds at least, possibly three-fourths. When that whisky is manufactured the last step in the process is ended. It is just as good for sale and use as it will ever be.

It is said in the course of the manufacture of that whisky, in the course of its rectification, about 5 per cent. is wasted. That is, in extracting the fusel-oil and other deleterious elements, about 5 per cent. of the actual bulk of distilled whisky is taken away, leaving the fin-of the actual bulk of distilled whisky is taken away, leaving the finished article for the trade.

There is another class of whisky produced, known by the various names of Bourbon whisky, family whiskies, table whiskies; but by whatever name known it is a whisky that does not pass through this process of special continuous distillation so as to become pure and perfect at the time of its first manufacture. But it is carried up to a certain stage and stops; and at that time it is unfit for use; it needs from two to three years of time to ripen. But by simply lying in casks the natural process of purification brings that whisky up at the end of three years to a very high degree of perfection. It has done for it by time what the other has done for it by mechanical appliances.

Now, that whisky comes under the clause in this bill in relation to

Now, that whisky comes under the clause in this bill in relation to ontage and the other does not. And those in favor of this outage clause say that the other whisky—three-fourths of all the whisky produced—has got this outage in the loss of redistillation of about 5 per cent., and that the man who does thus redistill it and prepare it for the market is only taxed upon the whole quantity after the 5 per cent. of outage has been accounted for in the process of rectification; whereas they say that this man who has to wait three years for time to rectify and purify his whisky ought not to be taxed on the 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. or whatever it is that nature does for him in the way of purifying any more than the other on the 5 per cent. that machinery does in the way of purifying.

I think I have stated fairly the argument of these gentlemen who say the outage should not be charged against the distiller, and I should be carried off my feet by that argument and consent to it were it not for one other fact, and that other fact causes me to lean to the other side. That other fact is this: The day that a whisky is produced by a first process, it is just as valuable as it ever will be. It is no more valuable at the end of five years than at the end of one minute after it is manufactured. It is ready for immediate sale and immediate use; whereas the man who manufactures the fine whiskies and has to wait for two or three years to let them ripen before they are at their best, and ready for real use, finds them grow in value on his hands very largely by the very extension of time.

It is true that he does not sell it at the end of one year to be used;

but he does sell it to retail and even to wholesale dealers to be held for its growth and betterment by time. Therefore this Bourbon and other whiskies are really salable all the way along from the day they are first manufactured up to the date when they are drinkable. And the man who is fortunate enough to be able to keep a large stock of such whiskies for three years will find that the outage or shrinkage he loses upon that stock during that time is far more than compensated for by the increase of value of every gallon of it. If one hundred gallons of this whisky shall lose fifteen gallons by outage, the whole one hundred gallons will have gained a percentage in actual value above what it had in the beginning, which will far more than compensate for the loss by shrinkage or outage.

It seems to me, on the whole, although I do not feel so strongly on this subject as I did when it was first presented to my mind, it does seem to me on the whole that we take the risk of keeping these whisseem to me on the whole that we take the risk of keeping these whiskies for these men in our warehouses, and if the warehouses are burned we never expect to make them pay the tax for the whiskies destroyed while in our charge. We lose all the tax on that amount of whisky, although it is true there is as much more made in consequence of the loss, so that in the long run the Government may get such tax. But because of the fact that we remain out of our tax all the time it lies in our warehouses at our risk, I think we ought to have at least as much advantage as the outage will give us.

And it is no hardship on the manufacturer, for he charges it over on the consumer. This is a tax the whole of which the consumer at last pays. It is not so with all taxes; there are a great many taxes that cannot be charged over on the consumer. There was the tax on tea and coffee that was talked of as a burden and shackle upon the free breakfast table. The moment we took that tax off coffee and tea, that moment the price of those articles went up all over the importing world that sent them to us.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the time of the gentleman will be extended.
Mr. GARFIELD. I want but two or three minutes.
Mr. MILLS. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman what time he desires

Mr. GARFIELD. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy; I shall occupy but a few minutes. As I was saying, the moment the tax was taken off of tea and coffee, that moment in Brazil they put an export tax on coffee just about equal to the import tax that we had taken off; so that our people got not one cent, not a quarter of a cent a pound benefit, while the Treasury of the United States lost $15,000,000 in gold each year, and has lost it every year since. That is a case where the tax does not come upon the consumer.

But the taxes upon whisky, beer, and cigars, and such things are taxes that come upon the consumer alone. It is a curious fact that these are taxes that may be called strictly voluntary taxes. The United States goes, by its officers, all over the country with a contribution box, as it were, and says to every man, woman, and child, We offer you the opportunity of contributing something to the expenses of the Government, on the score of whisky, beer, tobacco, and cigars; but you are not obliged to do so. And on the whole, through-cigars; but you are not obliged to do so. And on the whole, throughout the United States, the man or woman who declines to contribute anything to the revenues of the Government on the score of these articles stands a little higher, and deservedly so, in the popular estimation than the man who pays liberally of that tax.

It is absolutely a voluntary contribution. All that a man needs to do, if he does not wish to pay any dollar of the $52,000,000 that comes from the tax on whisky, and the large sum that comes from cigars and tobacco—any man who wishes to take his shoulders from under the load of paying any part of the $115,000,000 that comes from the taxes on these various articles has only to decline to drink, smoke, or chew, and then he will not pay, directly or indirectly, one cent of the tax. There is no coercion and no compulsion. It is a tax that in its last analysis comes absolutely and only upon the consumer and by last analysis comes absolutely and only upon the consumer and by the consumer's consent.

Mr. BARBER. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. BARBER. How does the gentleman reconcile the inconsistency involved in the levying of the tax on the distilled spirit in its perfected form, and the levying of the tax upon other whiskies in an unperfected form? unperfected form

Mr. GARFIELD. I have tried to say, and I did say a moment ago, that that consideration would settle me in favor of this outage clause altogether and absolutely, if it were not true that the holding of these whiskies greatly increases their value. It seems to me only equita-ble and fair that where we keep a man's property for him untaxed for two or three years we ought at least to have a share of the profit that comes by that delay. That profit costs him nothing but the in-terest on the amount of his investment, and the United States invest-ment in it in the shape of the tax is much the larger part. It seems to me that it is only fair that the United States should have a portion of the advantage, and collect the tax on the whole amount of the whisky put in bond.

And I make this further point on the same subject: it is the best way to prevent fraud. If you allow outage and there should be a watering of these barrels, if there should be by any sort of trickery or fraud water introduced into these barrels so as to bring their contents up to the full amount, outage is allowed nevertheless, whether there is any actual outage or not. I want no opportunity or inducement to tamper with these barrels while in bond.

I therefore say, on this subject of the interest clause, I think this House should by all means insist upon the payment of interest. I will do all I can to rectify this bill in both particulars. But so important is the bill that I think we ought to do all we can to perfect

Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy only a few moments in giving my reasons for opposing the leakage clause in this bill. It is insisted that it is wrong to require payment of the tax when the whisky first goes into the bonded warehouse; and that after remaining there a number of years it has undergone a process of evaporation, so that, if the tax is paid upon the full quantity originally deposited in the warehouse, a certain proportion of tax is paid upon that which has no existence. Hence it is plausibly argued that this proportion of the tax is wrong. Let me state what seems to me to be the fallacy in this argument. The taxation is here assumed to be upon a quantity, not upon value. But the basis of all taxation is value. We have various forms of adjusting our taxes; some by measured to be the fall taxation is value. urement, some by weight; but I do not care what the form of taxaurement, some by weight; but I do not eare what the form of taxa-tion, you would not put the same amount of tax upon a pound of gold as upon a pound of iron. Why? Because one is superior in value to to the other. Look all through your tariff laws at all the different kinds of duties which you impose by weight or measurement, and you will find at last that every one of them has been adjusted to value.

Now, when a certain quantity of whisky-say one hundred gallons Now, when a certain quantity of whisky—say one hundred gallons—is made and put into the warehouse, there is a tax imposed upon it. It is not marketable; it will not be so for one, two, or three years. During the first year the whisky evaporates until the one hundred gallons have become about ninety-seven gallons; during the second year the quantity falls to ninety-five gallons; and during the third year to about ninety-two gallons. Of course I am speaking only approximately. But the whisky, when put into the bonded warehouse, is worth about one hundred and eighteen or one hundred and nineteen cents a gallon; after it has been there one year although the teen cents a gallon; after it has been there one year, although the quantity is reduced, it is worth about one hundred and thirty-five cents a gallon. At the end of the second year it is worth one hundred and forty-five or one hundred and fifty cents a gallon; and at the end of the third year one hundred and seventy-five or one hundred and seventy-five and eighty cents a gallon. So that what the whisky loses in quan-

Now, is it just or right that the Government, as an act of accommodation to the distiller, shall release him from paying the tax when it dation to the distiller, shall release him from paying the tax when it is due to the Government, shall furnish a warehouse for the safe custody of his whisky, shall indulge him by waiting for the tax three years while the whisky is maturing, and increasing in value, and then not charge him tax upon the full amount which he deposited in the warehouse, although the one hundred gallons originally deposited may have increased in value from $1.19 cents a gallon to $1.35 cents, or $1.50, or $1.75 cents? There is where the fallacy lies.

The manufacturer has his capital invested in that whisky, and it is increasing in value. If it were not so, he would place it upon the increasing in value. If it were not so, he would place it upon the market and sell it. But it is to his advantage to keep the whisky and market and sell it. But it is to his advantage to keep the whisky and allow it to increase in value as it matures in age, just as it is the interest of a man to hold stocks in railroad companies or banks, because they yield a profit to him. The manufacturer does not sell the whisky when first manufactured because it is his interest to keep it. The Government not only indulges him by keeping it for him in the warehouse and waiting three years for the tax, but it issues to a certain extent a policy of insurance on the whisky, because if the whisky is destroyed by fire while in the warehouse the Government loses all its taxes. Six hundred ner cent of the walke of the whisky is the tax; and Six hundred per cent. of the value of the whisky is the tax; and although the Government does not pay the manufacturer for whisky destroyed, yet it loses the tax.

Mr. McMILLIN. How is it an insurance if the Government does

Mr. MILLIN. How is it an insurance if the Government does not pay the loss to the manufacturer?

Mr. MILLS. The Government loses the amount of the tax.

Mr. McMillin. And that is an insurance!

Mr. MILLS. Technically the gentleman may say that it is not; Mr. MILLS. Technically the gentleman may say that it is not; but I say that when the Government having due to it ninety cents per gallon on one hundred gallons of whisky, agrees to credit the manufacturer for three years while his whisky is maturing, and in the mean time the whisky is burned, the Government loses its tax of ninety cents a gallon; and that is where the insurance comes in. The fact is that the Government in undertaking to indulge the distiller incurs a risk; and if the whisky is destroyed it loses its tax. Therefore I say the Government is an insurer to the amount of the tax, which is 600 per cent. of the value of the whisky. But, it is asked, is it fair to tax this whisky according to its quantity in the raw state, when you only tax the rectifier upon his whisky after it is matured? I think it is fair on this ground: The rectifier invests more capital in the rectification of his whisky. He has to employ labor and incur expenditures in giving marketable value to the whisky in twenty-four hours, instead of waiting for three years while the process of evaporation goes on. The manufacturer of whisky does not invest addinours, instead or waiting for three years while the process of evaporation goes on. The manufacturer of whisky does not invest additional capital, does not bestow additional labor upon the product. The Government supplies in his case that which in the other is supplied by the capital invested by the rectifier.

One other point. Who is to be benefited by this gratuity of the Government? I always look with great favor upon any act of Congress reducing taxes or duties when the benefit of the reduction in gress reducing taxes or duties when the benefit of the reduction inures to the consumer. I am in faver of low duties and low taxes duties and taxes imposed only for supporting the Government. Now, will the consumer reap the benefit of the reduction here proposed? It would seem from the argument of my friend from Ohio [Mr. GAR-FIELD] that in his opinion the consumer is to be benefited by this reduction. I agree with him that it is not always the consumer who pays the tax imposed on any article; sometimes the producer pays it. There are two extremes in imposing taxation. To illustrate by customs duties, one of these extremes is entire prohibition; the other, absolute free trade. But in imposing taxes you must take into consideration one other factor, and that is the consumption of the article.

Whenever your taxation amounts to prohibition of consumption, then to that extent it falls upon the producer. Whenever it does not abridge consumption, the taxation falls upon the consumer. In this case who will pay this tax? Who would be the beneficiary of this grace on the part of the Government. The distiller alone. Why? Because the market price of the whisky rectified which, we are told, is two-thirds of all whisky in the market, will fix the price of convention and whetever are out of tax was take off that convention and whetever are out of tax was take off that conventions and whetever are conventions. is two-thirds of all whisky in the market, will fix the price of consumption and whatever amount of tax you take off that commodity which is manufactured and matured by bonded-warehouse process will simply be for the benefit of the distiller because he will sell in the market at the same price as the rectifier. The majority of whisky entering into the market will fix the price of the market.

We were told we were legislating for free sugar when we removed the duty on sugar imported from Hawaii. We were told that was in the interest of the consumer, and sugar would be cheaper. I took the ground in opposition to it that it would not affect one particle the price of sugar in the market in California because that market would price of sugar in the market in California because that market would be fixed by the Cuba market—by the great mass of sugar offered in this country, the Hawaiian not being able to drive out the other sugar. What was the result? Not one farthing of reduction followed. Sugar has been as high, and was the day after the bill passed, as it was before, and has been all the time. So it will be, if this bill passes, with this whisky. The amount you give back to the men who own this whisky will remain with them, and they will go into the market and sell it at the market rate.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to a little bit of rash generalization on the part of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. Gar-FIELD.] He said that when we repealed the duty on tea and coffee the nations producing those articles at once imposed corresponding export duties— Mr. GARFIELD. On coffee.

Mr. KELLEY. He confines his remark to coffee. And that therefore our people pay just the same for the article, and that by reason of the fact that the coffee-growing countries took advantage of our repeal of duty to maintain the then current price in our market. He forgot, sir, that we do not constitute the whole people of the world. He forgot that there were Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, and other Continental states, and those of South America which are not producers of coffee, none of whom changed their tariff at that time but who were affected by the export duty imposed by Brazil, which added to the ruling price of coffee. Had we been the sole consumers of coffee and the coincidence had happened, the gentleman's argument would have been logical. But unless he can show, which he cannot as to any one of them, that all other nations changed their tariff at the same time his whole premises have gone and his argument is without basis.

Again, he says no man or woman pays any part of the $50,000,000 of spirit tax who does not pay it voluntarily. Sir, I have tried every means to learn what proportion of the spirits we produce goes into beverage and what into the arts, and the nearest I can come to it is that about 33 per cent. go into beverage and 66 per cent. into the arts.

When you take an ounce of quinine, you swallow about twelve which you take the control of the control of spirit tax.

Mr. PRICE. In pills, do you do that?

Mr. KELLEY. Take it as you will, it is not in the article; but so much alcohol has been consumed in the preparation. They are not a of quinine has paid about twelve cents of spirit tax. There is not a gentleman here clad in a colored garment that did not pay spirit tax when he bought the garment. There is not one here who has a ring on his finger or gold spectacles upon his nose but when he bought either article paid spirit tax. There is not a lady who has cologne or other perfume in her boudoir or matron who keeps her camphor bottle that has not paid spirit tax.

You cannot use chloroform or collodion without paying spirit tax, for collodion is pure spirit with a very little, an almost inappreciable weight of gun-cotton. Chloroform is in bulk 98 per cent. of spirit. And these things in this country are all taxed by the Government, while every other country gives them for use in the arts free of tax. And there, let me say in passing, is the wrong you did to your manufacturers of quinine when you repealed the duty on that article and left a duty of 10 per cent. on much of the bark from which it is produced and a tax of $1.50 per really nor than the product of the say of the sa left a duty of 10 per cent. on much of the bark from which it is produced and a tax of $1.80 per gallon on the pure alcohol used in its manufacture. You put those men, your countrymen, under a burden which was practically giving a bonus to the manufacturers of England, France, and Germany. You said they constituted a monopoly; that but five firms were engaged in the business. They were, however, five of the eighteen that exist on the footstool.

Spirit tax! Why, sir, you can scarcely mention a mechanical or scientific production into the cost of which it does not enter. I was walking tific production into the cost of which it does not enter. I was walking through a carpet factory one day, and speaking on this point, and when we reached the counting-room, the proprietor said to his book-keeper—he had suggested nothing as we walked and talked—"Turn to the account and show Mr. Kelley what amount of alcohol we consume annually." I found that every foot of carpet made causes the purchaser to pay a spirit tax. And I repeat that upon the best information I have been able to obtain I have concluded that about 66 per cent. of that $50,000,000 is involuntarily paid by the men and women of the country, and that consequently if you wish to cheapen your manufactures you will hasten the day when the spirit tax shall be wholly repealed.

Now, as to the question of the "outage" and interest on the tax.

Now, as to the question of the "outage" and interest on the tax. Before the war made a tax on spirits necessary we were exporting our table whiskies in competition with the best brandies of France. our table whiskies in competition with the best brandies of France. American whisky had found its way into the clubs of London and the elegant homes of England, and it seemed to be supplanting brandy in that country. Owing to the ravages of the phylloxera upon the vineyards of France and Italy it has become almost impossible to obtain pure brandy, and the French themselves shrink from drinking the medicated stuffs now furnished by the former manufacturers of pure brandy. We can revive that trade. One object of this bill is to allow whisky to be exported in smaller parcels than the law now permits. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to state the number of gallons which under the existing law is the minimum allowed to be exported in a single package.

of gallons which under the existing law is the minimum allowed to be exported in a single package.

Mr. CARLISLE. Not in a single package; but the law provides that a less quantity than one thousand gallons shall not be exported at one time. That is about twenty-five barrels.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well. Under existing law a merchant cannot export less than twenty-five barrels in one invoice. Of course foreign merchants cannot take twenty-five barrels as an experiment. They send their orders for a merchantable quantity as a test; but under the existing law it cannot be sold to them. This bill, therefore, proposes to permit packages containing smaller quantities to be exported. Another point is that time is required to mature and ripen table whisky. Another point is that time is required to mature and ripen table whisky. Shall this Government, in aid of a great export trade—and I meet the moral and physical argument right here—I say shall it, in support of a great export trade, and of the substitution of pure for medicated alcoholic beverages, give some aid to the men who are willing that their capital shall lie for three, five, seven, or ten years in storehouse their capital shall lie for three, five, seven, or ten years in storehouse in order to give a pure liquor in lieu of the medicated stuffs made from diseased grapes and poisonous flavoring matters? Shall we attempt to make an export trade, or, having burdened our manufacturers with heavy burdens in the form of spirit taxes, shall we restrict their operations to the home market? I am as anxious, Mr. Chairman, to see temperance prevail as any gentleman on this floor, but I do not see how you can promote it by giving medicated or drugged beverages an advantage over that which is a pure distillation from grain.

The gentleman from Texas discussed the question, who pays the tax on commodities, the producer or the consumer? There is a very simple solution of that question. He who seeks a market for his productions must pay all taxes, while he whose commodities are sought by eager purchasers imposes them on the purchaser. In other words, the whole question is regulated by the law of supply and demand.

the whole question is regulated by the law of supply and demand. In a crowded market with falling prices the producer pays the tax. In a market but ill supplied, into which many competitors enter, the purchaser pays the tax.

But I took the floor simply to show that our repeal of the duty on coffee did not regulate the coffee trade of the world, and that the gentleman generalized from a mere coincidence, and that he was equally mistaken as to the extent of probably 66 per cent. when he said that those who paid the spirit tax did it voluntarily. I now yield the floor.

Mr. BARBER. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that an interest which renders to the Government a revenue of fifty millions—
Mr. MILLS. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded the or sixty millions of dollars per annum in the shape of revenue, and which promises to increase in importance, is entitled to be treated by the legislative authorities of this country with liberality and in no narrow or petty spirit.

This bill is designed to remove, as I understand it, some of the restrictions upon the export trade of this country. One of the difficulties is the so-called outage or unavoidable evaporation of alcoholic liquors. Liquors stored for any considerable length of time are necessarily subject to evaporation to a greater or less extent. Now, if the tax be levied upon this shortage it necessarily introduces into the system a degree of uncertainty not to be tolerated, because the evaporation varies with the temperature, with the various circumstances attending the storage, &c.

If we knew to a certainty the evaporation would be the same under all circumstances, there might not be any force in the argument, der all circumstances, there might not be any force in the argument, nor would there be any force in the appeal for the removal of the difficulty. But such is not the case. We know to a certainty, when we levy the tax upon the perfected product of continuous distillation, precisely what we are doing; we know that we are taxing whisky, and that so much revenue will be derived from that commodity. We know, moreover, that we are levying it upon the producer and leaving into a purchase the continuous distributions. modity. We know, moreover, that we are levying it upon the producer and levying just so much tax; but when we demand from the distiller of perfect whisky by this long-continued process a tax upon the amount he has actually put in store, we do not know what he is to lose by evaporation. In one case it may be subjected to more evaporation; in another, to less.

Now, what they want in this trade is certainty; and surely for the small sum of $1,750,000 this Government can afford to adopt the rule which will give to this great branch of trade absolute certainty, which is the first prerequisite to the successful conduct of all great commercial operations; absolute certainty to the party engaged in business, so that he may make his calculations for the future.

Mr. MILLS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee,

Mr. MILLS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. McMILLIN.]

Mr. McMILLIN. The magnitude of the interests involved here shall be my apology for claiming the attention of the committee for a few minutes only. The aggregate net revenues of the Government last year were, I believe, about $273,000,000. The revenue derived from spirits was $52,000,000. And it is estimated that there will be derived from the same source this year $60,000,000. So, speaking in round numbers, we have distilled spirits and beverages paying about one-fifth of the entire revenue that it takes to run this Government, instly called the greatest on the earth. And when I come to speak of justly called the greatest on the earth. And when I come to speak of the revenues from so great an industry I do so not as an advocate of intemperance or an apologist for it, but for the purpose of asking jus-tice, simple justice to those who are allowed by law to manufacture spirits, and no more.

As our law now stands, when the distiller places his whisky in the bonded warehouse it is gauged. When he takes it therefrom he is required to pay tax on the number of gallons he deposited, although it may have lost by leakage and evaporation one-fourth while in the possession of the Government. He is thus forced to pay a tax upon that which has ceased to exist. Again, if the tax is not paid within the first year the owner is required to pay interest thereon, although the spirits are yet in the custody of the Government. He has also to pay interest on the tax due on that which has leaked or been lost, and hence endures a double hardship. The bill proposes to correct these and many other minor evils which I will not have time to notice.

I have had occasion to examine this question with some care, and find that the English law is even more favorable to the distiller in allowing for leakage than even the provisions of this bill. There, spirits, and no more.

find that the English law is even more favorable to the distiller in allowing for leakage than even the provisions of this bill. There, from the spirit store the spirits may be removed directly to the excise warehouse and remain there for as long a time as the distiller or owner may desire, and upon withdrawal from the warehouse the proper duties "shall be charged and paid upon the quantity of spirits actually found in said cask or package at the time of the delivery thereof by weight, measure, or gauge, as the commissioners of internal revenue may direct, provided that if the quantity of spirits contained in such cask or package shall be found by weight, measure, or gauge to be less than the quantity contained therein when the same was deposited into the said warehouse, and if the said commissioners shall not be satisfied that such deficiency has not been caused in whole or in part by any fraudulent abstraction, then the duty shall be charged and paid upon the whole quantity of spirits contained in such cask or package at the time when the same was deposited in the warehouse according to the account then taken thereof, or upon such portion according to the account then taken thereof, or upon such portion thereof as the commissioners shall think fit." (Section 7, 27 Victoria, chap. 12.)

Mr. BARBER. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that an interest which renders to the Government a revenue of fifty millions—Mr. MILLS. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded the floor?

Mr. KELLEY. I was under the impression I had the floor in my own right.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman was mistaken. I yielded to him. Mr. KELLEY. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon, for I was undoubtedly mistaken.

Mr. MILLS. Does the gentleman from Illinois want five minutes? If so, I will yield to him for that length of time.

Mr. BARBER. I was about proceeding to state, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the interest which renders to this Government fifty some things by protection, it is certainly wrong not to give him an equal chance with foreigners in all things, which is not done by existing law. The Frenchman, the Englishman, the German can import liquors here and deposit them in our warehouses, keep them there for two years, and pay no interest on whatever may be due as import duties; but when a Kentuckian, a Tennesseean, an Ohioan, or a citizen of Indiana or Illinois has his home products locked up in a Government. ernment warehouse, because the taxes are not paid, at the end of twelve months he has to begin to pay interest on the taxes on what-ever is under bond. Why this favor to foreigners? It is not right, and cannot be justified on any ground. We should require no inter-est from home manufacturers that is not required of foreigners or importers.

The gentleman from Ohio has said that the whisky tax is absolutely a voluntary contribution. For the first time, so far as I have heard, the drinking of whisky and the paying thereby of taxes thereon is indirectly denominated patriotism. Hereafter when a man passes a "sample room," or "The Last Chance," on the Avenue, instead of being invited to go in and take some "cold tea," or a "cocktail," his friend and companion, overflowing with patriotism, will ask him to go in "and make a voluntary contribution to the support of his Government."

his Government."

The gentleman must be forgetful of the many uses to which whisky is necessarily put besides its use as a beverage. In the compounding of medicines which cannot be dispensed with it is an essential ingredient. In a thousand ways it is used, and in many of them, as in medicine, the consumer cannot be said to use them voluntarily, and hence, in such instances, he cannot be called a volunteer tax-payer when he pays the taxes thus collected.

If you do not make a deduction for leakage, or if you impose your tax on the leakage, you tax that which has no existence.

Gentlemen said we ought to impose the taxes, because the value has been enhanced. But while the value is being enhanced the man lies out of the interest on his money. I trust the bill will pass, and that the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Michigan will set be adopted. not be adopted.

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri,

[Mr. BUCKNER.

Mr. BUCKNER. This discussion has taken a wide range, and I Mr. BUCKNER. This discussion has taken a wide range, and I propose to give it a still wider range, or at least to submit an idea to the consideration of the House that may perhaps be new to some members, and that is that this tax on whisky is a tax on western grain, western corn, and western rye and oats. It is a misnomer. But for the fact that it is called a tax on whisky no man in this House would think of carrying out this system of taxation so annoying and so odious to the people of the country whenever and wherever it has been tried. Who would think it was proper to impose a tax on the manufacture of corn into meal or of wheat into donr? No one. on the manufacture of corn into meal or of wheat into flour? on the manufacture of corn into meal or of wheat into flour? No one. Why, then, unless you violate all principles of political economy, should you tax the production of corn or grain rather than its consumption? There is where the tax should go. It ought to go upon the consumption of whisky and alcohol in all its forms.

We have a question of moral sentiment introduced into this discussion: the idea that this Government is a grand temperance reformer that it means opposition to dynakeness vice and crime by former, that it means opposition to drunkenness, vice, and crime by taxing whisky. But every man who considers this question properly knows that it has no effect whatever in that way. We should look at it as a question of dollars and cents, as affecting the material interests of the country, and not pander to the idea that it is an effort to instill habits of temperance among the people and keep them from getting drunk.

getting drunk.

Why, sir, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, it is but one-third of the alcohol manufactured in this country that is used as a beverage at all. Two-thirds or 66 per cent. of it, according to his estimate, is used in the arts and sciences; and indirectly you are taxing all these articles of which alcohol is an ingredient.

I do not object to the imposition of a tax on the consumption of whisky; I could not object, because I personally would not pay any of the tax. But the tax ought to be on the consumption of the article and not on the production of it. What has been the effect of the tax on the manufacturer of spirits in the West, as every man knows? There was a time when the distilleries all over the western country made a market for the corn and grain of the farmer at his very door. Where there is cheap food; where there is cheap labor; where there are all the materials necessary to the manufacture, is the place where the manufacture should be.

Now, what is the case? This manufacture is a monopoly in the hands of a few men. The fifty-six pounds of corn transported from Kansas, Nebraska, or Missouri, to Saint Louis and Cincinnati, is carried there at an enormous cost to the farmer who raises it. If that same corn were manufactured into alcohol at the place where it is raised, then the transportation would be of fourteen pounds instead of fiftysix, resulting in so much increased profit to the farmer.

What has been the effect upon your foreign trade? If we had no tax on whisky, if we had free whisky as it is termed, there is not a nation in the world which we could not drive out of the market in the manufacture of alcohol. Our grain is now transported abroad, and there manufactured into alcohol and other spirits. But we can manufacture it so cheaply here that if there were not these taxes and restrictions upon it no other nation could enter into competition with us.

Before this tax was imposed on whisky the amount of our exportation of alcohol was nearly as great as now, although that was twenty years ago. But you are now interfering with the interests of the country for the sake of appeasing this miserable clamor about moral sentiment. By keeping this tax on whisky and tobacco you exempt the wealth of the country from its proper proportion of the tax, and imposing it upon the industries and productions of labor. You are impoverishing the people for the benefit of the wealth of the country. Now, you should do as they do in England, impose a tax on incomes and upon the sales of stocks and bonds, which amount to millions upon millions of dollars daily, and in that way obtain something which would relieve the interests of the country that you are now oppressing and relieve the farmers who raise the corn and wheat that oppressing and relieve the farmers who raise the corn and wheat that converted into whisky. Our present system is wrong, the whole is converted into whisky. Our present system is wrong, the whole thing should be reformed.

I know that we cannot obtain revenue enough without having some tax upon whisky. The $100,000,000 now exacted from that manufacture and from the manufacture of tobacco must in whole or in part be obtained from some other source. But you might obtain the half of it by levying a tax upon the consumption of whisky, and there is where the tax should be laid. It would not increase your army of detectives, agents, and collectors; they are now all over the country. By imposing a tax on the consumption of whisky, as is done in the several States, you could obtain revenue enough for your purposes, provided at the same time you impose taxes elsewhere on that which should pay taxes but does not pay any, and thereby aid in relieving productive labor from the burdens under which it is now suffering. I believe I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. MILLS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. REED.]

Mr. REED. I have read with considerable care the report pre-

Mr. REED. I have read with considerable care the report presented with this bill. It seems to me that with two exceptions the bill will justify itself to the favor of this House. In two respects I think it should be modified.

I recollect the scene referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] which occurred in this House a year or more ago, when the distillers of the country presented themselves here and said that owing to the temporary crisis it was necessary that they should have another year to keep their spirits in bond before paying tax. In consideration of that, they offered to pay the Government 5 per cent. interest on the tax during that time. No pretense was then made that there would be appreciate to represent the strength of the strength there would be any effort to permanently extend the time without the manufacturers paying interest on the tax. And I submit that there has been no good reason presented here why it should now be

The claim made that we ought to do it because the importers have longer time to keep their spirits in bond and pay no interest seems to me to be a fallacy. The principle on which we ought to legislate on these matters is this: a tax of this kind is in its nature voluntary, being on what is a luxury, or at least not a necessity; whatever we take off from this we put upon comforts and necessaries. We ought, therefore, to impose the very highest tax which we can collect on articles like this. We ought to get the largest amount of revenue from this taxation which can possibly be obtained. If we have not imposed a sufficiently high tax on foreign imports, that ought to be imposed a sufficiently high tax on foreign imports, that ought to be remedied by increasing the tax. We ought not to justify ourselves in lessening the internal or excise tax by giving as a reason that the tax on foreign spirits is not large enough.

It seems to me that the same line of argument applies to the question of outage. In reality it amounts to nothing more or less than this: it is taking off 15 per cent. or less from the tax. Such lowering of the tax can be justified only upon the ground that lessening the tax will really increase the revenue. I believe that our experience as a Government has shown us that we can collect the present rate of tax, and that the tax as at present levied will bring us the largest amount of revenue we can obtain from this article. I have not heard the slightest hint of any argument against that proposition, which is based upon principles which are commonly admitted as correct in matters of taxation. Everywhere the aim is to tax liquors to the matters of taxation. Everywhere the aim is to tax liquors to the matters of taxation. Everywhere the aim is to tax liquors to the highest revenue-producing point.

No man has risen here and said that this tax is too large to be collected; yet it is proposed here and now to take 15 per cent. off the tax on table whisky, a class of whisky that certainly does not enter into the 66 per cent. consumed in the arts, as maintained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Keller,] but belongs to that other class so well described by the gentleman from Ohio.

Nor do I think that any argument is to be founded on the encouragement of exportation, because the exporter, if his goods are in bond, has to pay no tax until he exports them. The provision in the bill allowing exportation in small packages seems to me to be ample. I am aware that as a citizen of Maine I have no special interest in this business; yet at the same time, while sitting here as a member, this business; yet at the same time, while sitting here as a member, I suppose I ought to contribute whatever suggestions may occur to me on the subject; and it does seem to me that on the principle upon which taxes of this kind are based we are not justified in doing what practically amounts to a reduction of the tax.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does the gentleman concede that if he were not a citizen of Maine he would not have made the speech he has made?

Mr. REED. I do not concede that I would not have made this speech, though perhaps I would not have made the allusion to my State with which I closed.

Mr. CARLISLE. Did I understand the gentleman from Maine to say that the passage of this bill would result in reducing the taxes on distilled spirits 50 per cent.?

Mr. REED. Fifteen per cent.
Mr. CARLISLE. The tax upon distilled spirits this year will be about sixty million dollars; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates that this proposed change of the law will make a reduction of only $1,750,000.

Mr. REED. I was confining myself entirely to that class of spirits under discussion—whisky kept in bond for a period not exceeding three years; and if there is an outage it will be in the proportion of 15 per cent. for the three years.

Mr. CARLISLE. While on the floor I desire to say in response to the statement of the gentleman from Maine that this bill is not in the interest of exporters of spirits, except that provision authorizing exportation in small quantities—

Mr. REED. Not at all.
Mr. CARLISLE. I so understood the gentleman.
Mr. REED. I did not make that assertion. I was replying to the argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania—
[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has ex-

Mr. CARLISLE. I wish to say that persons withdrawing spirits from the warehouse for exportation are compelled to pay the tax upon the quantity of spirits originally put into the warehouse, although there may be an outage of 7, 10, or 15 per cent., and that the only privilege they now have in the matter of exportation is that they are allowed leakage between the warehouse and the port of ship-

Mr. REED. To that extent, then, my remarks are subject to correction.

Mr. FORT. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether we export liquors which have been in bond, say one, two, or three years?

Mr. CARLISLE. Oh, yes.

Mr. CARLISLE. Oh, yes.

Mr. FORT. We do not, then, export high wines only?

Mr. CARLISLE. We export some of what are called table liquors, the finer qualities of liquors; but as already explained by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] there has not been so much of these exported as there would have been if the law had not prohibited exportation in less quantities than one thousand gallons at a time, about twenty five burgle. Persons abroad who desire to buy these finer twenty-five barrels. Persons abroad who desire to buy these finer liquors for table use will not usually care to buy so much as twentyfive barrels at one time.

Mr. FORT. What percentage of bonded liquors do we export?
Mr. CARLISLE. I am not able to state that without reference to the Commissioner's report.
Mr. MILLS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WIL-

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to offer any sugmr. Willis. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to oner any suggestions upon this bill, as the report of my colleague [Mr. Carlisle] accompanying it is so clear, able, and exhaustive that nothing remains to be said upon the subject. As it is evident, however, that some members have not had time to read that report, I may be pardoned for trespassing briefly upon the attention of the committee.

I accept the statement made by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Reed.] that we are not here to reform the morals of the country. If, as claimed by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] such was as claimed by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] such was our duty and mission, and if, as he expressed it, it was desirable to export and thus get rid of all the whisky we manufactured, this bill if passed will be a step in that direction, as it will lessen the cost and increase the amount of production, and thus enable our American whiskies to compete successfully with foreign goods in their home markets. Or if this should fail, and it be desired to use the Government as a moral engine, why not place the tax at $5 a gallon instead of ninety cents, and thus abolish the manufacture altogether.

But gentlemen who express such views make no such proposition to this House, they would vote for no such proposition. They after all regard it as the gentleman from Maine regards it, as an orange out of which as much juice is to be squeezed as possible; as the goose which lays the golden egg. Whatever devotion they may feel for the cause of temperance, I take it that it is not so great as to strike down by their votes a source of revenue which is so overflowing and increasing as this—a revenue which is fifteen times greater to-day than at first, and which under judicious and fostering legislation will continue to increase. They certainly do not desire to end the life of continue to increase. They certainly do not desire to end the life of a business which pays such immense sums into the public Treasury.

No, Mr. Chairman, such is not their meaning; but the gentleman from Maine has bluntly expressed their desire as he did his own when he declared that he wanted to get the largest possible amount of revenue from whisky. He expresses himself in favor of the "largest tax which can be collected," which I take it is but another form of the same idea. Sir, for the argument's sake, I will agree with this view of the subject. So far as this bill is concerned, I think we can consider it purely from a business or tax-paying stand-point, and find ample reasons for supporting it. I contend that ultimately there will be an increase of revenue if the changes proposed in this bill are made.

The gentleman from Maine refers to the law passed in March, 1878, as a reason for opposing further legislation upon this subject. He says that there was an agreement or understanding then that no future appeal to Congress would be made, and that the distillers agreed to pay this 5 per cent. interest upon whisky in bond, which it is proposed now to abolish.

I have no recollection, Mr. Chairman, of any such agreement, either open or tacit; and as to the interest clause, it was accepted by the distillers as the best they could do under the circumstances, and not as something that was just and right. When that law was passed I remember well the predictions which were made on this floor as to the results. It was claimed that millions of delicer and the results. the results. It was claimed that millions of dollars would be lost to the Government, and that it would become necessary to levy new taxes to supply the deficiency in revenue thus created. How these predictions have been falsified by the facts every one knows. At the time that legislation was asked all of the leading distilleries of the country, unable to sell their goods because of the crisis in monetary affairs and the general depression in business, could not pay to the Government the enormous sums for taxes which were then due. no change in the law taken place bankruptcy and ruin would have been the result.

The appeal which the distillers of the country then made to this House was unheeded by many members then as it is now. The rigid enforcement of the law was demanded, the forfeit of the bond was asked. Fortunately, however, in this crisis wiser counsels prevailed, the law extending the bonded period was passed, and relief from impending ruin was secured. Look at the results. Take one single instance in the district which I have the honor to represent. The house of Newcomb, Buchanan & Co., one of the largest and most reliable in the West, through a gentleman who was then a member of the firm, Major W. H. Thomas, urgently insisted upon the immediate passage of that law. Before it was done the house which he represented, involving in its business many millions of dollars of capital, was compelled to suspend payment.

The bill passed, and their creditors knowing their high character and commercial standing, promptly came to their relief. They continued their operations, and only a few days ago had the proud satisfaction of announcing to the world that every dollar of their large isfaction of announcing to the world that every dollar of their large indebtedness had been fully paid. In addition to this, they have been enabled to increase their capacity, and will yearly pay a still larger sum into the Federal Treasury. What is true of that house, as to increase of business, holds good throughout the Union. The last report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows an increased production in Bourbon and rye whiskies over the preceding year, 1878, of 5,123,697 gallons, while the net increase of all the different varieties was 15,789,568 gallons. The quantity of spirits produced and deposited in distillery warehouses during the field year ended Inno 30, 1879, was greater than the quantity produced during any other. June 30, 1879, was greater than the quantity produced during any other year. The revenue which has come into the office since the date of the report is 50 per cent. greater than what the Commissioner estimated it would be. This excess over his expectation already amounts to nearly $8,000,000.

Such, sir, has been the effect of that legislation removing hardships, which surrounded the manufacture of whisky, and which at the time which surrounded the manufacture of whisky, and which at the time the law was discussed it was prophesied would so greatly deplete the Treasury. More capital has been invested in the business, more spirits have been produced, and a larger revenue paid into the Treasury than during any year of our history. The Commissioner in accounting for this great increase says that it comes, first, from the great increase in the number of legally authorized distilleries where before there were illigit distillers; second the building of large and averaging there were illicit distillers; second, the building of large and expensive distilleries, the increased production of the finer grades of goods, the increased foreign demand, &c.

An examination of the law will show that the amount of revenue An examination of the law will show that the amount of revenue depends not upon the amount of tax per gallon, but rather upon the number of gallons which are produced. Thus when the tax was twenty cents per gallon and the law was just going into operation the amount of gallons per month produced was 4,324,559. This continued for eighteen months. The tax for four months was then put at sixty cents, and the number of gallons per month was 8,315,088. For forty-three months the tax was $2 per gallon, and during that time the amount produced per month was 853,235. For six months it was $1.50 per gallon, during which time the number of gallons per time the amount produced per month was $53,255. For six months it was $1.50 per gallon, during which time the number of gallons per month was $08,858. For fifty-two months it has been at ninety cents per gallon, and during this time the number of gallons has increased to 4,240,197 gallons per month.

It will be seen, therefore, at once that high taxes do not produce high revenue. When the tax is low and the laws are favorable other-high revenue. When the tax is low and the laws are favorable other-wise to production, the number of gallons per month is largely in-creased, with a consequent increase of the revenue; and what has been true in the past will be true in the future. If you deal gener-ously and liberally with this great interest it will repay you with more abundant revenue. If you hamper it with restrictions, if you hedge it in with technicalities, and if you compel it, as you do now, to pay this enormous tax of 600 per cent. upon material which is not in existence, you drive capital from the business, you lessen the num-ber of sources from which your revenue comes and you thus defeat the very purposes which you revenue comes, and you thus defeat the very purposes which you wish to accomplish by legislation. Gentlemen in the discussion of this question have ignored the fact that there are two separate and distinct branches of this business.

There are the rectifiers, whose product, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has stated, is ready immediately for use and sale, and then we have the manufacturers of these straight whiskies, which he calls "table whiskies," the Bourbon and the rye. These latter require from two to three years before they can be used or sold, but when ready for sale, by evaporation they lose in quantity. Is there any justice in compelling payment of tax upon the number of gallons thus lost by evaporation

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, General Raum, whose fairness and whose fidelity to the Government no one will question, on the sixth page of his annual report, under the heading of "deficiency taxes," concedes the injustice of such taxation. I quote his statement and commend his conclusion to all gentlemen on this floor who wish to deal fairly and justly with this important interest—an interest which pays over forty-four millions into the public Treasury.

DEFICIENCY TAXES UPON SPIRITS WITHDRAWN FOR EXPORTATION.

est which pays over forty-four millions into the public Treasury.

DEFICIENCY TAXES UPON SPIRITS WITHDRAWN FOR EXPORTATION.

Under the existing law spirits intended for exportation are gauged before their withdrawal from the bonded warehouse, and are again gauged at the port of export when they are about to be laden upon a foreign-bound vessel, and the distiller or exporter is required to pay a tax of ninety cents per gallon upon any deficiency that may be found between the first and second gauges. These taxes are greatly complained of by the distillers and others engaged in the export trade. This law was undoubtedly designed for, and has had the effect of, preventing frauds in connection with the exportation of distilled spirits. It is, however, well known that it is next to impossible to so prepare wooden packages as to prevent a certain amount of evaporation in the course of transportation over a long line, especially in hot weather, and I fully recognize the hardship of requiring the distiller to pay tax upon spirits which have been lost by evaporation in the course of transportation. The intent of the internal revenue laws is to levy a tax of ninety cents a gallon upon spirits which have been lost by evaporation in the course of transportation upon spirits which are manufactured for and actually go into consumption in this country, and the tax in question is evidently not intended for revenue, but as a restrictive measure to prevent fraud.

These taxes have in many instances amounted to a reasonable profit on the sale of the spirits, and have therefore been felt as a great burden by the distillers. Where the spirits are withdrawn in good faith for exportation, and duffigence is exercised in their transportation and losses occur by evaporation or accident in transportation without fraud or negligence on the part of the distiller, owner, or transportation company, or their agents, in my judgment no tax should be levied for any such loss. Such a tax necessarily discourages the exportation of American distille

I submit it to every member on this floor that the case of a distiller who is compelled to keep his goods from two to three years before he can dispose of them, during which time he loses a per cent. by natural causes, is on all fours with the case above stated. The rea-soning which applies to one is of equal force and application to the

Now, it is true that we have the right as legislators to ignore every Now, it is true that we have the right as legislators to ignore every principle of justice and good faith in this matter and compel, as we have done, payment upon the whole amount first manufactured. It is equally true that we might by our legislation here strike down this particular branch of business altogether. But do you intend to do it? Is this your policy? Why should you lessen the probabilities of a successful management of this industry? If you recognize it and are willing to take revenue from it, why not get as much as possible and relieve our people of taxes which press heavily upon them in other directions? Why not hold out inducements to the capitalists of the country to invest their money in this trade? Why should there be any discrimination against the manufacturers of pure whiskies? The rectifier loses 5 per cent. of his product in the process through which it goes, and is required to pay tax, not upon what goes into but what comes out of what remains after he has handled it. Why should this artificial process be more favored than the natural process through which straight whisky is made marketable?

The force of these suggestions, Mr. Chairman, is fully recognized by the rectifiers themselves. They make no resistance to this bill. On the contrary they admit that it is just in all its provisions and urge its passage. I hold in my hand a petition which I find on my desk, and which has doubtless been sent to all the members of this House. This petition is from rectifiers, wholesale liquor dealers as well as distillers, and calls attention to the law and respectfully asks favorable action.

In the list from Kentucky I recognize the names of all the leading. principle of justice and good faith in this matter and compel, as we favorable action.

In the list from Kentucky I recognize the names of all the leading rectifiers, distillers, and liquor merchants of that State. I see sixteen other States represented upon that petition. If the sharp rivalries of business, nowhere more prompt or active than in this line of business, have been laid aside before the sense of right and all these conflicting interests agree upon this bill, is it not an evidence that there is no just complaint that can be made against it, but that it will fairly and fully protect the rights of all.

Mr. Chairman, the State which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor during the last seventeen years has paid in internal revenue $108,000,000. The office located in the city of my residence, Louisville, of the amount I have stated paid $42,000,000, nearly one-third of the whole. In this next year there will be paid from that district over $5,000,000, a greater sum than is paid by eighteen States together.

I am glad to say, however, that the merchants of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia have purchased of my constituents all the whisky they have manufactured up to the present time, except a small per cent. I feel, therefore, that whatever suggestions I have made will not be considered as prompted by the interest solely which

I feel in my constituency. I trust I shall always be ready when the opportunity affords to serve them to the best of my ability, but so far as the operation of the law at present is concerned, it is of far greater importance to the constituents of gentlemen who represent the cities I have named than to my own. I stand here, however, to contend for the bill as just and fraught with prospective liberal returns of taxes to the Federal Treasury, and I look for the same favorable results in this instance as in the law extending the bonded period.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the bill with all its provisions will soon

Mr. CARLISLE. To avoid the necessity of having the committee rise I ask by unanimous consent the Clerk read the bill by sections for amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3260 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out the word "double," in the fourteenth line of said section, and inserting after the word "days," in the fifteenth line of said section, the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall the bond exceed the sum of $100.000 in the following: "But in no case shall

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry and not for the purpose of discussing the bill, because, it seems to me, the bill is a fair one in its general features and, with slight modifications, will answer the purpose for which it was framed.

framed.

I have received, however, from some of my constituents interested in the manufacture of vinegar, a letter calling my attention to a petition in which it is alleged that section 3282 of the Revised Statutes, which was amended by the act of March 1, 1879, and gave to the manufacturers of vinegar some privileges in the way of distilling and rectifying, is impaired by this bill and the rights thus accorded to them taken away. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, whether that is the case or not?

Mr. CARLISLE. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and all others whose constituents are interested.

from Pennsylvania and all others whose constituents are interested in the manufacture of vinegar by what is known as the alcoholicvaporizing process, there is not a single provision in this bill which affects that business in the least.

Mr. FRYE. That the gentleman states after full hearing before the committee touching that interest.

Mr. CARLISLE. We have another bill before us touching that.

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the following amendment to come in as a new section, proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means:

Sec. 2. That section 3262 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding to the end the words following: "And provided also, That the collector may at any time, at the discretion of the Commissioner, accept such bond as is authorized to be given by the distiller in lieu of the written consent of the owner of the fee, in the case of a distillery erected prior to July 20, 1868, notwithstanding such distillery has since then been increased by the addition of land or buildings adjacent or contiguous thereto, not owned by the distillery be one which the distiller owns in fee or in respect to which he has procured the written consent of the owner of the fee or other incumbrance, otherwise to be for and in respect of the entire distillery as increased by such addition."

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to concur in that amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 3285 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out all after said number and substituting therefor the following: "No fermenting-tub in a sweet-mash distillery shall be filled oftener than once in seventy-two hours, nor in a sour-mash distillery often than once in ninety-six hours, nor in a rum distillery oftener than once in one hundred and forty-four

Mr. CARLISLE. The committee propose an amendment to this section to insert after the word "following," in the fourth line, the Every fermenting-tub shall be emptied at or before the end of the fermenting period.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 3293 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by joint resolution approved March 23, 1878, and by an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by striking out all after the said number and substituting therefor the following:

"The distiller or owner of all spirits removed as aforesaid to the distillery warehouse shall, on the first day of each month, or within five days thereafter, enter the same for deposit in such warehouse, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe. Said entry shall be in triplicate, and shall contain the name of the person making the entry, the designation of the warehouse in which the deposit is made, and the date thereof, and shall be in the following form:

"ENTRY FOR DEPOSIT IN DISTILLERY WAREHOUSE.

"ENTRY FOR DEPOSIT IN DISTILLERY WAREHOUSE.

The said distiller or owner shall at the time of making said entry give his bond in duplicate, with one or more sureties, satisfactory to the collector of the district, conditioned that the principal named in said bond shall pay the tax on the spirits as specified in the entry, or cause the same to be paid, before removal from said distillery warehouse, and within three years from the date of said entry; and the penal sum of such bond shall not be less than the amount of the tax on such distilled spirits. One of said entries shall be retained in the office of the collector of the district, one sent to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse, to be retained and filed in the warehouse, and one sent with duplicate of the bond to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office.

"A new bond shall be required in case of the death, insolvency, or removal of either of the sureties, and may be required in any other contingency affecting its validity or impairing its efficiency, at the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And in case the distiller or owner fails or refuses to give the bond hereinbefore required, or to renew the same, or neglects to immediately withdraw the spirits and pay the tax thereon, or if he neglects to withdraw any bonded spirits and pay the tax thereon before the expiration of the time limited in the bond, the collector shall proceed to collect the tax by distraint, issuing his warrant of distraint for the amount of tax found to be due, as ascertained by him from the report of the gauger if no bond was given, or from the terms of the bond if a bond was given. "If it shall appear at any time that there has been a loss of distilled spirits from any cask or other package hereafter deposited in a distillery warehouse, other than the loss provided for in section 3221 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, is excessive, he may instruct the collector of the district in which the loss has occurred to require the withdrawal from warehouse of such distilled spirits, and to collect the tax accrued upon the original quantity of distilled spirits, and to collect the tax accrued upon the original quantity of distilled spirits entered into the warehouse in such cask or package, notwithstanding that the time specified in any bond given for the withdrawal of the spirits entered into warehouse in such cask or package has not expired. If the said tax is not paid on demand, the collector shall report the amount due upon his next monthly list, and it shall be assessed and collected as other taxes are assessed and collected.

"That the tax on all distilled spirits hereafter entered for deposit in distillery warehouses shall be due and payable before and at the time the same are withdrawn therefrom and within three years from the date of the entry for deposit therein; and warehousing bonds hereafter taken under the provisions of section 3293 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be conditioned for the payment of the tax on the spirits as specified in the entry before removal from the distillery warehouse, and within three years from the date of said bonds."

Mr. CONGER. I send to the Clerk's desk the following amendment

Mr. CONGER. I send to the Clerk's desk the following amendment to this section, to come in immediately after line 83, at the close of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in case of the non-payment of the tax on any distilled spirits within one year from the date of the original warehousing bond for such spirits, interest shall accrue upon said tax at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from and after the expiration of said year until the tax shall be paid. Such interest shall be collected with the tax in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

Mr. CONGER. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, restores to the sec-Mr. CONGER. In same and the sure of the bill by the committee. I do not desire to add to what I have already said or to what other gentlemen have said upon this subject, and unless some other gentleman desires to discuss it I shall ask to have a vote upon it. My object is in presenting it to leave the subject of the payment of interest as it is now. This clause is left out in the bill that was reported from the committee, and I ask simply to append it as an amendment, having had an understanding that it should be submitted to the Commit-the of the Whole, and if necessary to the House, in order to test the sense of the House as to its restoration.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, I have already stated perhaps all that is necessary in regard to this matter of interest, to which the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan refers. I have already stated to the committee that there is very little, perhaps no complaint as to the amount of this tax. It is a matter of no consequence, or of as to the amount of this tax. It is a matter of his consequence, or of very little consequence, as far as the revenue is concerned, and so far as the amount is concerned it is a matter of very little consequence to distillers and owners of distilled spirits. But there is a ground of complaint, as I have already stated, and that is that there is more or less difficulty in adjusting the matter of interest when the packages of distilled spirits are withdrawn from the warehouses. It is a very small item, but no matter how small the quantity of distilled spirits may be which is withdrawn from the warehouse, there must be an examination by the officers of the Revenue Department with a view to ascertaining the amount of this interest upon the tax after the expiration of one year.

There is also another difficulty encountered by the distiller in regard to the collection of the tax. When he comes to make sale of spirits it is always a matter of controversy between the purchaser and the seller as to who shall pay this interest. Now, in this view, and it being a matter of such very small importance to the revenue, the committee thought it was advisable under all of the circumstances to recommend the repeal of so much of the law as imposed that in-terest, and with this statement I am willing to leave it for the action of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. While that is true to some extent, yet this is in fact the only place in the whole law where there is any pretended remuneration to the Government for the care, keeping, warehousing, storing, and protecting the whisky during this whole time. That is, from the time it enters the warehouse until the end of the three years

If the loss of the use of the money which should be paid for this tax or the withholding of its payment from the Government is sanctioned by the bill, then there ought to be some recompense to the Government for that loss in the way of interest. Now, the payment of this interest will amount, according to the rate of manufacture for this year, and according to the estimate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to about $150,000. That goes so far, at all events, toward paying these expenses of the Government.

I submit to the gentleman that the people of this country will be

I submit to the gentleman that the people of this country will be better satisfied with the relief given in other respects if it is not given at the expense of the tax-payers.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman will permit me to say that the Government of the United States is not at a particle more expense in keeping the charge and custody of the warehouse in which spirits remain for three years continuously than it would be in the charge and custody of one in which spirits remain for only a single day, because if the same spirits remain but a day the Government is re quired to keep at that warehouse continuously a storekeeper with compensation at the rate of $4 a day, and that is all the expense that would be incurred if the liquor remained on storage for four or six

Mr. CONGER. But my point is that the expense would be incurred in the requirement which the Government would have to meet, of a larger building, of additional room for the storage, if it was allowed to remain a longer time.

Mr. CARLISLE. But the gentleman is certainly not under the impression that the Government furnishes the warehouse for this stor-Every distiller is required by law to furnish at his own cost a warehouse for the storage of spirits. There are warehouses erected by distillers at a cost of seventy-five or eighty thousand dollars; and that property is taken possession of immediately, absolutely, and exclusively by the Government the moment it is erected, and its officer carries the key, so that the owner of the distilled spirits cannot even take a constant in these tables. take a customer in there to show the goods unless in the presence of a Government officer.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. I am opposed to that feature of the bill which provides for releasing the 5 per cent. interest now collected on the unpaid tax after the specified time, but more especially to the rebate of the tax for evaporation, waste, &c., occurring between the time of manufacture and sale, and I wish to state briefly the reasons that will influence my vote. Sir, I am always desirous of reducing taxes and lightening the burdens of government. I wish that all our commodities and products could be relieved of the load and oppression of taxation. But, sir, the burdens of government must be borne by some one and rest upon some of our commodities or articles of merchandise. And since all may not be relieved, the question arises, are the owners of liquors now in Government warehouses entitled to consideration and relief in preference to all the other of our tax-paying people.

Does the public interest demand that relief should begin and begin alone here; that nobody else but the class contemplated in this bill should have any burdens of government lifted from their shoulders during this session of Congress? Others of our people and other induring this session of Congress? Others of our people and other industries, to say the least of it, are entitled to equal consideration and relief. Yes, and to far more; yet no bill has been reported in their behalf by the Committee on Ways and Means. Reduce the revenues as contemplated in this bill, and their chance of redress is just that much lessened. I do not want to begin to reduce our revenues just here and in this way. Bring in your bill revising our tariff, lift the burden from the people, and then we will, if it can be safely done, extend the relief which you demand shall first be given. I prefer to reduce, and demand that the reduction shall first be made upon the taxes upon hats blankets trace, chains and implements of husbandry. reduce, and demand that the reduction shall risk be made upon the taxes upon hats, blankets, trace-chains, and implements of husbandry, and the other necessaries that the people I here represent must of necessity purchase, those things they cannot do without, and in purchasing which they pay high tariffs.

Who will be benefited by the passage of this bill unamended or by the change of law as contemplated in the bill? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] tells us the Commissioner of Internal Rev-

Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] tells us the Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates that the rebate for waste, leakage, &c., will be about $1,700,000 per annum, and from the release of the 5 per cent. about $75,000; being a saving, or rather a gain, to those who have liquors in the Government warehouses of near $2,000,000, and a consequent reduction of that much revenue from the Treasury of the Government per annum. The Government plainly loses nearly two million per annum by this transaction. Now, who gains it † Will the consumer purchase his liquor any cheaper ? Not at all. Will the producer of corn and grain receive any higher price from the distiller for his products by reason of the passage of this bill ? None whatever.

This rebate is only upon certain liquors, as has been explained, called table liquor, &c. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] has assured this House that about 66 per cent. of all the alcohol made is used in the arts, and only about 33 per cent. used as a beverage.

is used in the arts, and only about 33 per cent, used as a beverage. It is evident that the liquors upon which this rebate is sought to be made are those used or consumed as a beverage—the table liquors; hence his ingenious argument about the works of art being relieved of taxation does not apply, for the alcohol so used is not affected by this bill. Since the rebate contemplated in the passage of this bill is but a small percentage, perhaps from 5 to 15, of the liquors to which it applies, and which it seems are not more than a third of the amount manufactured in the country, the price to the consumer will not be affected by the passage of the bill. But the owners of liquor in the Government warehouses will realize a fine margin; they scoop in just what the Government loses; it is a fine speculation to them. It is not the first time our revenue laws have been changed in the interest of the speculator. I for one will never aid by my vote what seems to me a project of speculation.

In my judgment, we ought to change the revenue laws as little as possible, and only for the benefit of the people generally; not for the benefit of the manufacturers alone or of those who happen to have large amounts of spirits in the warehouses. I will join hands with any one to reduce taxes and to take the tariff off those things which the people most use in this country; and if taxes are to be reduced I would rather do so in that field, and afterward reduce the tax upon whisky.

The question being taken on Mr. Conger's amendment, there ere—ayes 52, noes 64.

Mr. CONGER. Before making the point that a quorum has not voted, I desire to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of the bill whether it was understood I should have the right to offer this amendment in the House?

Mr. CARLISLE. There has been nothing said to me on that sub-

Mr. CONGER. I had stated my desire, and I had supposed it was agreed that if the amendment should fail in Committee of the Whole

I should have a vote upon it in the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. Unless such an understanding as the gentleman from Michigan suggests would result in having a large number of other gentlemen asking the same privilege, and permitting perhaps fifteen amendments to be voted upon in the House which had been offered in the committee, I would have no objection.

Mr. CONGER. There are only three, or at most four, amendments upon which gentlemen would desire to have a vote in the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. With the understanding that there are no more than that, I will agree that this amendment shall be voted upon in

Mr. CONGER. With the understanding, then, that I shall have an opportunity to offer this amendment in the House before the previous question is called, I do not insist on the point of order that a quorum has not voted.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the fifth section, as follows:

Sec. 5. That section 3294 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by inserting after the word "casks," in the tenth line thereof, the words "or packages," and by inserting after the word "them," in the tribenth line thereof, the words "or packages," and by inserting after the word "them," in the tribenth line thereof, the words "at the time they were deposited in the distillery warehouse; and said entry shall also specify the number of gauge or wine-gallons, and of proofgallons and taxable gallons contained in said casks or packages at the time application shall be made for the withdrawal thereof."

The Clerk read the following amendment proposed by the commit-

The Clerk read the sixth section, as follows:

Sec. 6. That section 3287 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by striking out all after said number and substituting therefor the following:

"All distilled spirits shall be drawn from the receiving-cisterns into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than ten gallons wine measure, and shall thereupon be gauged, proved, and marked by an internal-revenue gauger, by cutting on the cask or package containing such spirits, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity in wine-gallons and in proof-gallons of the contents of such casks or packages, and by branding or burning on the head of such cask or package in letters of not less than one inch in length; and such brands shall distinctly indicate the particular name of such distilled spirits as known to the trade, that is to say, high wines, alcohol, or spirits, as the case may be; and shall be immediately removed into the distillery warehouse, and the ganger shall, in the presence of the storekeeper of the warehouse, lace upon the head of the cask or package an engraved stamp, which shall be signed by the collector of the district and the storekeeper of the warehouse of the district and the storekeeper and gauger; and shall have written thereon the number of proof-gallons contained therein, the name of the distillery, the date of the receipt in the warehouse, and the serial number of each cask or package, in progressive order, as the same are received from the distillery. Such serial number for every distillery shall be in regular sequence of the serial number thereof, beginning with number one (No. 1) with the first cask or package deposited therein after July 20, 1868, and no two or more casks or packages warehoused at the same distillery shall be marked with the same number. The said stamp shall be as follows:

"United States Storekeeper.

"Attest:

"United States Gauger."

The Clerk read the following amendments proposed by the committee:

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the words "by cutting" and insert the words "who shall cut."

In lines 15, 16, and 17 strike out the words:
"By branding or burning on the head of such cask or package in letters of not less than one inch in length; and such brands shall distinctly indicate."

In line 19, after the words "may be," add the following: "shall be marked or branded on the head of such cask or package in letters of not less than one inch in length;" and after the word "and" add the words "the spirits."

The amendments were agreed to.
The Clerk read the seventh section, as follows:

Sec. 7. That section 3310 of the Revised Statutes be amended by striking out the words "every distiller at the hour of twelve meridian on the third day after that on which his bond is approved," occurring on the first and second lines thereof, and by inserting in lieu thereof the words:

"The first fermenting period of every distiller shall be taken to begin on the day the distiller's bond is approved; and every distiller at the hour of twelve meridian on the last day of such first fermenting period, or at the same hour on any previous day of such fermenting period on which spirits are distilled."

The Clerk read the amendments proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means, as follows:

After the word "Statutes" insert the words "of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the eighth section, as follows:

SEC. 8. That section 3318 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by striking out all that was added to said section by said amendatory act.

The Committee on Ways and Means reported an amendment to strike out the eighth section.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HUNTON. In accordance with an informal agreement between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] and myself, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of allowing the House to take a recess until half past seven o'clock, an evening session having been appointed for the consideration of the District of Columbia

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let us go on till half past four.
Mr. CARLISLE. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that we may go on a little further.
Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 8. That section 6 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by inserting after the word "premises," on the twenty-first line thereof, the following: "And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon the production to him of satisfactory proof of the actual destruction, by accidental fire or other casualty, and without any fraud, collusion, or negligence of the owner thereof, of any distilled spirits, or of any spirits in process of manufacture or distillation, and before the tax thereon had been paid, shall not assess the amount of internal taxes which might accrue thereon.

The Committee on Ways and Means recommended the following amendments:

After the words "negligence of the" strike out the words "owner thereof of any distilled spirits or," and insert in lieu thereof the word "distiller."

Also strike out the words "and before the tax thereon has been paid "and insert in lieu thereof the words "or before removal to the distillery warehouse."

Also at the end of the section strike out the words "amount of internal taxes which might accrue thereon" and insert in lieu thereof the words "distiller for a deficiency in not producing 80 per cent. of the producing capacity of his distillery as established by law when the deficiency is occasioned by such destruction, nor shall he, in such case, assess the tax on the spirits so destroyed."

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to state that these amendments were prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and by him submitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, who recommended their adoption.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 9. That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be repealed.

SEC. 10. That section 3329 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out, after the word "of," in the fifty-sixth line, the word "seventy" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ninety."

The Committee on Ways and Means recommended the following amendment:

Add to section 10 the following:
"And by striking out the words 'in quantities of not less than one thousand gallons,' in the third line thereof and by inserting the word 'packages,' after the word 'casks,' in the fifth line thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. With the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky
[Mr. Carlisle] in charge of this bill I move that the committee now

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will allow us to go on for fifteen minutes longer.

Mr. HUNTON. It is perfectly manifest that this bill cannot be finished this afternoon. A session has been ordered for to-night, and members all around me are clamorous for the committee to rise. I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 70, noes 48.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H.R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue and had come to no resolution thereon.

FISHERIES REPORT FOR 1879.

Mr. WILSON. I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution No. 100, to print extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879, returned from the Senate with its disagreement to the amendment of the House thereto, be now taken from the Speaker's table. My object in making the request is to move that the House insist on its amendment and ask a committee of conference.

There was no objection, and the resolution was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the House insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH CANADA.

Mr. COX. I move that extra copies be printed of the report (No. 1127) of the Committee on Foreign Affairs accompanying the joint resolution (H. R. No. 149) for the appointment of commissioners to ascertain and report a basis for a reciprocity treaty between the United States and the British provinces.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has that report ever been printed?
Mr. COX. It has been printed, but the first print has been exhausted, and I ask to have it reprinted.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. CARLISLE. I ask for an order to reprint House bill No. 4812, to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue, the first print having been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I would inquire what is the order of business for the session to-night?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the session of to-night is for the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia for a codification of the laws relating to this District.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the motion for a recess, Mr. WILBER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolu-tion of the House of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same :

An act (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Du-clozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana;

An act (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two hospital tents to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of the State of Illinois.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. VAN AERNAM, for ten days from Friday next.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JONES asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Hyacinth D. St. Cyr; no adverse report.

Mr. ELLIS asked and obtained unanimous consent that the papers in the claim of Samuel Jamieson be taken from the files of the House and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] that the House now take a

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. BLACK-BURN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

CODE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session of to-night is for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the bill just named.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. Burrows in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia

Mr. HUNTON. When the Committee of the Whole, having under consideration this bill, last rose, the House made an order, at the request of several members, that the remaining sections in regard to taxation should be passed over for the time being, and that we should at this evening's session commence at Title IV, "Public schools," on page 86. The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV-PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

SEC. 239. Every person in the District of Columbia, having under control any child between the ages of eight and fourteen years, shall annually, during the continuance of such control, send such child to some public school in that part of the District in which he shall at the time reside, at least twelve weeks, six of which shall be consecutive, and for every neglect of such duty the party offending shall forfeit to the use of the public schools a sum not exceeding $20, to be recovered before any justice of the peace of the District.

SEC. 240. If, upon the hearing of any case provided for in the preceding section, it shall be made to appear to the justice that the party so offending was not able for any cause to send such child to school, or that the child has been attending any other school for a like period of time, or that the child, by reason of bodily or mental infirmity, was not fit to attend such school, the penalty shall not be enforced.

capes my memory, to page 39, to insert an amendment in the exemption clause. My attention has been called by the Secretary of State to an omission which I wish to correct. The first exemption, in section 131, is "the property of the United States and of the District." I move to amend so as to make that clause read "the property of the United States, of the District, and of foreign governments held for legation purposes." for legation purposes."

Mr. CONGER. Would that include property rented by foreign legations?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; it would apply only to property belonging to foreign governments and used for legation purposes.
Mr. LAPHAM. Why should property owned by foreign governments.

ments be exempted from taxation any more than property rented for legation purposes?

Mr. HUNTON. I have been informed by the Secretary of State in a letter which I received since this question was before the House that property owned by foreign governments has not been taxed heretofore, and that according to the comity of nations such property when used for legation purposes is exempt from taxation. The reasonable market respectively and exempted is that the owner of the son why rented property is not exempted is that the owner of the property pays the taxes.

Mr. LAPHAM. I was looking to see whether we could not get back a little of the five millions and a half of dollars that we paid for a few fish. [Laughter.] Mr. HUNTON.

Mr. HUNTON. I reckon we got that in the Geneva award.
Mr. LOUNSBERY. It seems to me that the clause as now proposed to be amended would not express the sense intended. The clause to which the amendment refers now reads, "first, the property of the United States and of the District." The amendment as reported leaves out the word "and" after "the United States," so that possibly it might be construed that property of the District was not included in the exemption.

Mr. HUNTON. It certainly would not. The clause as proposed to be amended would read:

First, the property of the United States, of the District-

That is, the property of the United States and of the Districtand of foreign governments.

That is, property of foreign governments.

Mr. BARBER. If you leave out the word "and" the construction may be "property of the United States in the District of Columbia."

Mr. HUNTON. With a comma inserted after "United States" and "District," there can be no doubt about the meaning.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suggest that the words "of Columbia" be inserted after "District."

after "District."

Mr. HUNTON. I would have no objection to making that modification, but the gentleman will recollect that near the beginning of this code there is a section which provides that the words "this District" or "the District" shall be construed as equivalent to "the District of Columbia."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is never safe, in my judgment, to allow the construction of an important clause in a statute to depend upon the question whether a comma is or is not in a certain place. While I agree with the gentleman from Virginia that perhaps if the comma be inserted the technical grammatical construction might be as he says, yet it sometimes happens that in printing statutes commas are omitted. We had better make the language plain enough, even if the comma be omitted. I think we had better retain the word "and" after the words "United States." While making the expression em-

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It will then read "property of the United States, and of the District, and of foreign governments."

Mr. HUNTON. I do not think it necessary to retain the word "and,"

and it is hardly grammatical.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is grammatical.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia accept the modification ?

I have no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me that in a bill of this kind we Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me that in a bit of this kind we ought to observe the same rules of composition which we would follow in writing a letter or anything else. I cannot conceive any reason why the conjunction "and" should be inserted after the words "United States." I do not believe any court ever existed, or ever will be created, or can be imagined to exist, which would construe that phrase, "of the District," as relating to the United States, whether there is any comma there or not. I do not think there can whether there is any comma there of not. I do not think shere can be any question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, as modified.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to strike out "and," if that is part of

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. That word "and" is there now, and the mo-tion was made to strike it out, and I move to keep it in. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was accepted by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MITCHELL's amendment to the amendment was adopted. Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be a committee to see that that comma is put there when this law

Mr. Hunton's amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. BARBER. I should like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the term "any other school," in line 5 of section 240, is intended to embrace private schools?

Mr. HUNTON. Unquestionably it is. If a parent is sending his child to any school, then of course the penalty of not sending to the public school ought not to be, and is not by this section, enforced, the object of the section being to require education in some school.

Mr. LAPHAM. Is that broad enough? I ask the gentleman from Virginia to include the class of eaces where private teachers are em-

Virginia to include the class of cases where private teachers are employed.

Mr. HUNTON. Unquestionably.

Mr. LAPHAM. I fear not.
Mr. HUNTON. Undoubtedly it is. It was intended to be.
Mr. LAPHAM. I have no doubt of that. But I doubt whether a single child under the instruction of a private teacher would come within the designation of a person attending school.

Mr. HUNTON. What would you propose?

Mr. HUNTON. What would you propose.
Mr. HUNTON. Some apt word.
Mr. HUNTON. What is the apt word?
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. A comma. [Laughter.]
Mr. BARBER. I move, in line 5, after the word "school," to insert

"or private instruction."

"or private instruction."
Mr. HUNTON. Let me make a suggestion. That in lieu of the words you propose to insert, would it not be better to insert after "any other school" the words "public or private?"
Mr. BARBER. That would be all right.
Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that.
Mr. LAPHAM. I think that would cover it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rose when section 131 was under consideration for the purpose of moving an amendment to section consideration for the purpose of moving an amendment to section 239. I do not understand that section has yet been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 239 has been passed; but, if there be no objection, as soon as the pending amendment is disposed of the Chair will hear the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rose to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers that, and will recognize the gentleman when the pending amendment has been acted on.

Mr. ROBINSON. Read the pending amendment. Mr. Barber's amendment was read, as follows:

Line 5, section 240, after the word "school," insert the words "public or pri-

Mr. ROBINSON. That would be right provided there are public schools which are not supported by the District, and if there are no public schools apart from the Distict schools, then the word "public" is plainly out of place, because you are here, in this bill, requiring children to attend public schools, and then you say instead of attendance on public schools you will accept attendance elsewhere or an excuse of mental or bodily infirmity. You are providing under what circumstances the child may not be compelled to attend public schools, therefore the word "public" is quite out of place as I look at it, and I think some apt word or a comma ought to be inserted. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARBER. Section 239 provides that the child shall be sent to some public school in that part of the District in which he shall at the time reside, and this is contradistinguished from that.

Mr. BARBER's amendment was rejected.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move, in section 239, to strike out the following words:

And for every neglect of such duty the party offending shall forfeit to the use of the public schools a sum not exceeding $20, to be recovered before any justice of the peace of the District.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back to that section and receiving the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It will be observed by the committee that section 240 relieves the parent from the penalty prescribed in section 239, if the child labors under bodily or mental infirmity. But the parent may be laboring under mental or bodily infirmity and may require the services of the child.

Now, sir, I am in favor of education, but I want no education but that which society and the necessities of mankind compel. I want no education that the law compels. Let the parent be the judge of whether his child is necessary to take care of him, to minister to his wants in his old age, to nurse him in his infirmity, and not let the law say that because the child is infirm the parent shall be exempt from the penalty attached, when the infirmity of the parent should exempt him when he keeps his child at home from school to care for him in his old age, or want, arising from sickness or otherwise. I think the section is imposing or will impose a very great and unnecessary hardship upon many persons who necessarily keep their children at home to wait upon them in cases of infirmity or sickness, who ought not to be subject to that provision because their infirmity necessitates the attendance of their children perhaps at their bedside. I hope therefore the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I will say to my friend from Illinois that if it be the judgment of the committee that the last portion of this section should be stricken out, then the whole section ought to be stricken out, because it is not worth while to declare by statute that the parent should send his children to school if he is not required to send them, or if there is no penalty attaching to it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. The statute in that event would be directory; that is a very good thing often.

Mr. HUNTON. But I say there would be no sense in requiring a

Mr. HUNTON. But I say there would be no sense in requiring a thing to be done if there is no forfeit or penalty attached to its violation. If my friend is right in his views all the District ought to do would be to open the school and allow the children to come in or not to come as they pleased, or as their parents pleased. The main point in this matter is as to whether it is proper in a government to say that the parents must, to some extent, educate their children, and I for one, sir, think it is probably right that the Government should require parents to send their children to school for a certain portion of the time at least, for the purpose of educating them, to fit them for the duties of citizenship, and for the purpose of preventing the increase of of citizenship, and for the purpose of preventing the increase of criminals and paupers upon the community.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know whether it is necessary to move an amendment or not.

The time for debate on the amendment is not The CHAIRMAN.

yet exhausted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that perhaps he will find relief for the objection which he urges in lines 2, 3, and 4 of the next section of this bill, where it is provided that if it shall be made to appear to the justice that the party so offending was not able for any cause to send such child to school, &c. Mr. HUNTON.

Mr. HUNTON. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. That I say seems to be in the nature of relief in such cases as the gentleman from Illinois has mentioned as probably ones of hardship which might arise under this bill. But coming to the purpose of this section I believe that a community that undertakes to support public schools and to provide free education for the children has the right also, and that it is a duty which that commuchildren has the right also, and that it is a duty which that community is called upon to perform, to see that the children attend the schools and receive the education which is offered to them. One of the best foundations for our free institutions is undoubtedly to be found in the education of the young; and if we open the school-doors and provide every convenience and advantage for the children, we undoubtedly have the right to impose upon the parents and those in charge of the children the duty of sending them at least for a time to the schools. Is it a hardship? Is it that I am taxed to furnish the fund out of which my neighbor's children shall be educated and I have no interest in it? The interest of every one that regards the peace and good order of the community in which he lives, and of society at large, is closely involved in the education of the youth who are to be the coming generation.

I know my friend from Illinois is in full accord with that. section of this bill which provides relief for the objections he urges covers fully the point that he makes and leaves the section complete in its operation as to children where no such objections exist. The State of Massachusetts has had this species of school legislation for a great many years and has to-day classes—if I may use the word in no odious sense—we have all grades of property in our State—but all are compelled for a certain portion of the year to send their children into the public schools or to some school which is approved by the school committees. For instance, the Catholic children, many of them, are educated in strictly Catholic schools, and the school committees approve of them, for it is in accordance with the wish of the parents. I sincerely hope that in this capital of the country we will take no backward steps in this regard. Let us take a forward step if necessary. Surely we cannot go far wrong if we require all the children to go to the schools for the short time, only twelve weeks, prescribed in this bill. That is all that is required. That is not a great hardship upon anybody. Thus all are enabled to derive the covers fully the point that he makes and leaves the section complete great hardship upon anybody. Thus all are enabled to derive the benefit of the public schools, and the effect will be to produce better men and better women and better citizens, and the country will be all the safer twenty five or fifty years beneg men and better women and better citizens, and the country will be all the safer twenty-five or fifty years hence.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has any objection to parents having a private tutor for their children and not send them to school at all? them to school at all?

Mr. ROBINSON. Not at all. That is provided for in the next section.

Mr. SPRINGER. Where 7 I would like to hear it.
Mr. ROBINSON. Let the gentleman read the next section. That point has been commented upon already.

Mr. SPRINGER. I find in the next section these words:

Or that the child has been attending any other school.

Mr. ROBINSON. If those words are not broad enough it has been agreed by the chairman of the committee to accept any words broad enough to cover private instruction. If the words are not broad enough let the gentleman from Illinois suggest what will answer the

Mr. HUNTON. An amendment offered for that purpose has been voted down.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am aware that under the rules I am not permitted to make any further remarks; but if there be no objection I desire to answer my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. Rob-Inson,] with whom I agree in the main.

I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to imposing a penalty upon any poor man whose children must necessarily be educated at a public school. Public schools were intended and should be preserved for the purpose of educating the children of those who are unable to educate them themselves, and to impose a penalty upon the parent whose infirmity may require the presence of his child at home is wrong.

firmity may require the presence of his child at home is wrong.

I am opposed to the general doctrine of compulsory education. This is all wrong. It ought not to be tolerated by Congress, even if the States of this Union may all have adopted it. Congress is now legislating for the District of Columbia alone, and what States may do may be improper to be done for the District of Columbia. But even if it were proper and within the sphere of the power of Congress to do this thing, which I shall not discuss or deny, still I say it is wrong to impose upon the people of the District of Columbia the obligation to send their children to the public schools, whether they can or cannot afford to have their children away from their homes and from attending to themselves, the necessity of which we see evidenced every day by the little children running around selling newspapers, &c., to maintain their poor parents.

I have no objection to an amendment which will relieve the parent

I have no objection to an amendment which will relieve the parent in any way from this penalty. My friend from Massachusetts has referred to the provision in section 240:

If upon the hearing of any case provided for in the preceding section it shall be made to appear to the justice that the party so offending was not able for any cause to send such child to school.

Not able from any cause. What does that mean? It means if he is not able to furnish him with clothes, with shoes, with stockings and all these things. But suppose he had no ability himself to send the child or ability to take care of himself. The inability I speak of is not in regard to sending the child, but in regard to taking care of himself. Therefore the penalty is all wrong and should be stricken out. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out the last word.

I think the difficulty which the gentleman from Illinois labors under can be very easily disposed of. The only part of the section he objects to is that which imposes a penalty.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That is all.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. We have been informed repeatedly that this is a "perfect" code of law. Now, every perfect code of laws has a general provision imposing a penalty for the breach of such portions of it as have no specific penalty attached to them. Generally it is made a misdemeanor. So that when you get through with this code, if it is not in already, it will be put in, that every offense specified in the code for which no specific penalty is provided shall be a misdemeanor; and if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois prevails he will find the people in whose interest he speaks, much worse off when they come before the court to answer for a misdemeanor than if they had to never a repeated of the court to answer for a misdemeanor. worse off when they come before the court to answer for a misde-meanor than if they had to pay a penalty of $20 or under. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS.]

I understand the gentleman from New York to take the floor in advocacy of penalties. It seems to me that a school law is the very conditional control of the seems to me that a school law is the very good deel of worst place to load up with penal statutes. I have a good deal of sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Singleton.] I know that if we enter upon the discussion of the question of compulsory education we open a very wide field of discussion indeed. I have never been an advocate of compulsory educations of the compulsory education we open a very wide field of discussion indeed. I have never been an advocate of compulsory education we open a very wide field of discussion indeed. tion. The best public men we have had, the most successful men in business, in art, and in science, have been self-made men, men who were not forced into an artificial curriculum of a public school, but were not forced into an artificial curriculum of a public school, but men who by their own volition, while engaged it may be in work, have laid the foundation for a noble public or private career.

I have always distrusted these statutes, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] who has charge of this bill exactly where he picked out this code of compulsory education; whether he took it from the laws of Connecticut, or Massachusetts, or some other of the New England States, or whether he took it from a statute in New York which has not been enforced at all, but stands on the statute-book as the deadest of dead-letter statutes in that States?

State?

Mr. HUNTON. I will tell the gentleman if he will allow me.
Mr. LOUNSBERY. Of course this is not a matter to show any special feeling about. I am satisfied that among the population of the District of Columbia a compulsory-education law will be a dead

Mr. HUNTON. Will my friend allow me to answer his question?
Mr. LOUNSBERY. Certainly.
Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman asked me where I picked up this law, whether in Massachusetts or in New York. I will answer my friend that we took it from the laws of the District of Columbia that friend that we took it from the laws of the District of Columbia that have been in force for sixteen years.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Enforced?

Mr. HUNTON. In force for sixteen years.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Not enforced; you are mistaken in that, I think.

Mr. HUNTON. I say in force.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. You mean enacted, not enforced.

Mr. HUNTON. I say the law has been in force for sixteen years in this District, without one single murmur of complaint from the neonle. people.
Mr. LOUNSBERY. Is my time running on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. For a question; not for a speech.

Mr. HUNTON. I am not making a speech; I am giving you an nswer to your question.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I have not completed my argument against this compulsory-education provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman decline to yield further?

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Not if I can have other time in which to conclude my argument.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well; go on.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. There is a mistaken view in regard to the meaning of education. That is to say, it is a mistake to believe that meaning of education. That is to say, it is a mistake to believe that education means instruction in the course of learning which is prescribed in any public school. There is a more useful education than that; and that is what I mean by education, and it is the true meaning. I ask gentlemen here to turn their attention to persons educated in art. Look at Switzerland, where the finest watches are made to-day, where the art has been perfected so that the eye is instructed, the fingers are instructed, the mind is instructed in a particular art, which no man can learn except he commences at the very beginning when he is a boy and continues to the time he is an old man.

which no man can tear rexcept he commences at the very regiment, when he is a boy and continues to the time he is an old man.

Now, I ask whether gentlemen here believe it is a wise thing for the Government to compel a boy born of a generation of watch-makers to be drawn out of the direction where nature and hereditary instincts to be drawn out of the direction where nature and hereditary instincts have carried him, and to be forced by a penalty to acquire the kind of learning prescribed by public schools, to which he is disinclined by nature and by his hereditary instincts, and thereby instead of making him one of the most useful men in arts make him a trouble-some, boisterous, and disagreeable man in society, inflamed by an ambition for a place for which he is not fitted, and make him a charge upon instead of a help to the community?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Does the gentleman state that the Swiss watch-makers never on to school watch-makers never go to school.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. Van Voorhis] withdraw his amendment?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I withdraw it.

Mr. HUNTON. I renew the amendment. I am not particular about this matter of compulsory education. But when the committee came to codify the laws of the District they found the law under consideration on the statute-books, enacted in 1864, and there was not a murmur of complaint about it before the committee. I will read the

Every person in the District of Columbia, having under control any child be-tween the ages of eight and fourteen years, shall annually, during the continuance of such control, send such child to some public school in that part of the District in which he shall at the time reside, at least twelve weeks, six of which shall be consecutive, and for every neglect of such duty the party offending shall forfeitto the use of the school in that portion of the District in which he resides a sum not exceeding $20, to be recovered before any justice of the peace of the District. is not a word or syllable changed in that law.

There is not a word or syllable changed in that law.

Mr. SHELLEY. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia if he knows of any instance in which this law has been enforced?

Mr. HUNTON. I am not inquiring into that. It is our duty to enact the law; it is the duty of other parties to enforce it.

Mr. SHELLEY. I would inquire of the gentleman whether if this law should be enforced rigidly there are school facilities enough in this District provided by Congress or by the district to accommodate all the children of the District.

Mr. HUNTON. No child has been refused admission to the public schools.

schools

Mr. SHELLEY. My information is different; I have known of Mr. SHELLEY. My information is different; I have known of children being refused.
Mr. HUNTON. That would be a good excuse from the penalty imposed by this section for non-attendance.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON.]
Mr. SPARKS. What is that amendment?
The CHAIRMAN. It is to strike out of section 239 the words which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And for every neglect of such duty the party offending shall forfeit to the use of the public schools a sum not exceeding $20, to be recovered before any justice of the peace of the District.

of the peace of the District.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and upon adivision—ayes 14, noes 27—it was not agreed to.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I move to amend section 40 by inserting after the words "or that the child has been attending any other school" the words "or is being instructed by a private tutor."

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I move to further amend the section by inserting after the words "or unless the child is earning wages upon which the parent is relying for support."

Mr. HUNTON. Any case of that sort is provided for now in the first part of section 240, which is as follows:

If, upon the hearing of any case provided for in the preceding section, it shall be made to appear to the justice that the party so offending was not able for any cause to send such child to school, &c.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I would like to say a word in defense of the amendment. I do not find that this proposition is covered by the text of the bill as it stands; and I offer it so that we shall not have the District of Columbia supporting a parent by charity while a child that could earn wages for the support of that parent is prevented from doing so by a law compulsorily requiring attendance at a public school.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment opens the door very wide. If it said "earning wages necessary for the parent's support" it might not be objectionable, though I think it would do no more than the bill already provides for.

The amendment of Mr. Lounsbery was not agreed to, there being—ayes 13, noes 25.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I suggest that in order to make line 7 harmonize with line 5 the words "or receive such private instruction" should be inserted after the word "school" in the seventh line.

Mr. HUNTON. That is right.
The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 241. The trustees or school board having charge of public schools in the District may make such arrangements for the purpose of ascertaining whether any children within the ages prescribed by law are not attending the public schools, as they shall deem best for the purpose of enforcing the attendance of such children upon said schools, under the provisions of the two preceding sections.

Mr. SPRINGER. For the sake of asking a question, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I desire to understand whether this section authorizes the trustees of the public schools to make arrangements for ascertaining whether any children between the ages prescribed by law are not attending the public schools? Children are not required absolutely to attend public schools; they may have private tuition or may attend a private school. Why not simply authorize the trustees to ascertain whether the provisions of this act are complied with?

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman will find that his objection is

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman will find that his objection is met by the two preceding sections.

Mr. SPRINGER. The provision made in the preceding section applies only when a person is being prosecuted before a justice of the peace, when he may plead certain things in justification of keeping his child away from the public schools.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if he will move to insert the words "or other" between the word "public" and the word "schools," it will carry out his idea.

Mr. LAPHAM. The two preceding sections meet the whole difficulty.

Mr. SPRINGER. Those sections would not have force until some parent had been prosecuted and brought before a justice of the peace.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his amendment?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 242. No child shall be admitted into the public schools who shall not have been duly vaccinated, or otherwise protected against the small-pox.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to amend by striking out the last two words f this section. I wish to inquire of the honorable chairman of the of this section. District Committee whether there is any provision in this bill mak-

In this bill making an appropriation for vaccination?

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I mean specifically for vaccination.

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir. The physicians of the poor are required to vaccinate whenever called upon; and during the recent alarm about small-pox thousands of children were vaccinated in this city without charge.

Mr. SPARKS. A portion of the appropriation in the Indian bill might be taken for this purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I was about to say that as this House decided the other day by a very emphatic majority that there should be a specific appropriation for the vaccination of certain kinds of animals in the West, I wanted to be sure that we had an equally specific provision for our own race here in our midst.

I think there ought to be an amendment to this section. It now reads, "No child shall be admitted into the public schools." I do not know but that an amendment ought to come in right there so as to make the section read:

No child shall be admitted into the public schools or into the corridors of the Capitol or the galleries of the House of Representatives without being vaccinated. Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman might provide that no member shall be admitted unless vaccinated.

shall be admitted unless vaccinated.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want these children to come into contact with members without previous vaccination.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. They do not come in contact with members by coming into the galleries.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, if my friend mixes with his constituents in the same way as most members of Congress do with theirs just before election time, he knows that a member of Congress comes in pretty close contact with all kinds of people. If members of this House had seen my friend last week, when he was home "fixing up his fences," they would have thought that his constituents were very close to him. Now it is a well known fact within the experience of every man here that you cannot leave this Capitol to-night and walk the length of Pennsylvania avenue without being solicited at almost every corner by mere children for alms—for money, for bread, for the means of sustaining life. I do not know but there is something in this bill—I have not had time to read it—and I should like to ask the chairman whether there is anything in the bill which prevents this kind of abuse, for I call it abuse; yes, it is an abuse of children.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the gentleman from New York. I do not suppose that the District commissioners have the slightest right on the earth to control ingress and egress of this Capitol. It would be a singular anomaly for a little district government to say who should come into the Capitol of the United States and who should not. If the gentleman desires to enter upon such legislation as that, I will say to him such a thing was certainly foreign to the intention of the committee. of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not ask my friend from Virginia any such question about the Capitol. I asked him whether there was anything in this bill to prevent begging on the public streets in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I understood him to ask whether there was anything in this bill to prevent egress or ingress to this Capitol.

Mr. BAILEY. What I wished to know was whether there was anything here to prevent this general street-begging, which is an abuse.

Mr. HUNTON. There is a vagrant law, the nearest we can get to it

Mr. BAILEY. Is that incorporated in this bill?
Mr. HUNTON. It is.
Mr. BAILEY. I think it will be a great shame to this American nation when such street begging exists in this capital if we should adjourn without enacting some law to prevent such begging on every corner in the national capital. If these people are poor let us make an appropriation for them. If they wish to be vaccinated, why let us vaccinate them. [Laughter.] But do not let us be interrupted and overhauled by these young American citizens on all the corners and overhauled by these young American citizens on all the corners of the streets and upon every broad, wide, avenue of the capital day after day and week after week, with importunity for alms. I appeal now to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia who has a great, big, large heart, and who lives so near this District on the shores of the Potomac, to frame something and to put it into this bill, which will prevent what I call a great abuse.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Does he withdraw his formal amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to strike out section 242.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under section 240 the only excuse which a parent can give to exempt himself from the fine imposed by section 239 is bodily or mental infirmity of the child. Under section 242 no

239 is bodily or mental infirmity of the child. Under section 242 no child shall be admitted into the public schools who shall not be duly vaccinated. Do the commissioners, or does the committee which has reported this bill, mean to say that persons who have not been vaccinated are mentally or bodily infirm? Certainly not. Then the child is not admissible, although he may be of sound body or mind, if he has not been vaccinated.

And the gentleman from New York has well remarked that there And the gentleman from New York has well remarked that there is no reason why the same rule should not be applied to this House. Are we not entitled to protection against contagion as much as the schools of the District? Why should these galleries be occupied by unvaccinated persons, [laughter,] by persons who may convey contagion to this House? Why should not Congress protect itself as well as the schools of this District?

I think the section for these research should be stricken out. It is

I think the section, for these reasons, should be stricken out. It is in the interest of the doctors and not in the interest of health at all. It is in the interest of doctors to give them employment in vaccinaon. [Laughter.]
Mr. HENKLE. It is perhaps my misfortune, Mr. Chairman, to be a doctor.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he has ever been vaccinated? If he has, he is protected against the galleries.

Mr. HENKLE. I should like to say, if the public can stand it, the doctors can stand it. For the more there are of people who are not vaccinated the more business there will be for the medical profession.

It seems to me however very strange that it is necessary to defend

It seems to me, however, very strange that it is necessary to defend a provision so obviously proper as this which is contained in this section. I believe a similar provision exists in every public-school law in every State of the Union; and if it does not it ought to. Smallpox is a highly contagious disease. That you all know. Children come from every part of the city, from every grade and condition of life, to these public schools, where they have frequent and close intercourse, and contagious diseases in that way are spread throughout the community as well now several frequency and contagious diseases. out the community—small-pox, scarlet-fever, measles, every kind and character of contagious disease. The common law of self-protection, common-sense, would seem to indicate to us, it seems to me, that whatever can be done for the protection of the public against the ravages and spread of a deadly, loathsome, contagious disease, should, in God's name, be done.

Some object to the compulsory feature. If not made compulsory the beneficial effects are lost. There is no hardship upon the poor, because vaccination is provided for at the public expense. In some countries where vaccination has been enforced and made compulsory small-pox has been almost entirely exterminated.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask my friend, although vaccination is provided at the public expense, whether doctors do not get paid at the same time?

Mr. HENKLE. The doctor gets his pay out of the public, not out

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It does not matter; he gets his pay

Mr. HENKLE. This is not a hardship upon the parent or the scholar who is required to be vaccinated, because, I say, it is paid for at the public expense

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow me to ask him a question; and that is, whether or not medical men do not differ him a question; and that is, whether or not medical men do not differ on the subject of vaccination, as to its propriety?

Mr. HENKLE. Yes, sir; there is a difference of opinion.

Mr. SPARKS. If that be so, you compel all persons to be vaccinated. They are compelled according to this bill to be sent to school, and if they do not go to school they are liable to penalties. You compel them if they do go to school, however, to be vaccinated whether they object to it or not. Therefore you make vaccination compulsory. Now, it is a well-known fact that there are objections on the part of many people to the vaccine virus being infused into the systems of their children. Is not that running compulsory education and vaccination children. Is not that running compulsory education and vaccination and all that a little too strong? I do not object to it myself, I merely suggest that other people do object to it.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then, they can apply that other protection that is circuit this section.

is given in this section.

Mr. SPARKS. What is that?

Mr. LAPHAM. The section provides "or otherwise protected" against small-pox.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York how they can be otherwise protected?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENKLE. I hope my time will not be cut off, as I yielded to gentlemen to ask questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 244. The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall maintain public free schools for the education of all the children within said District between the ages of six and seventeen years, and may continue to provide separate schools for white and for colored children, and to cause necessary books and stationery to be furnished free of charge to destitute pupils attending the public schools. They shall divide the trustees of public schools of said District into three classes, one of which shall go out of office on the 30th day of June of each year; and all appointments of trustees hereafter made, except to fill unexpired terms, shall be for the term of three years unless sooner removed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "years" in line 4 of this section, the following words: "Except such as have not been vaccinated;" so that if amended the

The commissioners of the District of Columbia shall maintain public free schools for the education of all the children within said District between the ages of six and seventeen years, except such as have not been vaccinated, &c.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to strike out the word "may" in line 4 of this section and insert the word "shall."

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say a word upon that before the vote was taken.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask if debate is in order after the vote has been taken and the amendment has been disagreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from New York, and did not suppose he desired to debate the amendment. The Chair thinks he should have the right to do so, as he offered it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I was not off my feet, and it was my intention to have given the reasons for the amendment which I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman spoke so low that the Chair did not understand him; but will now hear the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. LAPHAM. The committee will see by reference to section 263 of this bill that sections 306, 307, and 308 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia are proposed to be repealed. Now, I desire to call attention to these sections. Sections 306 of the statutes for the District is in the following words: tion 306 of the statutes for the District is in the following words:

SEC. 306. It shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the District to set apart each year from the whole fund received from all sources by such authorities applicable to purposes of public education in the cities of Washington and Georgetown such a proportionate part of all moneys received or expended for school or educational purposes in said cities, including the cost of sites, buildings, improvements, furniture, and books, and all other expenditures on account of schools, as the colored children between the ages of six and seventeen years in the respective cities bear to the whole number of children, white and colored, between the same ages, for the purpose of establishing and sustaining public schools in said cities for the education of colored children; and such proportion shall be ascertained by the last reported census of the population of said cities made prior to such appointment, and shall be regulated at all times thereby.

Section 307 provides that the proportion of school money to be set apart for colored schools shall be kept as a fund distinct from the general school fund and shall be paid to the treasurer of the board of trustees of schools for colored children; and section 308 gives the trustees the right to maintain an action of debt in the supreme court of the District against the District for the non-payment of any sum of money arising under the provisions of the preceding section. In other words, it gives a remedy for enforcing the payment of such other words, it gives a remedy for enforcing the payment of such sums of money as are therein provided.

Now, the trustee of one of the schools of this District, himself a colored man, has called my attention to the importance of this change which proposes to strike out entirely the existing system of education in this District in that respect, which he says has worked well for a long time and which it is desired by the people, as he understands it, to continue. The proposed section blots out all of that law and leaves it merely optional with the commissioners of the District of Columbia to continue such schools or not, as they may see proper.

Columbia to continue such schools or not, as they may see proper. They may continue them, but it is not compulsory.

I shall also, in line 5, after the word "children," propose to amend by inserting "as now provided by law;" so that when we come to the other section, proposing to strike out these three sections that I have named, I shall ask to exempt them from the operation of this law and leave them in force as at present leave them in force as at present.

Mr. HUNTON. I trust my friend will not insist upon the last portion of his amendment, because the design of this code is to furnish a full, complete law; and if he puts in the clause "as now provided by law," that would embrace all the law as in existence to day, or by law," that would embrace all the law as in existence to-day, or when this code goes into operation in the future. If there is any amendment to carry out the views of my friend from New York I hope it, will appear in the code, and not refer to laws outside of it. We want it all in the code and have no reference to outside laws.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask a division of the question.

Mr. CONGER. I dislike to incorporate into the law of this District a provision passed by the Congress of the United States that shall, without any reference to the future or to the choice of the people compel in every school district in the District of Columbia a sen-ple, compel in every school district in the District of Columbia a separate school. There may be portions of the District where there are arate school. There may be portions of the District where there are not scholars enough of one or the other of the races to make up the proportion necessary to maintain a separate school.

Mr. SPARKS. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not look at this side of the House. That amendment did not come from us; the gentleman from New York offered it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I know the gentleman from New York offered the amendment, but I look to that side of the House to support it, and therefore my argument is addressed there. Now, it appears to me that my friend from New York may perhaps be in a humorous way to-night and endeavors in this manner to draw fire on the enemy. I trust that is all he intends. [Laughter.] trust that is all he intends. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAPHAM. I will repeat in my own justification that a colored citizen of this District, himself a member of the board of trustees of the public schools, and an active and intelligent member, called my attention to this matter and asked me to bring it to the attention of the House. He says that the system in operation has worked well and has given entire satisfaction.

Mr. CONGER. I can very well understand how the colored trusmr. CONCER. I can very well understand how the colored trustee, with the present law giving equal advantages to the colored children with the white, would desire that law should not be repealed if it is to be repealed by subsequent sections. But I dislike that the representatives of the people of the United States shall here in the District, solely under the control of Congress, make a compulsory law separating the children on account of their color, making it in some parts of the District impossible to give advantages to colored children where there may be too few of them in the school district or that part of the District in which they live to keep up a separate school.

The time I believe will come when such distinctions as still linger, arising out of the old feelings and prejudices connected with former institutions in this country, will be entirely done away, and when such a law as this, a compulsory law, making separate schools for the children of the District of different colors, will be looked upon as a thing of old and barbarous times. I will not help, myself, to keep up that distinction any larger.

thing of old and barbarous times. I will not help, myself, to keep up that distinction any longer.

Republicans profess to believe that the great point gained in this country to-day over all the past is the absolute equality of American citizenship for old, for young, for middle-aged, for children. Around that point we rally in all our political movements. Against that proposition the prejudices of the past are rallying and striving to linger in our land. I for one, sir, will not be a party to any legislation whatever that will prevent by statute our reaching the time as speedily as possible when that grandest of all principles asserted in our Constitution and in our laws, the equality of citizenship of all classes, colors, and nationalities that come into our land, shall finally be asserted and acknowledged by all. For that reason I oppose this be asserted and acknowledged by all. For that reason I oppose this proposition to make it compulsory to keep up these separate schools. It is enough that it is left as it is now until the prejudices and the passions of men have passed away and equal justice prevails over the land.

land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPARKS. I was apprehensive, when my friend from New York

[Mr. LAPHAM] offered that amendment, that it was going to stir up something like a hornet's nest here. He doubtless relied to a certain extent on this side of the House to aid him in its adoption, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] is therefore correct in his assertion that he did so. Now I feel very much disposed to aid him in securing its adoption, and I think there are very good reasons for doing so. I presume that it was fated that we had to have this speech from the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] to which we have just listened, on the absolute and perfect equality of the races, and on the rights of the colored man, and all that, in connection with this inoffensive little amendment making it obligatory upon the school trustees of the District to provide separate schools for white and colored children.

I have not consulted with any of the colored people of this District upon that subject; but the gentleman from New York who offered the amendment has stated that he has done so, and that an intelli-gent colored school trustee has informed him that that system when adopted here has worked admirably and that the colored people specially desired it. Now, in view of this desire on their part, I ask the gentleman from Michigan if he is more friendly to the colored man than the colored man is to himself? If the colored people object to this mixing themselves and desire that there shall be separate schools and mixing themselves and desire that there shall be separate schools and object to sending their children to the same school with the whites, why should my friend from Michigan insist that they shall be compelled to do so? We are told by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] that the colored people of this District desire separate schools, and through their intelligent representative make that desire known here. Then, if they object, is it fair in us to force them to be put on this equality, they themselves protesting against

In other words, if my friend from Michigan has any children to send to school here and the colored children of this District put on airs and object to going to the same school with his children, I do not want to force them to go there with his children or with any other white children. I do not think it fair to do so. If our colored friends will not associate with us in the schools or elsewhere, but refuse to carry out this grand republican idea of equality fairly and of their own choice, I am not for forcing them to do it. I regard it as anti-own choice, I am not for forcing them to do it. I regard it as antidemocratic to force them.

I believe with the gentleman from New York, and his intelligent friend who represents the colored people, that it is well to let them, having equal facilities, march on in the effort and thirst for knowledge separate and apart if they desire it. I was against the compulsory education clause in this bill; I was also against the compulsory vaccination clause; and I am equally against forcing colored children to attend school with white children, especially so if, as on this occasion, they themselves object, through their intelligent representative, to doing so. That, I believe, is all that I wish to say at present on this amendment. amendment

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to strike out the last word. I find this legislation to which I have referred adopted mainly in the year 1866. Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. How can the gentleman from New York move to strike out the last word of an amendment when there is but one word in it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he is mistaken as to the character of the amendment. are several words in it.

Mr. LAPHAM. My friend from Illinois [Mr. Singleton] appears to be as keen to-night as a blade used for vaccination.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the point of order that a gentleman having offered one amendment, which is pending, cannot offer another until that is disposed of.

Mr. SPRINGER. To solve this difficulty I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Labyen] LAPHAM. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have no desire to inflict a speech upon the committee if there is any objection to it. I merely want to say one word in reference to the history of this legislation. It seems to have been enacted mainly in 1866, and has been in operation for a period of nearly fourteen years.

Now, if this were an original question I might take the same view of it, and as a general thing I should take the same view of it, that has been suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] But the population of this District is peculiar in this respect: it is differently situated from the generality of other populations in the country, in the different States. I have no feeling or desire with respect to this matter, but I was led to make this suggestion by an officer who has been acquainted with the operation of this law from the time it was enacted and who regrets the effort made in the pending bill to blot it cont ing bill to blot it out.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM.]

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division of the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. The suggestion that there should be a division of the amendment appears to me to be a very proper one. I think we should look at this matter seriously now, leaving out of view out-

Mr. SPARKS. I was very serious in what I said about it.
Mr. ROBINSON. There is a direct purpose in this thing, and it appears to me we should not have the word "shall," but the word "may," What is the object aimed at? If I understand the gentleman from New York it is that the provisions of sections 306, 307, and 308 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, shall be in some way enacted in this code. That is to say, a proportionate part of the money shall go for the benefit of the colored children, as well as for the white children. Now, we all agree to that. I do not think there is a gentleman on this floor who would say that we should not give the colored child proportionately as much schooling as we give give the colored child proportionately as much schooling as we give a white child. I suppose that is the object of the amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM. Section 263 of this bill proposes to repeal among other sections this section of the present law.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is very true. But I submit to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] that he will not accomplish his object by changing the word "may" into "shall." I do not think anybody wants to say that the trustees shall continue to provide separate schools. The word "may" is enough. The sentiment of the District will continue the present practice. There is no question now but that we should not say peremptorily "shall," but leave it "may;" that will suit the feelings and prejudices of all.

Now, in regard to the second amendment of the gentleman. I wish to say that if the gentleman should withdraw his second amendment some provision should be inserted, providing that so long as separate some provision should be inserted, providing that so long as separate schools for the white and for the colored children shall be maintained schools for the white and for the colored children shall be maintained the money shall be expended proportionately to the number of children in the form provided by this section. I have not had time to write out the amendment. That will answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hunton] that we should keep the code entire, using only such language as will secure the proportionate expenditure of the money for this purpose.

Mr. HUNTON. If the trustees have to provide schools equally for the whites and for the blacks—

Mr. ROBINSON That is not if

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not it.
Mr. HUNTON. Yes, it is. If the trustees provide schools equally for the whites and the blacks, provide separate schools as long as that provision is in existence, how can there be a disproportion of the expenditure

Mr. ROBINSON. For myself I do not believe that any board of trustees in this District will ever undertake to run the public schools so as to discriminate against the colored children.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.
Mr. ROBINSON. And if they desired to do so, they would not do it for six months consecutively before they would have a voice in their ears that would bring them to their senses. I do not think there is any necessity for this amendment to avoid the trouble which there is any necessity for this amendment to avoid the trouble which my friend seems to anticipate for the colored children.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Lapham to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" and upon a division there were—ayes 21, noes 19.

Before the result of the vote was announced,
Mr. CONGER said: I dislike very much to do it, but if this is the way that a small number of members of this House propose to deal with this subject, then I think we have gone far enough for to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. What point does the gentleman make?

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

voted.

Mr. HUNTON. I trust the gentleman will withdraw that point of order. If I can get the attention of the committee I would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] to withdraw his point of order, and then to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to withdraw his amendment, for I do not think it would make a bit of difference.

Mr. SPARKS. He cannot withdraw it; it has been adopted.
Mr. HUNTON. It cannot be adopted when there is no quorum voting on it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for tellers.

Mr. HUNTON. The amendment could not be adopted when the question of a quorum is raised. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] to withdraw his point of order, and to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] to withdraw his amend-

Mr. CONGER. I have no desire to stop the progress of the consideration of this bill. But if with this small attendance of members any material change, such as I consider this amendment to be, is to be made so as to become a fixture in this bill, then I think we had better have a full House before we vote upon it.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from Michigan agree to my proposition?

Mr. LAPHAM. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that my amendment simply proposes to keep the law as it now is. It does not propose to create any new distinction. If it did CONGER; that my amendment simply proposes to keep the law as it now is. It does not propose to create any new distinction. If it did I would not ask it.

Mr. CONGER. My own desire would be to remove such laws as that as far as possible.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me suggest that if this amendment is regarded as adopted it will be reported to the House, and in the House any member can call for a separate vote upon it, and for the yeas any member can call for a separate vote upon it, and for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. LAPHAM. My object was to call the attention of the committee to this subject, with a view to ascertain what ideas were entained by the proposers of this code. If there is unanimous consent, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. An objection cannot prevent the withdrawal of an amendment before a decision upon it. There has been no vote upon this amendment which the Chair can recognize as a decision of the this amendment which the Chair can recognize as a decision of the question, because the point of order is made that there was no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been voted upon.

Mr. CONGER. But the rule with regard to the withdrawal of an amendment says that it can be withdrawn "before a decision."

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to reconsider cannot be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I raise the point of order that tellers having been called for, the true way to settle this matter is to have tellers. The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, and the point of order having been made that no quorum voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Hunton, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CONGER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there

Mr. CONGER, (one of the tellers.) If this amendment be regarded as not adopted, I will, at the request of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Hunton,] withdraw the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SPARKS. I renew the point that no quorum has voted. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it in order to move that the committee rise? The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make that motion.

Mr. AIKEN. Let the roll be called and absent members put on record.

The committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the Chair, Mr. Burrows reported that the Committee of the Whole, having under consideration the bill (H. R. Reagan.

Kelley,

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the House now adjourn.
Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment, in order that I may make a remark or two.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I waive the motion for the present.
Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I trust there will be no effort made here to-night to send for absentees. We are aware that no quorum can be brought here to-night. I had hoped that this bill would go through without that point of order being raised. If this code for the District of Columbia cannot be considered in Com-mittee of the Whole without a quorum, it amounts to an abandon-ment of the code for this session. It is of the highest importance that this municipal code for the District should be adopted. The Committee on the District of Columbia has spent months of labor upon it; and while doubtless, as prepared by the committee, it contains imperfections, it is so great an improvement upon the present laws of the District that it is very important it shall be adopted. In the two meetings of the House heretofore held upon this bill, we have gone on with a degree of rapidity and business-like application exceedingly gratifying to me. To-night the House, for some cause or other, seemed to meet in a different temper. This I regret; for if other, seemed to meet in a different temper. This I regret; for it such a temper shall attend the future meetings of the House upon this bill, it must be the end of the bill for this session. I trust, therefore, that when we shall meet hereafter for the consideration of this bill no question of a quorum will be raised, but that any gentleman who feels dissatisfied by the decision of the members present will consent to take a vote in the House after the bill shall have been reported by the Committee of the Whole. ported by the Committee of the Whole. Otherwise we might as well abandon this bill at once.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It was in view of the considerations which the gentleman has mentioned that I made the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HUNTON. I renew the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at nine o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4247) to change the name of the steam pleasure-yacht W. J. BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLAIR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1692) to refer the claims of the captors of the ram Albemarle to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1693) to quiet title to lands patented by the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1695) to facilitate the business of the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONAS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1696) extending the operations of the Light-House Board over Lower Red River, in Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

J. W. BURBRIDGE & CO. AND ROBERT H. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to reconsider the vote of the Senate yesterday morning indefinitely postponing the bill (S. No. 1545) for the relief of J. W. Burbridge & Co. and Robert H. Montgomery.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

BEN HOLLADAY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Wisconsin in pursuance of the notice given by him.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In pursuance of the notice I gave a few moments ago I now move to postpone the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule, and if that motion prevail I will move to take up the bill to which I have referred, that is the bill for the relief of Major Holladay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to postpone the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule, indicating his purpose if the motion is successful to follow it with a motion to take up the bill named by him.

Mr. KERNAN. I hope the bill for the relief of Mr. Holladay will not be taken up now. The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mr. Holladay the sum of $526,739 on account of his contracts with the Post-Office Department to carry the United States mail. All I wish to say is that it is accompanied by a long report, and it having been passed over when reached on the Calendar without anything being said, I am quite sure but few of us have looked into this matter. I for one desire to have some reasonable time to examine this report, which is voluminous, before I am called on to vote upon a bill appropriating so large an amount. I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin that he give notice that he will make a motion a few days ahead to take the bill up. Then Senators cannot object on the ground that they have not had an opportunity to look into the measure and he ready to yet on it.

that they have not had an opportunity to look into the measure and be ready to vote on it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not desire to unduly press this matter. I am charged with the conduct of the bill by the Committee on Claims. I have made several ineffectual attempts to get it up. I am satisfied that if it be taken up at all it must be taken up during the morning hour. But I am willing to waive the notice that I have just given, and now give notice that I shall move on Monday next, immediately after the routine business of the morning hour has been completed to take up the bill.

completed, to take up the bill.

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) authorizing the President of the United States to call an international sani-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire, merely as a matter of curiosity, what has become of the order about taking the Calendar in its order. I notice that every morning we pick out bills continually. There are two or three I should be glad to pick out, but I have not felt at liberty to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is done either by unanimous consent, or by suspending the order. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution he has named.

Mr. HARRIS. I was prompted to ask unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution, because of the fact that it is deemed important that it should pass at once if at all. It simply provides for authorizing the President to call a conference to adopt an internaauthorizing the President to call a conference to adopt an international system of notifications as to the actual sanitary condition of certain tropical ports, from which we are constantly threatened with the importation of yellow fever. I do not think the Senator from Vermont can have any objection to the resolution, and I do not think it will consume five minutes to consider and dispose of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly I did not mean to be understood as having any objection to the resolution, but I was trying to put in a plea for what I consider to be fair play to bills reported from committees. The little and unimportant committee of which I happen to be the chairman, through the kindness and grace of the majority of this body, has reported some bills of considerable importance to the people in the Territories, private land claims and so on, that are on the Calendar and will be reached some day if we can keep on; but if we cannot and proceed in this way then I do not know what we can do. But if the Senator says that this resolution is urgent, certainly I am willing to hear it read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read and objection called for.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to call an international sanitary conference to meet at Washington, District of Columbia, to which the several powers having jurisdiction of ports likely to be infected with yellow fever shall be invited to send delegates, properly authorized, for the purpose of securing an international system of notification as to the actual sanitary condition of ports and places under the jurisdiction of such powers and of vessels sailing therefrom.

of vessels sailing therefrom.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent to this resolution being considered at this time? The Chair hears no objection, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think what is here proposed is a very good thing probably, but I should like to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee whether there is any fund provided for the payment of the necessary incidental expenses of this commission, or the representatives of the United States who will form a part of it?

Mr. HARRIS. There is no appropriation contained in the resolu-

Mr. HARRIS. There is no appropriation contained in the resolu-on. There is a fund under the control of the National Board of Health, but I do not know that it could be properly diverted to any such purpose as this. I beg to inquire of the Senator from Vermont what expenditures would probably be involved? It had not occurred to me that there would be expense.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There will be certainly the incidental expenses of all such things, and in respect of the commissioners of the United States it might happen, and it ought to happen if they are eminent men and leave their business and professions and come from different parts of the United States here to represent her that their expenses ought to be paid, to say nothing of the incidental expenses of clerks and stationery, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. HARRIS. I certainly should have no objection to providing now, but I think it will be quite safe to provide for such expenses as may be incurred at a future day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if this is urgent we ought to provide the money. I suggest to the Senator to add a provision appropriating $5,000, or some small sum, to carry out the objects of the resolution. It is his affair.

Mr. HARRIS. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Ver-

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether the National Board of Health is not the proper body to provide for this sanitary convention to meet in Washington, and whether it is proper that this matter should be devolved upon the President of the United States? We have now a National Board of Health, and it seems to me that board is the proper organ through which its agency could be extended to the holding of a sanitary convention in this city. I suggest that matter to the Senator from Ten-

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose the President of the United States is the proper person to communicate with foreign nations. I will state to my friend from Delaware, however, that this resolution was prepared by the National Board of Health under the advice of the Public Health Association of America and the Academy of Sciences. I will prepare an amendment in a moment.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to make a remark about the proposed amendment. Here comes a resolution from the National Board of Health; the very persons who, if they are fit to be there, know a great deal more about it than we can. They make no suggestion about any money. The resolution as they prepared it is presented here; and on the spur of the moment, on the suggestion of a Senator that it might be well to give them $5,000, the Senator from Tennessee sits down and prepares such an amendment. I intend to vote against it myself when it is offered; and I venture to call the attention of the Senate to the nature of such a proceeding. These men, deliberately understanding about this matter, prepare the resolution they want; it comes up here; and without any suggestion from a committee, upon a mere suggestion of one Senator, another Senator sits down to draw an amendment to give them $5,000.

Mr. HARRIS. If the expenditure shall not be necessary it will not be made, I imagine. I will propose the amendment, and shall be perfectly satisfied for the Senate to dispose of it in either way. I move to add at the end of the joint resolution:

And that the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the necessary expenses of such conference.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee what amount under existing laws has already been appropriated for the support of this board of health?

Mr. HARRIS. There has been, in round numbers, by the various acts, the sum of $550,000 appropriated. There is a full report made by the National Board.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now let me ask the Senator if he knows how much of that fund is still within the control of the board?

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot, from memory, state accurately, though I have the report upon my table, but I should say that there was at this time in the hands of the board, in round numbers, somewhere

Mr. HAMLIN. Then this appears to be the condition of the case: I understand the Senator from Tennessee to say that this resolution is prepared by the board of health; it is sent here, considered by a committee, and favorably reported; all very well. That board of health have still an unexpended fund of two or three hundred thousand dollars. They know what are the uses for which that fund will be required; they must necessarily know whether they require a specific appropriate to a supervisor the objects of this resolution. If they of required; they must necessarily know whether they require a specific appropriation to carry out the objects of this resolution. If they had wanted it, would they not have said so? If they required an additional appropriation would not the suggestion have been made to the committee? Most clearly, in my mind. When it is here stated that there is a large fund unexpended, I do not think it is in the line of prudence, I do not think it is in the line of prudence, I do not think it is in the line of necessity, to make an additional expression. additional appropriation.

It is true the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee provides that $5,000, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," shall be used. I do not know, but the Senator may be able to tell me, where an appropriation has been made in all time with that limitation when the last mill of it has not been expended. I never knew such a case, and I doubt if one can be found. All there is in the resolution is that they shall not expend beyond $5,000. Is it a wise or olution is that they shall not expend beyond $5,000. Is it a wise or a proper thing to do, with no suggestion from the board that they ask additional appropriations, and with the information which the honorable Senator from Tennessee gives us that they have got $300,000 unexpended? It seems to me it is all wrong.

Mr. HARRIS. I can give to my honorable friend from Maine one instance of an appropriation where it was predicted a year ago upon this floor that if the appropriation was made of $500,000 to the National Board of Health it would be expended within the year, and there is less than $500,000 expended by some $300,000. Unless there is a necessity for this expenditure I take for granted it will not be made. Though I have not asked for the appropriation, I thought the suggestion from the honorable Senator from Vermont a very proper one, and was very ready to adopt it; but I shall be perfectly satisfied with whatever action the Senate may see proper to take upon the amendment as it is proposed.

the amendment as it is proposed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he modify his amendment so as to authorize the sum of $5,000 of this reserved fund to be used.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to modifying the amendment so that it shall provide that the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be paid out of the fund under the control of the National Board of Health. Let the Secretary modify it in that re-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think as one member of the committee that the expenses will be $5,000, yet they may be much more than $5,000. I suggest that the amendment read something like this: that whatever is necessary to pay these expenses be paid out of this unexpended balance of $300,000, or whatever it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is too broad.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think it is a little broad.

Mr. ALLISON. Say "not exceeding $5,000."

Mr. GARLAND. The expenditures may be more than that, though I do not think they will be that. Just simply put it on to the already existing unexpended appropriation for the specific purpose herein

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the objection to that would be that there is a very large balance, I understand from the Senator from Tennes-see two or three hundred thousand dollars, unexpended, and that leaves this thing entirely at sea without any control of Congress. If it turns this thing entirely at sea without any control of Congress. If it turns out that the $5,000 is insufficient, (and certainly something is indispensable, it seems to me, if we are to pass the resolution at all,) then there would be a deficiency which can be made up; but this certainly will enable it to run a little while.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope this amendment, objectionable as I think it is in any form, will not take the form of appropriating an indefinite sum, or any sum, out of this unexpended balance. My chief reason is this: The act under which this $300;000 of unexpended balance exists, gives very large and elastic discretion to the custodians of the money. If in addition to that Congress begins, particularly in this very informal and hasty way, to give particular directions as to what shall be done with parts of it, we shall lose the benefit of all real accountability and responsibility on the part of those to whom this countability and responsibility on the part of those to whom this money is confided. Therefore, it seems to me that the suggestion of my friend from Iowa, he will pardon me for saying, is worse, if it is possible to make a suggestion on this point worse, than the original idea that we are to give money to these gentlemen who do not ask any money, who understand this subject, who have prepared their resolution, who know what their balance is, who know what they are bound to do withit and bound not to do with it; that we are to insist upon offering to them means which they do not ask and in their own. upon offering to them money which they do not ask and in their own estimation do not need. If there is anything on this subject which would seem to me to be more uncalled for than another, it would be to invade this fund, to change without examination, without any op-portunity now to refer to the original act and the amended act and see how that leaves the money, and dabble with it, and direct that so much shall be expended for this purpose. If it is within the original purpose, no such thing is necessary. If it is beyond the original purpose we ought to divert it only upon careful view.

I hope, then, as was said by the Senator from Maine, that the Senate will conclude that the men whose business it is to understand this, who have prepared this resolution, are enough like other people the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out that the weather there is the real event fixed out the second of the real event fixed out that the weather the real event fixed out the real event f this, who have prepared this resolution, are enough like other people the world over to find out that they want money if really they do, and that they may be trusted on such a question as that; and that we need not suppose that they have fallen into the error of refraining or refusing to ask for it if in truth it was needed. So I hope the amendment in any form will be voted down, and if the resolution is to go, that it will go as originally proposed by the board and the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state to the Senator from New York that my recollection of the act appropriating the fund is, that it would not authorize the expenditure for any other than the purposes for which the bill appropriated. It cannot be diverted to this particular object.

Mr. CONKLING. It cannot be diverted to any other purposes than those of the board; but if the Senator draws his recollection to this point, I think he will concur with me that the original provisions of that bill were very large. They were so large that I remember my-self in the Senate calling his attention to their almost unlimited scope self in the Senate calling his attention to their almost unlimited scope as they seemed to me, and I rather think that if he will recur to the statute he will find that it is quite broad enough to do almost anything with this money which tends to the original purpose. If, however, it is not broad enough for this purpose, then the objection is increased to our dabbling with it now without knowing particularly what we are doing or what the necessities of the fund may be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment. Mr. EDMUNDS. I have the National Board of Health act now before me, and the appropriation is only to meet the expenses to be incurred "to carry out the purposes of this act." Therefore it is plain that the money only can be applied to carry out the provisions of the act of 1879. If the provisions of the act of 1879 are adequate to this purpose, there is no occasion for the passage of this resolution. So it turns out, as it seems to me, certainly that no money now appropriated can be lawfully used for the necessary incidental expenses of this convention; but as the Senate does not wish to appropriate, very

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 5088) to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to deliver arms and accounterments, ammunition, and tents to the soldiers' reunion committee of the Northwest; and A joint resolution (H. R. No. 296) making appropriation for the continuous fixed of the Secretary tingent fund of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) to print extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879, disagreed to by the Senate, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BENJAMIN WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. O. R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, and Mr. PHILIP C. HAYES of Illinois, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 2004) to confirm the title of Charles Olivier Duclozel to certain lands in the State of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish two hospital tents to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of the State of Illinois.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate to consider House joint resolution No. 116, amending the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I will make a statement. It will be recollected that a few days ago during the absence of my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] this resolution was brought before the Senate, and at the suggestion of the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] and perhaps some others I consented that it should go over until the return of the Senator from Kentucky. He is present now, and I ask the Senate to take up the resolution. I hope it can be disposed of in a few moments. I move to lay aside the pending order for that pur-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia moves to postpone the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the first case on the Calender under the pending order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list of non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for thirty have served therein continuously, honorably, and lattifully for thirty years or upward.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope this motion will not be adopted. The joint resolution will lead to long debate. There will be opportunity for it after the morning hour; and we always have the misfortune to consume the morning hour, which ought to be devoted to the Calendar, in other matters. I desire to say for myself personally, in reference to the vote I shall give, that there are many bills here, especially one near the head of the Calendar, which is of the very greatest interest to a very large number of people in my State, and it cannot wait, while the resolution the Senator from West Virginia is speaking of can wait. It has waited, and it can wait.

the resolution the Senator from West Virginia is speaking of can wait.

It has waited, and it can wait.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator wishes this laid aside for the purpose of taking up another bill. He does not wish to go on with the Calendar. I leave it with the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I do want to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. MAXEY. Considering that the Senate has very carefully considered the bill at the head of the Calendar so far, and I do not believe there is going to be any more discussion on it, or very little, I trust we shall go on with it and dispose of it. We have had it up several mornings. I want to get rid of it, and no doubt the Senate does. We are at it, and I think the Senate had better dispose of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I have no purpose to discuss or interpose time against the bill of the Senator from Texas; yet when the morning hour expired the other day there were two or three Senators, and I think there are now, who intend to discuss that bill. I disclaim being one of them; but my impression is that the Senator will not be able to get an immediate vote. If I understand the Senator from West Virginia he proposes to proceed with House joint resator from West Virginia he proposes to proceed with House joint resolution No. 116. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; House joint resolution No.

Mr. CONKLING. I feel bound for one to vote for that motion. This is a very important matter. It ought to be settled one way or the other. Time after time the suggestion has been made of taking it up in the Senate, but for one reason and again another it has been postponed. I am glad the Senator from West Virginia has moved to take it up this morning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will remind my friend from New York that it was before the Senate, but owing to the absence of my colleague on the committee, the Senator from Kentucky, I consented that it has also as a senator from Kentucky.

that it should go over.

Mr. CONKLING. I remember that it did stand over once as a matter of courtesy to an absent Senator; and it has stood over again and again. If what the resolution proposes should not be done, there are reasons why we should say so. If it should be done, there are more manifest reasons why we should say that and say it promptly. I do not think there is a better time to take up the subject than this morning; and although I am very sorry to interfere with my honorable friend from Kansas if this does interfere with him, still this is a matter to which my attention has been brought so often that on an earlier moment I should have said what I have said now, with no intention whatever of interfering with any wish he may have.

whatever of interfering with any wish he may have.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware until this morning that the joint resolution had been up and postponed in consequence of my absence. I opposed it in committee, I expect to oppose it before the Senate; but I shall certainly vote to take it up now as it was postponed because I was absent. I regard it, however, as impossible to pass a measure of this magnitude in a few minutes or during the morning hour. I am not prepared to say that I can discuss it as well as it ought to be discussed this morning, because I did not expect it to be called up now; it is a measure proposing to change the whole system of our surveys to create a new department which I think in less than five now; it is a measure proposing to change the whole system of our surveys, to create a new department, which I think in less than five years will be the very largest of all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend that I did not discuss the merits of the joint resolution, but simply asked to take it up. After it is taken up we can discuss it.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from West Virginia insists on taking it up now because he says it will only consume a few minutes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope so.

Mr. BECK. He hopes so. I assure him that it will be very fully discussed if Senators give it the attention it deserves. I have the right to say that I will reply to him. It cannot be taken up on the assumption that it can be passed in a few minutes or a few hours.

assumption that it can be passed in a few minutes or a few hours.

Mr. ANTHONY. The fairest way to all the bills and to all the Senators is to give the poor Calendar this little remnant of the morning hour, and I hope we shall not lay it aside for anything.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to postpone the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division-ayes 14,

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will not ask for the yeas and nays, but I give notice now that at the very first opportunity, as soon as appropriation bills are out of the way, I shall move to take up the joint resolution.

RETIRED LIST OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. Allison to insert as an additional section:

Sec. —. That in addition to the number of cadets at West Point Military Academy now authorized by law, the President shall each year appoint two colored cadets at large.

Mr. HOAR. I do not suppose there is anybody in the Senate more thoroughly in favor of having the President appoint colored cadets at West Point; I think the number ought to be larger than is designated by this amendment; but I cannot for one vote to recognize in the legislation of this country distinction of race, to establish in our laws the principle that the different races stand in this country as persons to be dealing and bargaining with each other, each to have a certain proportion of public office or power, as if they were separate, independent, and distinct persons. In the eye of the law and of the Constitution they are precisely alike, precisely equal, and the President of the United States ought not, unless the person to be appointed be in all other respects the best person under the circumstances, to appoint him over him who is the best person under the circumstance in his independent merally because he helpings to a particular recovery. in his judgment, merely because he belongs to a particular race; and a direction to the President that two cadets shall be appointed from the colored race would seem to carry with it the implication that the others should not be appointed from that race, that that was the proportion which in the judgment of Congress belonged to that race.

I shall therefore vote against the amendment, and I shall for precisely the same reason vote against any legislation which implies a division of public office among political parties, recognizing the principle that in regard to the public service the fact of a man belonging or not belonging to one party is entitled to the confidence of the appointing power.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I desire to say before the vote is taken on this amendment of the Senator from Iowa that a large portion of the people of my State are of the colored race, and I shall vote with great pleasure for any and every measure which looks reasonably toward their material, intellectual, or industrial advancement. I shall oppose with equal earnestness every measure that has a ten-dency to array them in antagonism as against the white people of the country or to create feelings of prejudice or bitterness. fied that any measure to enforce intimate social relations between them and any class of our people is only an injury, and a serious injury, to them in that future which I and those who like me represent that class of people are most earnestly and hopefully endeavoring to bring about for them.

While I agree that they have a right, a full right, under our Consti-tution and laws, to whatever benefits the Government extends to any class of our people, either at West Point or elsewhere, I do not think it is right to endeavor in the legislation of the country to single them out and seek to confer upon them special and peculiar benefits as distinguished from the rest of our people. I am willing and would gladly support whatever measure may be necessary to give to them their full share of the educational advantages of the country; but I think no system of policy could be more disastrous to the colored people, and more inimical to them, than measures of this kind which seek to promote a discrimination between them and the rest of the people and upon the assumed ground of a popular ill-feeling or prejudice toward them.

I shall vote against the amendment for these reasons.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

reas and nays were ordered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa for

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa for information, how many cadets at large the President is now by law authorized to appoint. Is it ten annually, or ten in four years?

Mr. ALLISON. The President, as I understand the law now, is only authorized to appoint ten during the period of four years.

Mr. BLAIR. That would be an average of two and a half a year.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I would suggest—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to call attention to the precise fact. The President was authorized to appoint ten at large; but during and after the war that authority was construed to authorize the appointment of ten at large each year—an erroseous contraction. ize the appointment of ten at large each year—an erroneous construction probably of the original law. About two years ago Congress passed a law prohibiting the existence of more than ten at large in all. The result of that is, not that the President may appoint an average of two and a half each year, but that he cannot appoint any until the existing classes shall graduate, so as to reduce the number below ten at large. It will be two years before he can make any ap-pointment, I understand.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, the President being authorized and directed to appoint two annually, the result would be that in every four years there would be eight colored cadets appointed, and during the same period of time he could appoint ten white ones. Would not that be rather an unfair discrimination in favor of the colored race? There are, I believe, not far from fifty million people in the country. Perhaps five million of them are colored. The colored population upon a fair division would be entitled to about one-tenth.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator remember when the Academy

Mr. BLAIR. Is it proposed to even up from the foundation of the Academy

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator asks that question of me, I should propose if I were in his place, in considering the supposed inequality growing out of numbers, to remember that during all these years at that Academy as everywhere else this race has been excluded merely because it was this race.

Mr. BLAIR. I would inquire of the honorable Senator if he thinks that could be done without a discrimination on account of race?

Mr. CONKLING. I am disposed to think it can not only be done

Mr. BLAIR. Can our laws, in other words, be thus made retroactive in their operation?

Mr. CONKLING. I think it not only can be done but it would be done on the Senator's arithmetical statement. He says there are about fifty million people in the country, and he says that few of them comparatively are black people. Now, if they were to have in the course of four years eight cadets at West Point for a while and the residue of the people were to have ten during that same period of four years, when you come to look back at all the decades when the colored people had none, I think you not only could but you would establish for the time being some sort of recompense, something like equality. Whether it would be exact or not, would require quite a minute calculation to determine.

Mr. BLAIR. I should think that if it was necessary to adjust it on the basis suggested with reference to the past, the matter might well require consideration to a very considerable extent. It does not seem to me that our legislation can have reference to the past, but it must have reference to the existing status and to the future. I do not feel any special aversion to the amendment by any means, but it does seem to me that if it should be adopted it ought to be based upon some different principle than seems to be implied in its present terms.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, we may as well look in the face the facts surrounding this question. It is true that but one colored man has ever graduated at the West Point Military Academy. It is also true that but two or three have ever been appointed to that Academy. We know perfectly well that there is but one colored cadet at the Academy now, and we are told upon what appears to be very good authority that this colored cadet has no associates of his own at that Academy. I read only this morning the testimony of Professor Kendrick, one of the ablest professors of that Academy, that this young man there has been proficient in his studies, faithful, and attentive, and also the testimony of some other officers

It is said by the Senator from Massachusetts that he is not willing to put into our laws a distinction with reference to race; but I want to call his attention to the fact that that discrimination does exist in Although every member of the Congress of the United States is authorized if he chooses to appoint a colored cadet instead of a white cadet, no individual member of Congress in the exercise of that discretion which the law gives him does exercise it in the way that some think it ought to be exercised.

Mr. CONKLING. And never has been exercised but in five cases.
Mr. McDONALD. Has it ever been by any member of Congress?
Mr. ALLISON. Probably the present colored cadet was recommended by a member of Congress. The President has always been authorized to appoint ten cadets at large. It was construed, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, to mean ten cadets for each year for ten or fifteen years until the law was changed. My amendment simply proposes that in addition to those that the President is authorsimply proposes that in addition to those that the President is authorized now by law to appoint, there shall be appointed by him two colored cadets annually, so that this colored race may be represented in each class at West Point by two persons.

Mr. INGALLS. Would it be as logical to enact that a certain number of congressional cadets should be appointed from the proscribed race as well as executive cadets?

Mr. ALLISON It might be well assembled and the latter that a certain cade to the congressional cade to the cade to the congressional cade to the congressional cade to the cong

Mr. ALLISON. It might be well enough to add that; but I do not propose to add it now. The laws prescribe the qualifications as near as they can be prescribed by law, and of course any colored cadet who appears at West Point must undergo, before he can secure entrance there, a most rigid examination with reference to every qualification required. I cannot conceive that we are discriminating against the colored race by making it obligatory upon the appointing power to select at least two of that race for each class at West Point. It may be that it is a discrimination against them, as some seem to think, but I do not so understand it, especially in the face of the fact that only three colored cadets have ever appeared at West Point.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will my colleague allow me to ask if we have not now by law three or four or five regiments composed of colored

Mr. ALLISON. We have four regiments of colored troops, two of cavalry and two of infantry. We have behind those colored troops five hundred thousand colored men who may be called into the military service of the United States when trouble shall come again. And shall it be said that this whole question shall be left open to the caprice from year to year of whoever may be in power, and that we shall have the right to call upon this colored race to the number of five hundred thousand men in times of peril and difficulty, and yet that they shall have no representation in the only military school supported by the Government of the United States which shall train these colored men in the use of arms?

I think I understand perfectly well the objection that is made to this amendment. It is not that we are discriminating in favor of the colored race, but it is because in some way or other they may secure colored race, but it is because in some way or other they may secure that recognition at our Government school, supported with our money and sustained by the Government from year to year, that they have not hitherto had, and that they are not likely to have unless we place upon record a legislative direction that they shall be represented at West Point. I only speak for myself in this matter. I believe that it is a just and fair solution of this question to put this limited number of young men of the colored race at West Point, and therefore I shall yet for it whatever other Separators may do in this regard.

shall vote for it, whatever other Senators may do in this regard.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to accomplish the object which the Senator from Iowa has at heart, as earnestly as he does, as he well knows. I do not think that his proposition tends to accomplish the object. What we wish to accomplish is to remove from the minds of the American people the notion that there is any possible difference in political right, or in claims to social estimation, between men on account of their race or the color of their skin—a state of public sentiment which would no more inquire, in treating a colored man in his social relations, or in regard to his political rights, the color of his skin, than it would whether he was a man with blue eyes or with black eyes or with red hair or brown hair or gray hair. And the difficulty at West Point, in my opinion, is that the persons who have the charge of educating and forming the young men there, instructing them in these matters which tend to form their character in what, to use the military phrase, is "becoming an officer and a gentleman," neither show by example nor enjoin by precept the necessity of treating colored boys in that spirit.

As I said the other day, I suppose a condition of public sentiment existed two hundred years ago in England and in some of the civilized nations on the Continent, where the son of a man who was engaged in some of the humble occupations in life, if he presented himself at a school devoted to the aristocracy, would be met in something of the spirit in which these young men have been met at West Point.

of the spirit in which these young men have been met at West Point. But that whole thing is gone by.

Do you suppose, Mr. President, that a pupil of Dr. Arnold, at Rugby, would not have found out pretty quick, if he had undertaken to treat with contempt the son of a laborer who was by his side in the class, or to avoid his society, that he himself was not fit for the society of gentlemen if he acted on that principle? And when the distinguished officers who fill these places at West Point teach their pupils that, this thing will go by. This is peculiar, nearly so, to that institution among the other institutions of the North. I know something about this matter. There is a young colored man, in whom I institution among the other institutions of the North. I know something about this matter. There is a young colored man, in whom I take a very deep interest, who entered the junior class at Amherst College two or three years ago. He is an intimate personal friend of mine; he is an honored and welcome guest at my house, and he graduated at Amherst this last year, and now has been called to fill an important position among the scholars of the country. He was the son, I believe, of a North Carolina slave. I went with some of my family to attend his commencement as his friend at Amherst College last July, and I inquired of President Seelye how he was treated there, and the answer was, that he was a universal favorite both with students and with teachers.

when I arrived at the president's house this young gentleman was invited to meet me in his parlor as a guest, and I do not suppose it occurred to a member of the faculty of that distinguished institution of learning, or to a member of the class, in their demeanor toward this young man, to think of anything except what his personal qualities and character were. And the same change of public sentiment which has taken place in our other institutions will very soon, I believe, reach West Point.

But I do not think it is constitutional. I think it is a violation of

But I do not think it is constitutional, I think it is a violation of the Constitution of the United States, to put into our statutes provisions that the belonging to one race shall constitute a title to public office under particular circumstances, and I think to attempt to do it would tend to prolong this infamous condition of public sentiment to which I have referred and not to put an end to it.

Mr. CONKLING. What does the Senator say to the word "white" in the naturalization laws?

Mr. HOAR. I think the word "white" in the naturalization laws ought to be stricken out.

Mr. CONKLING. And let in the Chinese?

Mr. HOAR. Yes. What is in violation of the Constitution in making citizens and what is in violation of the Constitution in dealing with them, is a question which I do not care about being called upon, because, if I understand the point of the question of the Senator from New York, he does not wish to involve me merely in an inquiry as to such a distinction as that. It is a violation of the principle which lies at the bottom of the American Constitution, and which is set forth-Mr. CONKLING.

The Senator understands the argument with regard to the naturalization laws.

Mr. HOAR. I prefer to deal with this matter on the question of abstract right. The Declaration of Independence, which is the declaration of the principle on which this Government is founded by the men who created and established it, throws its blazing torchlight over every line, syllable, and letter of the Constitution of the United States, and that Declaration asserts that every human soul is equal in political and personal right to every other human soul, without any regard to the quality of the casket in which it happens to be enshrined; and that principle is to be the cure, and not an attempt to assign between the different recent the different complete the state. assign between the different races, the different complexions, the assign between the different races, the different complexions, the different occupations of this country by legislation their share of public honors. It is not to require the President to remember that there is a distinction between black men and white men when he makes his appointments, or the people to remember it when they elect their officers, but to require them absolutely to forget it, which is to be the cure.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the exact object of this amendment, to enforce the principle which the Senator from Massachusetts seeks to

Mr. HEREFORD. I have a great many objections to this amendment. One is that I seriously doubt whether it is constitutional. When we give power to the President to appoint these officers, I doubt very much if we have the power to place a limitation upon his right to appoint. It is an invasion of the power and prerogative of the Executive for us to do so.

A similar question came up upon the enactment of what is known as the census law. It was suggested there that the President should appoint the enumerators from the two great political parties, but it was gravely urged—and the doubt had its influence on the action that was taken-that it would be unconstitutional thus to limit the power of the President. If you give him the power to fill the office he has the right to fill it with any person that he may please. If you can say that he must appoint so many colored cadets, then you can go a step further and say how much of colored blood they must have in their veins before he can appoint them, whether they must have half negro blood, a quarter, an eighth, or a sixteenth, or full blood. If you can do this, it can run through all the ramifications of our Government.

The President now has ample power to appoint all ten of these cadets from the colored race if he desires. He has never appointed one of that race. I suppose he has had good reasons for his course. President Hayes has been in the Executive Mansion for going on four years and he has never appointed a colored man to West Point. He had good and sufficient reason for his action, no doubt. General Grant was there eight years and he never appointed a colored cadet to West Point. Mr. Lincoln was there the whole of one and part of a second term, and yet he never appointed a colored cadet. Many of the Senators who are upon this floor have been members of the House of Representatives when they had the power to appoint colored men to Meyresentatives when they had the power to appoint colored men to West Point, and yet not one of them ever appointed one of that race. My friend who sits in front of me from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] who offered this amendment, was many years in the House of Representatives; he has colored men in his State and had then. Why did he not appoint one of them? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] who has just taken his seat was many years in the House of Representatives. Why did he not appoint colored men to the West Point Academy? His colleague [Mr. DAWES] was in the House of Representatives for many years; there are twelve or fifteen Senators. Representatives for many years; there are twelve or fifteen Senators on the other side of the Chamber who were for many years members of the House of Representatives, and all of them had colored men among their constituents, but not one of them ever appointed a colored man to West Point. Whence this new-born zeal, then? When these gentlemen had the power to place colored men at West Point why did they not do it? When they selected candidates for West Point and for the Naval Academy at Annapolis—for they had the power to appoint to both places—why did they invariably select white persons instead of colored persons? They had a good and sufficient reason for it; and if there was a good and sufficient reason governing and controlling their conduct as members of the House of Representatives, why do they now seek to coerce the President and compel him to act upon a different ground?

The Senator from Iowa said that they were practically excluded. Who has excluded them? The members of the House of Representatives, of which he was one; the Presidents of the United States who have belonged to his political party for many years, they have excluded them, not the law. The law does not exclude them; but for good and sufficient reasons none of them have yet been appointed by the President. In a few instances members of the House of Repre-sentatives have appointed them.

I think it will work no good to the Military Academy to force the President to do this. If you can force the President to do this, you can also enact a law saying to the members of the House of Representatives "You shall appoint so many colored men to the West Point Academy and to the Naval Academy." If it is right in principle, go the whole length of it; and if you are going to divide these positions according to the population of the country, then this does not observe the proper proportion.

Mr. President, I think this bringing up the question of color all the time in the Halls of Congress bodes no good to the colored man, no good to the white man, no good to any part of our common country.

Legislation cannot arrange this matter. It must be done otherwise.

For these and many other reasons I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. When the Senator from West Virginia obtained the floor, I sought it to make a few observations in the same line as that Senator has indulged in. I will not, therefore, undertake to amplify the remarks which he has so very well made. They are very pertinent, and, I think, somewhat pungent.

tinent, and, I think, somewhat pungent.

I was about, however, to suggest to the Senator from Iowa a difficulty in his amendment. There is nothing in the laws of the United States or in the Constitution, that I am aware of, which speaks of "the colored race" or "colored people." That term has no signification in our language, so far as I am aware, of a legal character, that gives it any particular certainty. I was about to suggest to him, inasmuch as the term "colored cadet" might include the Indians in the West as well as the negroes, that it would be better for him to modify it by saying "colored cadets of African extraction," and then, as the Senator from West Virginia has well remarked, it would be very proper to say how much of African blood a man should have before he should be entitled to this distinction, and it should be further stated whether he should be a full-blooded man or half-blooded man, or what proportion of African blood he should have.

If the amendment is intended to be voted on with real seriousness, and the republican President of the United States is to be instructed in his duty with reference to the African race, the Senate ought to in his duty with reference to the African race, the Senate ought to be very careful in its language, and it ought at least to furnish him some indication as to whether the Senator from Iowa or ourselves, if we pass the amendment, mean Indians, Chinese, or negroes. The language of the amendment, as it stands now, is entirely too indefinite to receive the sanction of the Senate. I recommend to the Senator from Iowa that he make some correction in his amendment to that

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am disposed to vote for this amendment—more disposed to vote for it than when I first heard it read. After listening to all the objections which have been made to it, and listening especially to the non-partisan dissertation of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Hereford,] I see no great objec-

In the Military Academy there must be upward of three hundred pupils. If any Senator knows exactly how many, I should be very pupils. If any Senator knows exactly how many, I should be very glad to be informed. As there is one from each congressional district, and those appointed at large beside, the number must exceed somewhat three hundred. Of all these cadets one single one belongs to a race numbering four million people; a race for whom I will venture to say my sympathy and respect grows stronger every day; a race which I think deserves well of the State. Numbering four million, one cadet in three hundred, and only one, has been summoned from its roals.

the Senator from West Virginia, intending it to bear strictly upon this senatorial discussion, aiming at the very pith of the matter, and seeking to enlighten his brother Senators as to the vote they should give, has devoted some time and some inspiring strains of rhetoric give, has devoted some time and some inspiring strains of rhetoric to reminding us that the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison,] when he served in the House, did not send colored cadets from his district.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. And the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from Illinois seems to take some offense at the Senator from West Virginia, because he did not also mention me. [Laughter.] It is true that in Iowa, where the colored race is practically absent, although individual colored men no doubt can be found in the district which the Senator from Iowa so long represented—it is true that in Iowa, in Massachusetts, and elsewhere, where the condition of things is the same, the cadets have been taken from those who constituted not only the overwhelming majority, but practically the whole population—the only race there. That, I think, is a common-sense answer to what is said by the Senator from West Virginia, because I know he does not make his reator from West Virginia, because I know he does not make his remarks with a view to having anybody in the galleries, or beyond the galleries understand that the Senator from Iowa or anybody else has been guilty of any personal inconsistency. That is entirely beside the purpose of my distinguished friend from West Virginia, for he is seeking to enlighten the Senate!

Be that as it may it so happens that under the recommendation of

Be that as it may it so happens that under the recommendation of members of the House and under the appointment of the Executive the distribution at West Point is as I have stated, two hundred and ninety-nine cadets (if the number were exactly three hundred) of one race and one single one of the other. The Senator from Iowa, finding that the condition, proposes an amendment the effect of which will not be to take from those who now enjoy the all but exclusive advantages of this institution one single cadet, but only to add two cadets annually so that in four years the total will amount to eight; and accordingly if the colored cadet now at West Point escapes being murdered, as he seems not to have escaped being maimed, there would be during the four years he would remain there nine, but as his time will expire before that there will be eight in the course of the next four years. four years.

What is the objection to that? The honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] observed one thing which struck me. He said that the effect might be to prevent the President from appointing all colored cadets if you said that two of them should be colored. When I reflected upon what has been done for the last three years, I confess I was a little appalled by that suggestion; and I fear—although I think I shall overcome that fear in my vote—that the present Executive particularly may be deterred from appointing all the cadets at large from colored men by this amendment, that he may feel constrained to subdue his inclination to appoint only these two provided for. As I say that objection struck me as being one worthy of con-for. As I say that objection struck me as being one worthy of consideration, but I made up my mind, after reflecting upon it—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to remind him that the present Executive has had no power to appoint any for the past two years?
Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Massachusetts is speaking on my side as I understand.
Mr. HOAR. Except, of course, those that he appoints from congressional districts.

Mr. CONKLING. He does not appoint those at all. They are not only nominated but they are appointed by the Representatives in Congress, and the President has nothing to do with them. The word is "recommend" and not "appoint," it is suggested to me. Certainly if the Senator will look, I think he will find that the President has nothing to do with those; but the Senator says that the present Executive has appointed no cadets at large. Then he strengthens the presumption-

Mr. HOAR. Will it disturb the Senator from New York if I say a word?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly not. Mr. HOAR. This is all the legislation on the subject which has been found after a somewhat careful examination:

SEC. 1315. The corps of cadets shall consist of one from each congressional district, one from each Territory, one from the District of Columbia, and ten from the United States at large.

Now, I pause to observe that that was construed to mean ten each year till, I think, the first year of President Hayes's administration. After he had made his first ten appointments Congress interposed and required that there should be no more appointed at large until the whole number was reduced to ten.

They shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the ten cadets appointed at large, be actual residents of the congressional or territorial districts, or of the District of Columbia, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the provision about the member recommending?

Mr. HOAR. There is no such provision; it is a mere growth; it has become an unwritten law; but, as I understand it, the member of Congress from the district has no legal relation to the cadet what-

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Massachusetts will observe that this point is quite foreign to the course of the few remarks I intended to make. I will put however my bare recollection, presumptnous as that may seem, against the page of the book from which the Senator reads, and I undertake to assert confidently that the statute did provide and does now provide unless it has been dropped in the revision, that the Representative and he alone should select the cadet. I had occasion myself to look at it several times, and vent-ured to introduce in the district which I had the honor to represent, the method of a competitive examination for the place, recommendthe method of a competitive examination for the place, recommending the person who was selected for his merit, and I should have to obliterate too much of distinct memory to suppose that I am mistaken in saying that the member of Congress, the Representative, and nobody else makes the selection of the cadet, or did make it until some recent changes may have occurred. That, however, is quite unimportant. The Senator from Massachusetts says that the present Executive has a weighted no cadety at large.

Mr. HOAR. Since the first ten.

Mr. CONKLING. Ah, since the first ten. If he had appointed none, I should have the more right to assume that without such a provision as this he would have appointed at least a fair share of provision as this he would have appointed at least a fair share of those whom he has appointed from a race so numerous, so meritorious, and so long-suffering and deserving. Now it appears he has appointed none of this race, although he did appoint ten cadets at large. I remember very well the provision to which the Senator has twice called attention taking away the power to appoint ten cadets each year. I voted for it myself and exerted myself to have it adopted; I thought it was quite important that it should be, believing that the during the four years would do that the during the adopted; I thought it was quite important that it should be, believing that ten during the four years would do, that the academy and the country would get along if there were only ten appointed by the Executive at large during four years, in place of ten each year. I recollect it very well. With that power, no colored cadet has been appointed at large. That is the fact. Now, the Senator from Iowa proposes that two shall be next year. What is the objection to it? In the first place it takes away none who would otherwise be appointed. In the next place, I submit it is not open to the objection suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. It not only does not create an excess for favoritism, but it falls very far short of what would be just in the present taking into account all the congressional districts, and in the present and the past together taking into account only the appointments at large. only the appointments at large.

The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from West Virginia who followed and who cited what somebody said about the census law, insist that it is unconstitutional to declare by law that a youth sent to an ordnance school or a riding school or some other institution shall be of a particular race. Then it would be unconstitutional to provide that Chinese youth should be sent here and there, as they have been; that Chinese youth should be sent here and there, as they have been; it would be unconstitutional to provide a variety of things familiarly done which I might eite; but my impression is it would not be unconstitutional at all by reason of a distinction which I think the Senator from Massachusetts will accept. Whatever may be said about the naturalization laws, which are required to be uniform, whatever may be said about the power to appoint to office lodged in the Constitution cannot be said at all, I submit, in respect of a pupil to be sent to a school. I think the arguments which we heard in reference to jurors, extreme as some of them were never went to the extent of saying that extreme as some of them were, never went to the extent of saying that extreme as some of them were, never went to the extent of saying that you could not by law provide who should ride on a steamboat of which you had jurisdiction, who should go in a public conveyance, who should avail himself of a public convenience, or by parity of reasoning who should be sent as pupils to a public seminary of learning.

Mr. BECK and Mr. HEREFORD rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair reminds Senators that the morning hour has expired, and the debate proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon.

Mr. HEREFORD. I submit that the provision in the case referred to by the Senator from New York does not invade the prerogative of to by the Senator from New York does not invade the prerogative of the President at all. It is not a parallel case.

Mr. CONKLING. Nor does this invade any prerogative. If the Senator from Kentucky will pardon me one moment longer, I will give way presently. I did not know that I had passed the hour. I want to answer the Senator from West Virginia who evidently has misunderstood what I tried to say. He talks about the prerogative of the President. What does he mean? He finds in the Constitution that the President shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall amount embassadors and other public consent of the Senate shall appoint embassadors and other public officers. There is what he chooses to call a prerogative of the President. Now come to the case before us. We find that the Constitution being entirely silent in regard to it, by act of Congress we found a school, no matter whether it is a military school, a gymnastic school, a medical school, or any other school. We found a school for youths. What has the President's prerogative to do with it? In the statute we say he may appoint ten codate at large and in the statute we say he may appoint ten codate at large and in the statute. we say he may appoint ten cadets at large and in the statute we say that the Representatives from the respective districts may appoint—although possibly the word is "recommend," and I think both words are employed in the original act—may each appoint a resident of his district or select a resident of his district to go as a pupil to this school. It does not touch the President's prerogative, thereby meaning what the Constitution deposits of power in the President; it has nothing to do with it.

Suppose we were here to charter in this District a ferry company from here to Alexandria, and provide that the officers, the agents of that company, should be partly colored: would the Senator say that we interfered with the prerogative of the President? Certainly not. Why? Because it would be a mere creature of our own, just as this Academy is a creature of our own, unknown to the Constitution, Congress proceeding of course under powers with which it is clothed by the Constitution, but the Constitution itself nominating nowhere a military academy; a thing created by the same power by which we create the office of commissioner of the District of Columbia, by which we charter a corporation in the District of Columbia, or by which we do any other thing the mere creature and subject of stat-

Therefore, I say, that when the Senator from West Virginia talks about the President's prerogative, likening it as he did, to appointments to office governed by the Constitution, or when it is likened to the naturalization laws or to any of the things the criterion of which must be found in the Constitution itself, the argument is misguiding and delusive, and you might just as well say that if the Senate, by a resolution of its own, should provide that some of the boys who sit on our dais here should not be of the race to which they all belong, that interfered with somebody's prerogative.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President

Mr. BECK. Mr. President—
Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me one minute?
Mr. BECK. I am very much pressed; but I will yield.
Mr. HOAR. I only want sixty seconds. I wish merely to say that I hold it to be clear that the cadet at West Point is a public officer, and that the appointment of a cadet is an appointment to a public office, an officer of the United States Army.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator is right about that, can there be a doubt that the statute, if such a one existed, depositing that power with the Representative, was unconstitutional?

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that there ever was such a statute.
Mr. CONKLING. But if there was?
Mr. HOAR. If it was the power of appointment—
Mr. ALLISON. There is an express statute in reference to the naval cadets providing that they shall be appointed from the district on the recommendation of the Representative.

Mr. HOAR. That is a different thing. They are appointed by the President.

Mr. ALLISON. But it restricts the appointing power.

Mr. HOAR. That is not the point. The question is whether this be a public office. The Senator from New York meets the argument by the suggestion that it would be good, if at all, if these were public officers. Now, the cadet is appointed by the President under the constitutional power which may be given to the President alone. He takes an oath of office; he has a rank in the Army; he is bound by the statute to obey the orders of his superior officers in terms; and he is bound to explain the property of the public to the property of the the statute to obey the orders of his superior officers in terms; and he is bound to perform any duty, as other military officers are, to which he may be ordered by the President. I conceive that there is nothing more capable of absolute demonstration than that these young men are military officers, and that it is attempting to enact by statute a distinction of race, which we have been struggling to wipe out in the title to appointment to office in this country.

Now, the Senator's point that they are appointed by the President on the recommendation of somebody does not make it any the less an appointment by the President.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, one word—

Mr. BECK. I insist on the regular order. I cannot yield. The Senator from Iowa is on my committee, and therefore I can afford to

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad there will be another day when I shall have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. MAXEY. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that if no other Senator desires to discuss the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the bill, we take the vote. It will not take much

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Iowa announced that he expected to be heard to-morrow on it.

Mr. MAXEY. If there is any wish for debate further, very well;
but I would like to have a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Indian appropriation bill is the unfinished business. Before proceeding with it, the Chair will lay before the Senate some House bills, for the purpose of reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 5088) to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr.

CONKLING, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to deliver arms and accounterments, ammunition, and tents to the soldiers' reunion committee of the Northwest, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 296) making appropriation for the contingent fund of the Senate was read twice by its title.

Mr. EATON. I ask for the immediate consideration of that resolution, with the consent of the Senator from Kentucky.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The joint resolution was read at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That must go to the proper committee. I should like a report showing what has become of the contingent fund of the Senate already. I am very much obliged to the House of Representatives, as one Senator, for volunteering to supply our empty pockets.

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend will permit the joint resolution to be taken up now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir.
Mr. EATON. I think I can explain it to his satisfaction.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to see a report from the proper committee, the Committee on Contingent Expenses, as to what has become of the large sums of money that have already been appropriated.
Mr. EATON. The resolution has been considered by the Committee of the large sums of money that have already been appropriated.

tee on Appropriations and agreed to by them and passed through the House at my request this morning as the organ of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very sorry. The committee ought to have offered its own appropriation bill.

Mr. EATON. I preferred to do it that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly, but I prefer that it shall take the regular course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EATON. I am very sorry my friend wants to see the warrants of the Government hawked about Washington at eighty cents on the AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. BURNSIDE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 5896) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consider-The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. BECK. I believe there is no amendment now pending to the bill except that offered by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb,] and which was nessed over and which was passed over.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer an amendment to section 3, on page 52. Inasmuch as the Senate was considering at the close of the session yesterday that section, I will read the amendment now. After the word "dollars," in line 9, section 3, page 52, I propose to insert:

Provided, That all bids for supplies of wheat, corn, flour, feed, oats, bacon, beef, pork, and other provisions, and also cattle for the Indians, and all bids for transportation of such supplies under this act, shall be received and opened and the contracts awarded at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley, but this shall only apply to the regular annual lettings.

Mr. BECK. I raise the point of order on that. It changes existing law.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the point is decided—

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to say a word before the point of order is decided.

decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. Section 3 which is contained in this appropriation bill is the only provision on the subject, and if this amendment is subject to the point of order, then the section itself is subject to the same point of order. This is only in the same line with the provision in the bill which runs with the appropriation, and with it only. I submit to the Chair that it does not bring up the same point on which the amendment was decided out of order that I offered yesterday to the amendment of the committee on page 53, because that amendment the amendment of the committee contemplated action out. ment to the amendment of the committee contemplated action outside of this appropriation. But this has reference alone to the appropriation made by this bill, and is only an additional regulation to that already provided by the committee, and if that is out of order I think there ought to be some chance of raising the same point of order upon section 3

Mr. BECK. I believe there can be no longer debate on this point

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas received the unanimous consent of the Senate to make his statement. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. On page 36, in line 874, I move to insert before the word "and" the word "Niobrara," which is the western terminal point of a branch of the Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad on the Niobrara River, and is the nearest railroad point to the Rose Bud agency. That would make that a competitive point for transportation.

Mr. BECK. Is there a new railroad extending out there?

Mr. BECK. Is there a new railroad extending out there?
Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir.
Mr. BECK. I have no objection.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment, to be inserted after the word "dollars," in line 1166:

Provided. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever it can be done advantageously, to purchase for use in the Indian service, from Indian manual and training schools in the manner customary among individuals, such articles as may be manufactured at such schools and which are used in the Indian service. Accounts of such transactions shall be kept in the Indian Bureau and in the training schools, and reports thereof made from time to time.

Mr. BECK. The Committee on Appropriations had that subject under consideration, and we referred it to the Indian Committee to see what they had to say about it; therefore I will not make any point of order upon it if that committee recommend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Coke.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his amendment

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no further amendment be moved, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to reserve the right to move to amend on page 24 when the bill shall reach the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have that right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have that right.
Mr. PADDOCK. And also on page 48.
Mr. BECK. Was there not an amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] pending relative to the Cheyennes on which the yeas and nays were ordered?
Mr. PLUMB. I desire a vote on that.
Mr. INGALLS. I shall ask a vote in the Senate on the provision of the bill in reference to the board of Indian commissioners.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to have the amendment which he offered some time since, now considered?

Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the amendment reported.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.
The SECRETARY. The amendment is to add after line 233, in the appropriations for the Cheyennes and Arapahoes:

For the purchase of seeds and implements, as provided in article 8 of the treaty of 1868 with said Indians, subject to the provisions and limitations of said treaty, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this amendment.
Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the provisions of the treaty under which this amendment is offered.
The provisions of the treaty with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes and of the treaty with the Southern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, if they are to be distinguished in that way, are precisely the same nearly all the way through, and this provision as has been here-tofore quoted, provides that the Government shall give to each head of a family or lodge who shall have selected a piece of land a certain amount in dollars or the value in seeds and agricultural implements for the first year and a certain other amount for the second year. Then it goes on to provide:

For each male person over fourteen years of age, a suit of good, substantial woolen clothing—thereinafter more particularly described. Then each female is to have certain articles of clothing, and then the boys and girls shall have certain articles of clothing:

and in addition to the clothing herein named, the sum of $20,000 shall be annually appropriated for a period of thirty years, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in the purchase of such articles as, from time to time, the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper.

All these appropriations are several; that is to say, they are each of them provided for in the treaty and all of them are to be given to the Indians according to the terms of the treaty, no one taking the place of the other. In addition to that, in article 14 it is provided:

It is agreed that the sum of $500, annually, for three years from date, shall be expended in presents to the ten persons of said tribe who, in the judgment of the agent, may grow the most valuable crops for the respective year.

Mr. BECK. That has passed away, of course.

Mr. PLUMB. That is true, but I call attention to it for the purpose of showing that the Government has never offered it to the Indians and consequently has failed that far to do what the treaty

In the treaty with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, the most of which are in the Indian Territory, in addition to the provisions which I have quoted, there is this provision:

And, in addition to the clothing herein named, the sum of $10 shall be annually appropriated for each Indian roaming, and $20 for each Indian engaged in agriculture, for a period of ten years, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in the purchase of such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper.

Mr. BECK. On page 22 of the bill, from line 523 to line 530, we have given $35,000 to the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes to cover the allowance "for each Indian roaming and engaged in agriculture."

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that. Now I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky in that connection whether he can tell me if that appropriation was made last year or the year before.

Mr. BECK. It was made last year. I have the Indian bill of last was before me and I see that the senator in the second second year before me, and I can turn to it in a moment. I am very sure it was made last year.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall be able to show before I get through that if it was made, at all events it was not expended.

Mr. BECK. I am not sure how it was expended. There is great difficulty about the expenditure, I think. Mr. PLUMB. When I say "expended" I mean to say that the In-

Mr. PLUMB. When I say "expended" I mean to say that the Indians did not get it.

Mr. BECK. The estimate for fulfilling treaties with the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, "for each Indian engaged in agriculture in the purchase of such articles as from time to time the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper, as per sixth article treaty of May 10, 1868," was $35,000. That is the amount appropriated for the current year, and we made the same provision for the next year in this bill. the next year in this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. At the close of the article from which I have just been reading, article 6, it is further provided as follows:

And it is further stipulated that the United States will furnish and deliver to each lodge of Indians, or family of persons legally incorporated with them, who shall remove to the reservation herein described and commence farming, one good American cow and one well-broken pair of American oxen, within sixty days after such lodge or family shall have so settled upon said reservation.

And then follows in the article the same provision, that there shall

And then follows in the article the same provision, that there shall be $500 paid annually for three years "to certain Indians" from the date when they may commence to cultivate a farm.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will allow me again, I think the provision in the bill on page 40 was intended to cover that general class of cases. On page 40 of the bill is the provision to which I called attention the day before yesterday, when this question was up. Between lines 976 and 979 is found the following provision:

For subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $305,000.

There are about ten thousand Indians in all those tribes, the Arapahoes and Cheyennes comprising about fifty-six hundred of the ten thousand, so that from this provision for subsistence and civilization in general they will receive about $165,000 or $175,000 in addition to all the treaty stipulations.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not able to say now what definition might be given by the Department to the word "civilization." I wish to provide for giving the seeds and agricultural implements named in the treaty. It may be that they would be regarded as civilizing appliances, but possibly they would not be so regarded.

Mr. BECK. We have no distinct information. We know that none of them came within the prevision of the triple of the treaty.

of them came within the provision of the eighth article of the treaty, which provides that when they have selected lands and received their certificates then the seeds and other objects the Senator is seeking to provide for may be allowed. We know that nothing of that sort has been done, and therefore we have no right at present to make the provision that is proposed in the amendment now pending.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator in charge of the bill will hardly say that, after the statement read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior the other day to the effect that there is a considerable amount due these Indians by reason of that fact now.

Mr. BECK. There is an item in the tabulated statement of $2,500 for two years, but I thought it all wrong, and no attention has been called to it by the Department whatever.

Mr. PLUMB. My position upon the amendment goes to the sufficiency of the appropriation, not merely in detail but in gross. Some reference has been made here to the testimony taken before a committee of this body which visited the Indian Territory last summer. I desire to call attention briefly to some parts of that testimony, only a portion of which I have before me, to show that the appropriations have never been adequate, or at least that they were not adequate last year. The testimony of Agent Miles is as follows:

last year. The testimony of Agent Miles is as follows:

Q. I understood you to say a while ago that during all the time the Indians have been here they have complained that their rations have been insufficient?

A. They have, very frequently.

Q. In making up your estimate for rations to be provided for the Indians, do you estimate for the full fiscal year or for so many months?

A. For the full fiscal year.

Q. For full rations according to law?

A. For the established rations.

Q. Were those rations supplied to you by the Government?

A. No, sir.

Q. Why were they withheld?

A. I have always understood it was on account of the funds being exhausted.

Q. How many months in each year have they been withheld, taking the whole time; about what percentage of rations has been withheld?

A. Take a year, or two or three years, and I could give you just what it was; but it would be mere guess-work to say what per cent.

Q. Would the shortage amount to as much as three months in each year?

A. Yes, sir.

So it appears, according to the testimony of the agent, that there has been a shortage on an average of three months in each year since the Government came into treaty relations with these Indians. When it came to the question as to whether the Indians got the clothing provided for or not, this occurred:

By Mr. MORGAN:

Q. Can you furnish the committee a list of the annuity goods you are authorized to issue—annuity goods, in distinction to implements of agriculture, &c.—so that we can see the amount of goods going to one individual?

A. The annuity goods are provided for by treaty; that is, the treaty provides a certain amount of clothing for each person; but I think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has used a certain amount of discretion; he used to send blankets and stronding, but that has been changed, and they are not sent as annuity goods any

Q. Are any axes, plows, hoes, implements of agriculture, or cooking implements, knives, or anything of that sort included in the treaty by which your distribution of annuity goods is regulated?

A. I so understand it; they are sent here by the Department as a part of the annuity.

Q. So when you issue a plow or a hoe

The question was interrupted by the witness at that point-

A. I ought to say, by way of explanation, that there is another fund, called a "beneficiary fund," of $20,000 a year—which is the fund provided for in the section under considerationfor the benefit of this agency; I think the knives and smaller hardware are purchased from the annuity fund, though I am not certain just what funds the different purchases are made from; and I have reason to believe that the plows and agricultural implements are bought with the money from that $20,000 beneficiary fund.

O. In giving out annuity goods you understand what is included and what is not included?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not, under that list, give out plows, hoes, &c.?

A. We do not; but sometimes, where something of that sort is left over, we issue such things in addition to the annuity goods.

It seems, according to the statement of the agent, that all they have had is from this $20,000, which was intended by the treaty to be, as it is expressly stated to be, in addition to the agricultural implements provided for by the treaty. In regard to the necessity of this provision for these Indians, on the next page of the testimony, page 68, is the following:

Q. Can you give the committee any definite idea of the number of farms that have been settled upon and placed under cultivation by the Arapahoes and Cheyennes on your agency?

A. Well, there are a good many places that is, patches, as you might say, I hardly know whether you would call them "farms." If an Indian opens up an acre of ground and cultivates that well, I think it is better than to open up a hundred-acre farm under a white man.

That simply shows that the Indians are making use of such appliances as have been furnished them. It is said in another place that there have not been agricultural implements enough. In regard to this annuity matter let me read:

Q. You had for annuity purposes how much money appropriated ? A. For clothing 14,000-

Which is precisely the sum appropriated in this bill-which is precisely the sum appropriated in this bill—and for beneficiary purposes $20,000 dollars; but I do not know how much of that $20,000 was expended for annuities; I only know that it could not all have been expended for that purpose, for some of it I know was used for other purposes.

Q. The $14,000 and the $20,000 makes $34,000; now let me understand—this covers all the appropriations that you had from which to supply these wants?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Still you make a requisition, because in your best judgement you think it is needed to supply the wants of the Indians under your charge, of over $47,000 ?

A. Yes, sir.

That is to say, the Indian agent down there, acting under the provisions of this treaty, governing himself by the treaty with reference to that which the Indians are entitled to receive, made a requisition for supplies amounting to over $47,000, and the response of the Department and of Congress to it was an appropriation of $34,000.

Q. Therefore, assuming that you made a requisition for no more than you deemed necessary, there was a deficiency of at least $13,000?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you get along with that deficiency; how did you manage to make thirty-four thousand dollars' worth of goods supply $47,000 of necessities; how did you distribute the goods when they arrived; did you give to each Indian as he came along what he asked for, or did you undertake to expend the $34,000 of $47,000 of necessities as well as you could?

A. That is just what I did.

O. Then you did not give to each Indian all that you really thought be needed.

A. That is just what I did.
Q. Then you did not give to each Indian all that you really thought he needed, but tried to make thirty-four thousand dollars do the work of forty-seven thousand?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In your opinion, did this lack of over $13,000 distress the Indians here?
A. Well, now, I do not think I can recall to mind any particular case of actual distress; of course they went without some things that it would have been very convenient and comfortable for them to have had.

By Mr. PLUMB:

By Mr. Plums:
Q. I wish now to refer you to the treaty between the Government of the United States and the Cheyennes and Arapahoe tribes of Indians, proclaimed August 19, 1868, and to inquire how far the provisions of that treaty have been fulfilled so far as you are concerned. That treaty provides that the United States shall deliver, "on the 15th day of October of each year, for thirty years, the following articles, to wit: for each male person over fourteen years of age a suit of good, substantial clothing, consisting of coat, pantaloons, flannel shirt, hat, and a pair of home-made socks." Now I will ask you, Mr. Miles, whether you have delivered to each male person over fourteen years of age among these Indians a suit of good, substantial clothing, consisting of coat, pantaloons, flannel shirt, hat, and a pair of home-made socks? socks?

A. I do not believe I have.

Q. Well, have you delivered the equivalent of those goods?

A. I would hardly be able to state positively without looking at my lists; when we get our annuity goods in, we make out a list of what we can give to each person.

Q. Have you given to each male and female Indian, each year, the equivalent of these things mentioned in the treaty?

A. I do not believe I have.

Q. Why have you not issued to these Indians the articles mentioned in this treaty or their equivalent?

A. Simply because they were not sent to me by the Government.

Q. Have these goods mentioned in the treaty, or their equivalent, been issued, each year, to the Southern Cheyennes and Arapahoe Indians?

A. I do not think they have; I know that they have been dissatisfied with our issue, because the Kiowas and Comanches would come up here and say, "We got so much." There are less of them in number, and each one gets more goods.

Q. Have you issued each year to these Northern Cheyenne Indians, "in addition to the clothing previously named, the sum of $10 to each Indian roaming and $20 to each Indian engaged in agriculture in the purchase of such articles as, from time to time, the condition and necessities of the Indians may indicate to be proper," and for their own personal benefit?

A. If that has been done, it has been in some way that I have not known. If the funds have been expended in Washington in the purchase of subsistence, or something of that kind, I would not know it. I would have no means of knowing. They might, for aught I can tell, have been used by the Commissioner for the purchase of beef.

Q. But you have not delivered to the Indians any more beef, have you, than the rations called for under the treaty?

A. No, sir.

Q. And nothing is issued to these Indians by any one that does not come through your hands?

A. Not that I know of, sir.

Q. Have you delivered to each Northern Cheyenne Indian who "has removed to this reservation and commenced farming one good cow and one well-broken pair of American oxen," as required by the provisions of the treaty?

A. No, sir.

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you teachers, and a miller, and an engineer, and a blacksmith, and a

Q. Have you teachers, and a miller, and an engineer, and a blacksmith, and a sawyer?

A. We have teachers and a blacksmith; but the miller, engineer, and sawyer are all merged into one; one man fills the three positions.

Q. I will ask you whether or not, when this trouble with the Northern Cheyennes occurred, if you had had it in your power to have offered them a larger amount of annuity goods than they had been getting—for instance, the annuity goods provided for them by the treaty, including $20 each, if they went to farming, and an American cow and oxen—I will ask you whether or not that would have had a tendency to mitigate their discontent?

A. It might, to some extent; but they were exceedingly dissatisfied with the country and affairs here, and I would not like to venture the statement that it would have mitigated it much.

Q. Would not the delivery of more annuity goods and a full supply of rations tend to make them contented?

A. Yes, sir. If you will furnish me enough food and clothing, I will agree to keep the Indians peaceable and quiet all the time.

Q. Would not the delivery of cows and oxen to Indians engaged in agriculture tend to make them satisfied?

A. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would not the offering of them to others tend to induce them to engage in agriculture?

agriculture?

A. I can scarcely answer yes as to that in the fullest sense.

Q. Well, speaking generally, would not that be the general tendency? If you say to the Indian, "I will give you a cow and a pair of oxen, a plow, and other farming implements, if you will settle down and take a piece of land," would not that be a greater inducement and be more likely to influence them to go to farming than if you had nothing to offer them?

A. Yes, sir; it will hold good among the Indians as well as among the whites that surrounding influences will have their effect.

This inquiry was made because the Senate desired to know what was the cause of the outbreak among the Northern Cheyennes which occasioned the devastation of the entire western frontier of Kansas and the loss of a great many lives and the destruction of a great deal of property, as well as the commission of a great many outrages not here to be named. It appears distinctly from the testimony that the rations, the clothing, and the annuity goods generally which had been provided by the treaty to be given to these Indians, under the solemn sanction and promise of the Government, had not been given to them. As to what the conclusion of the committee may be as to the effect it had on the Indians in the way of occasioning outbreak I have nothing here to say; in fact, I do not know; but the truth is that it was definitely disclosed that during all the time these Indians have been in the Indian Territory under the provisions of this treaty they have not had either the full amount of food to which they were entitled under the treaty; nor have they had the annuity goods to which they were entitled under the treaty; nor have they had the seeds and implements they were entitled to under the treaty; nor have they had the fund which Congress provided for in that treaty to be given to them as an inducement to encourage them in agriculture; nor have they been given the cattle which it provided for. In other words, the Government has stripped them to a degree which would have produced dissatisfaction among any people and with which the Indians themselves would be more likely to have been dissatisfied than any other people could have been. The agent, in speaking about the effect of the failure of the Government to keep its promises to these Indians, said as follows:

Q. In regard to promises made to Indians, are they as particular about having promises fulfilled as white people are?

A. More so, sir; more so.
Q. I will ask you whether the prompt fulfillment of all pledges made to them by the authorities is not essential to keeping them contented and in good spirits?

A. It is absolutely necessary.
Q. And delay in the fulfillment of promises made is held to be an act of bad faith?

faith?

A. Yes, sir; it is commented upon bitterly and widely; made the subject of general discussion in their camp. I would never promise an Indian anything that I was not certain I could comply with. I have sometimes promised things to the Indians, on the strength of promises made me by other people, that I have afterward found myself unable to carry out.

Q. And that would result in dissatisfaction and discontent?

A. Yes, sir; it would make them very discontented; you never can explain away anything of that sort satisfactorily to an Indian. Take Powderface, and some of the Arapahoes that have been with the whites a good deal, and you can explain things so that they will understand; but to the others you can't; with them it is either a lie or a truth.

There is no middle ground.

In the first place, this treaty should be carried out because it has been made and because every single article named in it is really essential for the Indians. The part of it which relates to supplies which have a tendency to encourage habits of agriculture and industry, and a disposition to cultivate the soil and take care of cattle, was essential not merely for their present well-being but for their future prosperity and for the economy of our dealing with them hereafter. It is the opinion of the agent down there, as it has been the opinion of the Army officers who have come in contact with these Indians, that under a proper system of encouragement they can be made self-supporting within a very short period of time.

While upon that point I may state what General Miles said to this committee the other day. He said of these Northern Cheyennes, the subject of his treaty, about three hundred, I think, are located at Fort Keogh, on the military reservation at that place, under his charge, and during the time they have been located there, now some two years, they have never had one single dollar from the Government, and yet they have opened up farms upon the reservation; they cultivate vegetables and corn, wheat and other things, which are sold about the post and are used by them as food. He says that they have learned to take care of the money which they get in working for the Government, some of them being employed as scouts, guides, &c., as well as the soldiers under his command. He says that the Indians being paid at one time at a point remote from the place where their families were located, sent more money home to their families than did the white soldiers under his command. He says further that the amount of land cultivated by the three or four hundred Indians at amount of land cultivated by the three or four hundred Indians at that post, without any encouragement upon the part of the Government in the way of supplies, is greater than that cultivated by the entire congregation of Sioux now at their agency on the Missouri River, numbering several thousand. They have become emulous in these matters, desirous of being self-supporting; and to the extent that they have facilities afforded them by the Government that feeling will continue. The time will shortly arrive, if we can break through the routine and the habit which has surrounded them long enough to enable us to treat them fairly when they will put them. through the routine and the habit which has surrounded them long enough to enable us to treat them fairly, when they will put themselves in a condition where they will be self-supporting, not only ridding the Government of the necessity of large annual appropriations, but getting rid of all the scandal which necessitates the employment of ten persons annually to watch all the other persons in the Interior Department, and without anybody to watch them.

In addition to the purchases of agricultural implements and seeds out of a fund which was not intended for any such purpose, which has consequently diminished the fund they otherwise would have the benefit of for medicines to be provided, and that is a very essential thing. I desire to call attention to it because the testimony of the Department is conclusive that last year there was not money enough for that purpose. It is in evidence here that there was only one physician provided for over five thousand Indians in the agency; that there were hundreds of these Indians sick; that while the requisition for medical supplies was made upon the Department in May the medicines themselves never arrived at the agency until the January following; that during that time some two or three score of these Indians died, and that when they broke away from the agency and committed the outbreak, which has been before spoken of, they said in doing so that they might as well die fighting as die from disease. During all the months of time in the malarial season, when these Indians were sick with a disease of which they knew nothing, there was, as I said, only one physician, and he had absolutely no malarial medicine whatever at the post. The doctor testified before the committee that he shut up his office in order not to encounter the sick Indians who came there begging for assistance, which he could not give them by reason of the fact that there was no medicine on When we come to examine the matter and to look at the requisition as made by the doctor and to the supplies after that estimate had been revised, we found that it had been cut down. reply of the Department was that it was cut down not because they did not believe the medicines were needed but because the money had not been provided to purchase them.

I may remark here, as illustrating to some extent the rather cumbersome and dilatory method which has in some degree characterized the transaction of business in the Department heretofore, that while the contract for medicines for that year was awarded on the 19th day of June, the contract itself was not approved until the 27th day of August following; the medicines under that contract were not delivered until the 28th day of November following; and the supplies were not delivered at the post until the 17th day of January thereafter, more than seven months after they had been applied for, after the sickly season had gone by, after these deaths and this sickness had ensued, after this outbreak had occured by reason of it, after the entire frontier had been devastated, after the Government had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in pursuing the Indians, and after the lives of forty or fifty innocent settlers upon the frontier had been lost.

This is not a sentimental question. It is not merely a question of keeping a contract on the part of a great Government. It is a quesreeping a contract on the part of a great Government. It is a question which affects the lives and the property of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people. It is a question of ever-present interest to the entire frontier. Just so long as the Government will, in disregard of its obligations, assume to keep these Indians without furnishing them the supplies to which the treaty entitles them, just so long as they are not only permitted but required to go hungry and unclothed, just so long as they are permitted to live in sickness followed by death because they do not have the medical attendance and the medicines which they ought to have, just so long there will be an ever-present danger to that entire frontier, and just so long will the Government save at the spigot and lose at the bung, because the cost last year and in 1878 in pursuing these Indians by the Army was more than the entire appropriation for their benefit.

I do not speak of these things for the purpose of arraigning any-body. It would do no good to the men who lie in their graves upon that frontier; it would bring nobody back to life; it would restore none of those households devastated by the torch; it would do no good; but an immense and a fearful responsibility rests somewhere.

For the purpose of enforcing what I have said about the supply of medicine (and it is in the line of my argument to show that the Government has always supplied these Indians in an insufficient manner) I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of the physician at that agency:

Q. Are you the physician in attendance at this agency?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you been here in that capacity?
A. Three years.
Q. During that time have you had any assistance?
A. Not until within the past two months.

Here were over five thousand Indians scattered within a radius of from fifteen to thirty miles, all of them under the control of one phy-

Q. For the past two months you have had some one to help you?

Yes, sir.

How much help have you had?

One assistant physician.

With that exception you have done all that has been done in your profession

A. Yes, sir.
Q. During that time, have you had furnished you by the Government all the supplies of medicine you need?
A. I have not.
Q. During what portion of the three years that you have been here has the lack of medicine been the greatest?
A. During the last year.
Q. You mean 1873?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you mean the calendar year or the fiscal year?
A. The fiscal year ending with July 1, 1878?
A. The fiscal year ending with July 1, 1878?
A. No, sir; the greatest scarcity of medicines was at the time between the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1878, and the 17th of January following, when we received our drugs, which should have been received on the 1st of July.

Six months and a half elapsed between the time when the medicines should have been received in order to have been available for the purposes for which they were supposed to be purchased and the time when they were actually received:

Q. Previous to August, 1878, was there any lack of medicines ?

A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you remember the time when the Northern Cheyennes were brought down

A. Yes, sir, I remember the time.
Q. Do you remember when a portion of them broke away?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Between the time they came here and the time they went away was there any ek of medicines?
A. There was.
Q. Much or little?
A. There was a great body.

A. There was.
Q. Much or little?
A. There was a great lack of medicines.
Q. Was there any particular medicine of where there was an especial lack?
A. Yes, sir; there was a special lack of quinine, a preparation of cinchona, much needed in this country.
Q. Is there more demand for this medicine than for any other kind?
A. There was at that time.
Q. What diseases afflict the Indians most?
A. Malarial diseases of different varieties.
Q. Did you make your lack of medicines known to the proper authorities?
A. I did.
Q. To whom?
A. To the agent here.
Q. You had no authority to make it known elsewhere?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know whether the agent communicated the fact to the authorities above him?
A. Yes, sir; I know that he did.
Q. Did you urge upon him the necessity of having more medicine here?
A. I did.

A. I did.

Q. How far were they encamped from here the most of the time?
A. About twelve miles.

A. I visited them whenever I had anything to give them in the shape of medicines.

Q. How much of the tim Q. How often was that?
A. I should say once a week.
Q. How much of the time after they came here and before the outbreak were you entirely out of the medicines they needed?
A. Well, sir, I was out of it most of the time.
Q. When not entirely out of it, were you short of it?
A. Yes, sir, I borrowed from the post-surgeon all that the military could spare; I also borrowed from the lower agency, but was still short.
Q. Had you need of the same kind of medicines in treating the diseases of the other Indians?
A. I had.

A. I had.

Q. Were you at any time, when called upon by the Northern Cheyennes for aid, compelled to decline to go, for any reason?

A. No, sir; I never declined to go; but I have left the office because I had no medicine to give them.

Q. You left the office to avoid being called upon?

A. I left there because I knew that I had no medicine to give them, and I could not bear to see them suffering for lack of a few doses of quinine.

Q. Was their suffering considerable? Was the absence of quinine a cause of much or little distress to the Indians?

A. It was the cause of very great distress to them; they were dying from sickness, without its being in our power to alleviate their sufferings.

Q. Can you tell how many of them died during that time?

A. I could refer to my monthly sanitary reports and find out how many died under my treatment; but owing to my limited supply of medicines some died whom I did not attend; so my reports would not be a fair criterion to go by.

Q. Has anybody the means of ascertaining the mortality among them during that time?

A. I think not.

Q. The agency has no knowledge regarding the matter besides the personal knowledge of the physician?

A. I think not.

Q. You think that some deaths occurred that did not come under your observation?

A. Yes, sir; just how many I cannot say.

A. Yes, sir; just how many I cannot say.

Q. What effect did it have upon them; did it have a tendency to create discontent among them?

A. I think it did; I know they complained to me about it.

Q. Did they complain that they had more sickness here than they had up north?

tent among them?

A. I think it did; I know they complained to me about it.

Q. Did they complain that they had more sickness here than they had up north?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did they say about it?

A. They said there was more sickness among them than ever before. They had come from a non-malarial district into a malarial district; and the result was that, being unacclimated, there was probably, according to their number, more sickness among them than among our own people.

Q. Did they appear to have any acquaintance with these diseases to which they are more liable here?

A. No, sir.

Q. It was a new thing to them?

A. Yes, sir; it was a new thing to them.

Q. Does that include fever and ague?

A. Yes, sir; that was the most common form of malarial disease from which they suffered.

suffered.

Q. Did they seem to have any knowledge of fever and ague?

A. No, sir.

There is abundance of testimony, of which that is a sample, all to the same purpose.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Having heard the testimony read by the Senator from Kansas in regard to the supply, or want of supply, of medicines at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe agency, not knowing where he locates the responsibility for the want of medicines there, I wish merely to say that in order to understand where the responsibility should rest other testimony taken by the special committee in this matter must be considered besides that read by the Senator to show where that responsibility properly should rest, whether with the Department of responsibility properly should rest, whether with the Department of the Interior or with Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I especially avoided committal on that point. As I said, it would be perhaps useless or worse than useless in this connection to attempt to locate it. The Department says Congress has been niggardly of appropriations, and I think myself that so far as the appropriations of last year are concerned they were so manifestly inadequate that the Department was not responsible unless it might have been for the manner in which it distributed what was given it and for the delay in the Indians receiving the supplies. I do not even say that the responsibility of the Department lies there; but the point is that money enough has not been appropriated. More than that, the Government not only has not given these Indians enough for their clothing and for their food, but it has scarcely done one single thing of that which it promised to enable these Indians to employ themselves, to become farmers, or to do any useful thing. I notice all the way through it is in this same line. I notice here $75,000 for industrial schools, and I notice, I believe in regard to the Poneas, that there are $10,000 for industrial schools, $7,000 for employés, and $1,000 for seeds and agricultural implements. If that is not cultivating the head at the expense of the stomach, then I do not know what will accomplish that object. We are attempting to educate these people while at the same time we are doing nothing at all which leads them in the direction of self-support or of industrial labor or of any kind of practical accomplishment. You cannot expect an Indian to be docile that money enough has not been appropriated. More than that, the practical accomplishment. You cannot expect an Indian to be docile and tractable under the lack of food, while hunger is constantly pushing him and crowding him. It excites all the devilish ire of his nature; he avails himself of that as an excuse, for which perhaps he is very ready, to commit an outbreak and to devastate the frontier. When he does that he does not stop to consider that some particular person perhaps is responsible, and not the great body of those he encounters; but every white man is alike to him. It is the race in the concrete at which he strikes, and he kills all who come in his way. concrete at which he strikes, and he kills all who come in his way. The result is that while we make the appropriations, and while various persons enjoy the distinction and emoluments growing out of this service, it is the poor people on the frontier, who have gone there under the invitation of the Government, who not only bear all this burden, who not only have their property destroyed, their homes devastated, their lives taken, but, more than all that, who are held up as the cause and occasion of all this trouble, thus adding insult to injury.

I call the attention of the committee now to the fact that the agent states that last year not one single dollar of the $10 and the $20 per capita provided for by the treaty was expended at that agency. It could provided for by the treaty was expended at that agency. It could not have been contained in the item for clothing, because he says he did not have the clothing called for by the treaty. It could not have been included in the item for food, because he says their food was short, that it has been three months short on the average ever since he has been there. It could not have been the cattle, because he did not give them the cattle. In addition to that, General Miles said that a branch of this same tribe living at Fort Keogh, under his im-mediate command, have not received one dollar from the Government within the last two years. Consequently that must have gone into some other fund, civilization or otherwise. I would take the chance of having a little more flour, a little more beef, and a little more quinine, and some cathartics, against any "civilization" that can be invented by anybody. These Indians in their new relations there quinine, and some cathartics, against any "civilization" that can be invented by anybody. These Indians in their new relations there want substantials; they want food; they want clothing; they want implements; they want care; they want advice; they want example; they want invitations to go to farming. All the way through this testimony it is stated that the Indians are willing to work if they can have any kind of inducement to work.

You cannot hold out to an Indian something a long time in the future, and say, "work, because if you work you will arrive at this goal by and by." If the Government had said, "here is $500 to be distributed around among ten of you who make the most progress in farming," it would have been a present inducement held before their eyes, and would have induced them to go to work, and good results would have followed. The Government never authorized the agent to offer it to them. If you go to an Indian and say "if you farm a piece of land you shall have a cow and a pair of oxen and other help of that kind," that would be an inducement; but he wants to see that which he is to get; he wants to realize it. He does not want simply to know that it is put in a treaty, and that the agent will recommend it to the Great Father, and the Great Father will recommend it to Congress and that Congress at its pleasure will do just as it pleases, because he realizes then he will never get it. The lack is of present inducements to put before their eyes those things that they can see and realize in order to enable them to even make a start in the direction we expect them to go. I say the policy pursued is not only a piggardly one, but it is worse than that, it is a violation. in the direction we expect them to go. I say the policy pursued is not only a niggardly one, but it is worse than that, it is a violation of faith; it will result inevitably as it has heretofore, not merely in the loss of life, not merely in idleness, poverty, and vice, but it will result in outbreak and war and murder and rapine and arson, just as it always has done.

We shall never be safe so long as any considerable number of Indians shall be within the reach of white settlements until they have undertaken in some way to live by cultivating the soil or by raising stock, so as to take hold and carry in that direction their ambition and their energy. Until that time comes the frontier will never be and their energy. Until that time comes the frontier will never be safe. No army can make it safe. Here were five or six companies at Fort Reno. They were as nothing; it was a stern chase and a long chase for five or six hundred miles, with the soldiers rarely coming in sight of the Indians, and even when they did they were badly whipped everytime. There were not enough of them. They have on the frontier a double line, a line of settlements on one side of the Rocky Mountains of the state of the state of the state. and a line of settlements on the other, a distance probably of from seven to ten thousand miles; we have got a long line of coast, and for all that we have only twenty-five thousand men, ornamental and useful, put together. There is no way in the world whereby the military establishment of the kind we have can ever have 10 per cent. of the present force in a given place, nor will they likely be at any time where they will be needed for the purpose of suppressing trouble among the Indians.

among the Indians.

Therefore, as we cannot apply force to them successfully we must apply something else. We must live up to our treaties. We must detach the Indians from their wild habits, we must start them in the direction of doing something useful and becoming self-supporting. Until that time comes we can afford to pay them liberally and fairly what we have provided for them in our treaties; and we can afford to add to that if necessary. We can afford to take them under our charge for some good purpose, and not leave them, as they are now, simply the greatures of speculation and of caprice.

simply the creatures of speculation and of caprice.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have no answer to make to the very able speech of the Senator from Kansas as to the general management of Indian affairs. I have for years admitted that it has been bad, and he indicates that it is worse than I even supposed it had been. But he must not forget that the appropriations that we have been compelled to make to carry out the obligations of treaties are things that have been done years ago; that we are only required to furnish the necessary money to the heads of the Indian Department; and they are responsible themselves for the management of Indian affairs.

If, as the Senator has said, in May last estimates were made for

If, as the Senator has said, in May last estimates were made for what was necessary and the goods were not delivered until the following January, and thereby the Indians suffered, that is not the fault of Congress. If there have been fraudulent agents appointed, they are not agents that those of us at least on this side of the Chamber have had anything to do with the appointment of. We have given all the money that the Department required, all that the treaties required, and it does not lie in the months of gentlemen to say that because it has been misappropriated, because Indian affairs have been mismanged, therefore we are responsible.

cause it has been misappropriated, because Indian affairs have been mismanaged, therefore we are responsible.

The amount of this bill, as I said yesterday, in its total is $4,735,662.72. The whole estimate of the Department for everything, allowing every margin for contingencies, was $4,992,000. We have given within $250,000 of the estimate. We have given more than was given last year. We have provided for everything that the Department has told us it was our duty to provide for. That done, Congress can do no more. It is the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the duty of some of the committees who have charge of these things to propose of some of the committees who have charge of these things, to propose changes of the law if changes are needed. The Committee on Appropriations can only provide according to existing law, and we have provided according to existing law liberally for all the Indian tribes.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if this appropriations in a specific provided according to existing law liberally for all the Indian tribes.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if this appropriation bill contains everything the Department has asked for?

Mr. BECK. It contains substantially everything, because as I said a few moments ago it is within less than a quarter of a million dollars of all that the Department asked for in every form.

Mr. TELLER. Then I understand it is a quarter of a million less than they say they want?

Mr. BECK. Not for any of these items. We have given them all they have asked for on the subject now up; every dollar.

Mr. TELLER. I am not speaking of that. I am speaking of the general fact.

general fact.

Mr. BECK. Every dollar on the subject now under consideration and everything that the treaties call for has been provided.

Mr. TELLER. But you have cut down the estimate $250,000?

Mr. EATON. Not with relation to this subject.

Mr. TELLER. No; but with relation to the Indians.

Mr. BECK. We have cut down in some instances, but none bearing upon the feeding or clothing of the Indians.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the point; nothing required by treaty obligations

Mr. BECK. We have added to the estimates. We added $60,000 more than was estimated for, because of the supposed increased price of things that would have to be purchased. Not only have we gone up to the estimates for feeding and clothing, but we have added $60,000 because of the assumed increase of prices since the estimates

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Senator tell us wherein this quarter of a million of dollars has been cut down in the bill.

Mr. BECK. I could begin—

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean in detail.

Mr. BECK. I assert here that there is not the deduction of a dollar for the feedbase of the Laking County of the feedbase o

Mr. BECK. I assert here that there is not the deduction of a dollar for the feeding or clothing of the Indians. On the contray, there is $60,000 appropriated in excess of what the Department demanded, Mr. TELLER. The Senator refuses—

Mr. BECK. There is not a dollar asked for to carry out treaty stipulations that is not provided.

Mr. TELLER. What have you cut down?

Mr. WITHERS. We have reduced the salaries of the Indian agents.

Mr. TELLER. You could not have cut down a quarter of a million of dollars in the salaries of sixty-reight Indian agents.

Mr. TELLER. Tou could not have cut down a quarter of a million of dollars in the salaries of sixty-eight Indian agents.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the amount of the aggregate sum.

Mr. TELLER. That will not do. You could not have cut down a quarter of a million dollars in agents' salaries.

Mr. WITHERS. Whether it will do or not it is true. Here, for example, for the agent at the Warm Spring agency we appropriate $1,000; the estimate was $1,200. At the Klamath agency we allow $1,100; the estimate was $1,300. And so I could go on reading page after page. Whether the Senator believes it, those are the facts.

Mr. TELLER. Then I may be allowed to say, if the committee have cut down these agents a thousand dollars each, which they do not pretend to have done, they would have only reduced the estinot pretend to have done, they would have only reduced the estimates by $68,000 out of a quarter of a million dollars. I want to know where the Department said they needed this money and the committee cut down the estimates, whether the Department is responsible? Nobody can do them the injustice to say that they are responsible if they do not have the money that they say they want. If they come here and say they want money for agricultural implements, for seeds, or anything else, and the committee cut down the sum they ask it is or anything else, and the committee cut down the sum they ask it is rank injustice for me or anybody else to hold them responsible. I want them to have all the money they ask. I think it is bad economy, or no economy at all, to cut down these appropriations and then say we have given all the Department want to feed the Indians. That is what I complain of. We simply do feed them instead of putting them on the road to civilization. If the Department say they want money for any purpose connected with the management of the Indians, I think the Department ought to have it. We ought to give them a trial.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that in the item of pay of Indian agents the estimates were $106,200, and the appropriations in the bill are $104,000. That accounts for $2,000 in the one item of Indian agents.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, that is $2,000 out of a quarter of a million.

Mr. WITHERS. Now, I can go through the bill and give the Senator every one of the items if he wants to have them given.

ator every one of the items if he wants to have them given.

Mr. BECK. I will say in addition to what has been said, looking over the bill hurriedly, that in the general incidental expenses of the Indian service the total appropriation we are making is $101,000, and the estimates were $259,000. There is three-fourths of all that is cut down, with the very item that my colleague is speaking about.

Mr. WITHERS. Here, again, in the pay of interpreters there has been a reduction in most of them. Nine hundred dollars was estimated at one point, and the appropriation is $600; in another the appropriation is but $400.

Mr. BECK. It is impossible to go over a bill of this sort and take item by item in a moment. I desire the Senator from Colorado to turn his finger to a single item where a treaty stipulation has not been provided for, where subsistence has not been given, where clothing has not been furnished as required, or where there has been in such a case a reduction of the estimates. On the contrary, I assert the fact to be true that $60,000 more than has been asked for has been given for all those things of which he complains. If there has been a cutting down in the salaries of some men who have been doing nothing heretofore, and that the Department still wants to keep there to do nothing except perhaps to run political machinery, the commit-tee had a right to cut them down, and did right in cutting them down; but all those matters in which the Indians themselves are interested tee had a right to cut them down, and did right in cutting them down; but all those matters in which the Indians themselves are interested have been provided for up to the estimates and beyond them.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have heard the complaint made that suitable men cannot be obtained for the Indian agencies because the salaries were not sufficient. The interests of the Indians are materially affected by the character of the agents they have. Why should the salaries, already said to be too low, be decreased?

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that there are no vacancies growing out of anybody refusing to work for the salaries which are now given. The posts are all full. That perhaps answers that suggestion.

Mr. McMILLAN. Not very fully, I think.

Mr. BECK. When we have given all the Department asked for; when neither the Indians themselves at this agency nor the Department are asking for any more money than we have given; when we have given for the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes, for which $5,000 more are now asked, $20,000 in one item, $14,000 in another; when we have given $2,100 to pay physicians and teachers; when we have given $40,000 to carry out treaty stipulations with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes that are now in the Indian Territory; when we have given $35,000 for the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes, for those engaged in agriculture, and roaming according to treaty stipulations, and $12,000 for the purchase of clothing, also by their treaty; and when, on page 40, from lines 976 to 979, we have made an appropriation for the subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes. $12,000 for the purchase of clothing, also by their treaty; and when, on page 40, from lines 976 to 979, we have made an appropriation for the subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, the Cheyennes, the Apaches, the Kiowas, the Comanches, and Wichitas, who have been collected upon the reservation set apart for their use and occupation, of $305,000, of which $165,000 or $170,000 go to these two tribes, and have made other provisions also for the Central agency, $18,000 more, of which they get the larger part—I would desire to know wherein there has been stinginess on the part of Congress or why $5,000 more should be given for an additional item? One hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars or $170,000 are given outside of treaty stipulations for subsistence and civilization, any part of which can be applied for the very purpose for which the Senator from Kansas now asks that $5,000 be appropriated. That sum is given to these two tribes in this $5,000 be appropriated. That sum is given to these two tribes in this bill in addition to all that is called for by treaty stipulations, and every dollar asked by the Department has been given, and $60,000 added.

The responsibility is somewhere else than upon Congress if the Indians are not properly cared for. When I turn to the treaties about which so much has been said as to these Indians being entitled to oxen and to seeds, I find that the treaties specifically provide that it is only when the head of a family or lodge shall have selected lands and received his certificate as above directed that he is to be entitled to certain things in the shape of agricultural implements and seeds. No such act has been performed by any one of these Indians; there has been no allotment in severalty, no right to claim seeds, oxen, agricultural implements, or anything. As we were advised by the Department, and as I said the other day, they are furnishing everybody who applied with all that is necessary for his purposes. We have given them ample means to do it. When we have agreed to do everything that can be done, why should we add $5,000 to this bill, when there is no complaint being made to us, and no suggestion from any quarter that anybody has any allotment in severalty or is asking to have such a provision made?

That covers the whole case, so far as the committee is concerned. I am as much opposed to the present system as the Senator from Kansas. I believe it has been dishonest from the beginning, and I believe until the Indian Bureau is transferred to the War Department it will continue to be so no matter what party is in power.

tinue to be so, no matter what party is in power.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether there has not been a very great change for the better within the last

Mr. BECK. There has been and it is improving every day. I have no doubt about that, and I believe it is because the present Secretary of the Interior, and the commissioners who are now aiding him, and the general sentiment of the country are working in that direction, that the improvement is going on. I know it is improving; there is no doubt about it, and we are furnishing the money without stint. Everything the Department say they can use we have given; and when, since the estimates came in, the Secretary told us that he believed the prices would advance for clothing and he could not get as much as he thought he could for the money, we gave him $60,000 more, so that there may not be any probability of a deficiency. The question was whether the price of provisions would not go up and if we ought not to provide more for that item. Consultation was had in the committee, and I do not think the Secretary seriously differed with us when we came to the conclusion that we could not tell so far in advance whether provisions would rise or not. If we have an abundant crop in this country and they have a scarcity in Europe, as they had last year, the chances are that the price of provisions will go up. If so, when we meet in December we can appropriate all that is needed. It may be, however, that there will be abundant crops in Europe, and with the great acreage sown here provisions will be very low, and therefore there will be no increased price of products, because they may be purchased for the price paid during the current year. These are things that cannot be determined now. We added to the clothing because they have to buy early in the summer; but we could not tell what would be the price of corn, the price of flour, the price of beef, the price of bacon, which may depend upon things not yet developed in the condition of Europe and in the condition of our own country. Many things may determine that question, and there can be no harm done by waiting a little while.

I say here in behalf of the committee that everything every member of the committee thought was best to do has been done. There never has been any politics in the Appropriations Committee since I have been a member of it. We have acted as business men would act with their own affairs, looking to see what was best for the Department, giving all that they thought necessary, but endeavoring to keep the bill down as low as we could, so that there would be no conflict between the two Houses and no charge of extravagance in expenditure. That has been the sole motive of the committee, gentlemen of both political parties concurring, and I hope the committee will be sustained in their action.

Mr. TELLER. I did not mean to say anything more upon this bill, but I am so utterly astonished to learn that the committee have cut down the estimates of the Department a quarter of a million of dollars, after what the Senator from Kentucky has so repeatedly said as to their liberality, that I am inclined to say a word or two further upon the bill.

That there is a fault somewhere everybody admits. You cannot find a man in the United States of ordinary intelligence who does not complain that there is a fault, but it is difficult to locate it. Some have said that it was in the character of the undertaking, which was too great, that we had undertaken too much, and that no class of men could carry out the ideas and progress as rapidly as public sentiment demanded. Others have said that it was inattention and fraud on the part of the public officials. Others have said that it was the fault of Congress; and I have believed a good deal of the time it was the fault of Congress, because we have not liberally appropriated money. But I did understand the committee to say, while this bill has been under discussion, that they had for once given the Secretary of the Interior what he demanded when he came here and said, "I need so much to carry on this work of civilization," for that is what it should be, and not simply a work of sustaining these people and keeping them alive. If we are to do nothing but feed them, we might as well let them die at one time as another, for every man who has looked at this question understands that unless the Indian changes his customs and his habits he is to go to the wall. Everybody knows it. It is not a question of feeding; it is a question now of putting them in a condition to live.

The committee have come here and have cut the estimate of the Department down, they say, $250,000, and when I inquire where the deduction was made they say that they have cut down $2,000 in the salaries of Indian agents and they have cut down a large amount of money on interpreters, which I think was unwise. But if they have cut down $2,000 on agents, and if they have cut down on interpreters $200 apiece, which they have not done, they have got about $15,000 or $16,000. Now where is the balance of this $250,000 ?

$200 apiece, which they have not done, they have got about $15,000 or $16,000. Now where is the balance of this $250,000?

Mr. BECK. We cut down $150,000 in the pay of employés as set forth on page 48 of the bill. The House gave $60,000 instead of $100,000 to employ additional Indian police. That accounts for nearly all of it. Not one dollar was cut down either in clothing, civilization, treaty stipulations, or anything else for the support of the Indians.

Mr. TELLER. By the bill the Department is cut down so that

Mr. TELLER. By the bill the Department is cut down so that they must select the very poorest class of agents. The Department need at an agency more than an ordinary man. They need good men, men who will go there with a desire to do these Indians good. The men who do not go there with that kind of sentiment and feeling will be of no use to the Government. You cannot hire men to go and take charge of Indians who are suitable and the right kind of men, for a thousand dollars a year. Yet I find that is the amount that is fixed in the bill.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] says, "We have fulfilled all the treaty obligations; we furnish all that there is required." That does not appear to be true if the statement of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] is correct; but the Senator from Kentucky gets around that by saying that the Department did not ask them to fulfill that portion of the treaty, and therefore it is not needed, and the Indians did not ask for it. We ought to appropriate money enough so that the Department cannot come here at the close of the fiscal year for which we are appropriating and say, "We have done but little in civilizing these Indians, because you did not give us enough money." It is not economy to say that you will give it to them in the way of a deficiency bill. The Department, to do them justice, ought to have the full amount to begin with in the commencement of the year, so that they can lay out their work and proceed in accordance with the policy they start out with.

I have complained of the Indian management, until I have grown sick and tired of it. For twenty years I have seen it; I have come in contact with them; and I know it has been a disgrace and a great burden to the nation. What I have complained of is that we simply take hold of the case for to-day, and if we furnish enough to keep the Indians from absolutely starving, members of Congress seem to think that they have done their whole duty both to the Indians and to the nation. What we ought to do is to do something to make them self-supporting. If the Department had come here and asked for a million dollars to be used in the discretion of the Department, although not having as much faith in the Department as some members of this body, I would have cheerfully voted for it, or even $2,000,000, if they said that they would use that amount not simply to sustain these Indians and keep them alive but to start them on the road to civilization.

That is why I said the other day that we wanted to furnish seeds, and to furnish implements, and that some discretion ought to be given to the Department. If they say they want a certain class of employés who cannot be hired for a thousand dollars a year, I say it is unjust to the Department to provide that they shall take an inferior class of men whom they may hire at $1,000. That is what we have attempted to do now for more than two hundred years, to civilize the Indians by bringing them in contact with a class of men who are hardly civilized themselves. We hire the poorest kind of interpreters and the poorest kind of agents, and when we get through at the end of the year, with the Indians half starved, we are astonished that they have not made more progress in civilization.

I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, and I think he said enough on that subject to convince the Senate that his amendment should be adopted. But I have not any idea the Senate will adopt it, and why? Because in a question of the expenditure of money my observation is that the Appropriations Committee are never overruled in this body. Therefore in the Senate we remit to the Committee on Appropriations the whole question of the appropriation of money for Indians, and we wash our hands of any obligation or of any responsibility because the committee have said that in their judgment a certain amount is sufficient. If the committee came here backed by the Department it would be bad enough to pursue such a narrow policy. I know myself personally that some of the items in this bill ought to be increased; I know that in the interest of good government and in the interest of the Indians and of peace on the frontier some of those items ought to be increased. I do not care if the Department were satisfied, with my knowledge of that matter I know that some items ought to be increased and I am prepared to vote to increase them. But when I am told that the committee have cut down the Department a quarter of a million dollars, I shall be ashamed at the end of this fiscal year to complain of the lack of progress which I am sure I shall be able to do if I live to come here next year. I want the Department to have money enough, and I repeat again, it is not economy to stand up in this body saving a little here and a little there and to go on forever clothing and feeding the Indians and keeping a great, expensive army which might be dispensed with practically if it were not for this Indian question.

Mr. BECK. We have cut down no man's pay below what he is getting now.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator what decrease

Mr. McMillan. I should like to ask the Senator what decrease was made in the amount asked for in the pay of the Indian police?

Mr. BECK. We have increased it from $60,000 to $30,000 at the request of the Secretary. The House allowed $60,000. We appropriate $80,000. The Department asked for $100,000.

Mr. McMillan. What was the estimate by the Secretary?

Mr. BECK. One hundred thousand dollars. The House allowed

$60,000 and we added $20,000 to it. That is one of the large items. The Secretary was entirely content with $80,000. He said he could get along very well with $80,000. Though he made a liberal estimate he did that in many other things to cover all contingencies. That is where the difference comes in. We increase it $20,000. He wanted $40,000 more than the House allowed, $100,000, but upon talk-wanted $40,000 more than the House allowed, $100,000, but upon talking it all over he said $80,000 would be very satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line 233:

For the purchase of seeds and implements, as provided in article 8 of the treaty of 1868 with said Indians, subject to the provisions and limitations of said treaty, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to have a separate vote on the amendment to which I called attention yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina will please indicate the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations striking out from line 1205 to line 1220, inclusive, on

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reserved.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment of the committee substituting the word "three" for the word "six," in section 3, line 4, page 52, in relation to the time supplies shall be advertised for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire a separate vote on that amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reserved.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask a separate vote on the amendment in reference to the board of Indian commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be reserved. The question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the three which have been reserved for separate votes.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will now be taken on the amendments on which a separate vote has been asked. The first will be the amendment indicated by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. An amendment made by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, was to strike out from line 1171 to 1174, inclusive, as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws creating or authorizing the commission of ten citizens provided for in the act of 10th April, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Expenses of Indian commissioners: For the expenses of the commission of citizens, serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas and ask that the question be divided, and that the first vote be on the lines stricken out from line 1171 to line 1174.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot divide a motion to strike out and insert.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not divisible.

Mr. MAXEY. The question is susceptible of a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule prohibits it.

Mr. FERRY. A motion to strike out and insert cannot be divided. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule forbids it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule forbids it.

Mr. MAXEY. The lines stricken out repeal the law creating this commission. That provision being stricken out, the next part makes provision for the payment of the expenses as the law now stands. The question itself is susceptible of division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not under the rules.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that he can accomplish his object in another way. He has a right to move to amend the matter proposed to be inserted, and he can so amend that as to neutralize it. If he wants to vote in effect upon striking out alone, he can amend the part of the motion which is to insert so as to make that ineffectual, and that will give him a vote upon the motion make that ineffectual, and that will give him a vote upon the motion to strike out substantially.

Mr. MAXEY. I am obliged to the Senator from New York. Then I move to amend the amendment by inserting:

That all laws and parts of laws creating or authorizing the commission of ten citizens provided for in the act of April 10, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does the Senator propose to insert those words?

Mr. MAXEY. Right where they stand. They are the words the committee's amendment has struck out.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on that. That amend-

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on that. That amendment changes existing law.

Mr. CONKLING. That is no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is under our rule.

Mr. CONKLING. If you do not appropriate money?

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot change the law by an amendment to an appropriation bill, under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. EATON. I desire to suggest to my friend from Texas that I hardly think it possible that he contemplates that what he proposes can be an amendment to the paragraph. For that would make its two. can be an amendment to the paragraph, for that would make its two parts in direct contradiction to each other. Perhaps I am with the Senator in what he desires; but I do not see that his proposed amendment accomplishes it.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not pretend to understand anything about rules. I do pretend to know, however, that if these lines are stricken out then the subsequent lines making an appropriation would of course be correct; but if these lines are restored, then the subsequent lines making the appropriation would be incorrect and out of place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Texas is laboring under a misapprehension. As the bill came from the House it proposed a certain piece of legislation to repeal an existing establishment. The Committee on Appropriations were of opinion that that change in the law ought not to be made. If not made, it was necessary to we have law ought not to be made. If not made, it was necessary to make a suitable appropriation to execute the existing law. They accordingly amended the bill by striking out the repealing clause and inserting in its place a provision to carry out the law as it would stand if not repealed.

Mr. MAXEY. I understand that is just what we have done now. Cannot the Senate disagree in some way with the action of the committee !

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, and the only way to do that is to vote down the amendment. If the Senate votes "nay," that leaves the appropriation cut out and leaves the law repealed. There is no difficulty in reaching it. All those who wish to keep the Indian commission now vote "yea," in favor of the amendment recommended by the committee striking out from the bill the repealing clause and appropriating money to carry on the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment of the Senator from Texas is not in order. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Chair rule that in this instance the striking out of the lines from 1171 to 1174, and the insertion of the lines from 1175 to 1179, is one indivisible motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FERRY. The rule is explicit.
Mr. INGALLS. This is not an amendment to strike out and insert, as I understand. There are two independent amendments offered by the committee. It is not one divisible amendment. The committee in the first place propose to amend the bill of the House as it comes from the House by striking out three lines, and that is one motion; and the amendment offered by the committee in addition to that is, if that prevails then certain other words shall be inserted.

Mr. FERRY. I remind the Senator from Kansas that in committee the motion was to strike out and insert.

Mr. WITHERS. To strike out and insert. It was voted upon as one amendment.

Mr. FERRY. That was carried; and the rule is explicit that a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. INGALLS. Nobody denies that a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible. But that is not the question. I contend that here are two separate, independent amendments offered by the committee. We are entitled to a separate vote on each one of those amendments

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is mistaken. Both propositions were offered as one amendment. The House bill was amended by the committee by a recommendation to strike out and insert. It was considered by the Senate in that light, and voted upon in that light in the Committee of the Whole. Therefore it stands now as one amendment, and the end sought to be attained is simply as the Senator from Vermont says to be accomplished by voting down the amendment which was adopted in Committee of the Whole. That will leave the bill just as it came from the House.

Mr. FERRY. I will add to what has been stated by the Senator from Virginia that, when that was pending, by unanimous consent the Senator from Vermont amended the text by consent of the committee and the Senate. But the question was taken upon the motion to strike out and insert. That was agreed to. The Chair has stated now that in the Senate the motion is to concur in the amendment made in committee which was to strike out and insert. made in committee, which was to strike out and insert.

Mr. WITHERS. If we vote that down, the bill will remain just as it came from the House in this respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the amend-

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that those who are in favor of abolishing the board of Indian commissioners will vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it exactly, and those who are in favor of keeping them will vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 33, nays 23; as follows: YEAS-33.

Anthony, Baldwin, Bayard, Beck, Blair, Burnside, Call, Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis.,	Conkling, Davis of W. So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is on page 50, to strike out from line 1205 to 1220, as follows:

For this amount, to pay the following-named persons the sums annexed to their names:

To J. D. Abbott, of Cherokee County, North Carolina, $175;
To M. C. King, of Cherokee County, North Carolina, $212.03;
To M. L. Brittain, of Cherokee County, North Carolina, $232; To Scroop Enloe, Jackson County, North Carolina, $232;
to Scroop Enloe, Jackson County, North Carolina, $123.35; total, $744.38; Provided, That the amounts due as above set forth be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees; and the proper accounting officer of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sums to the above-named persons.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Secretary to read the letter which I send to the desk upon which the committee acted in that regard. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, April 27, 1880.

Sir: In answer to your verbal inquiry in relation to certain claims in favor of J. D. Abbott, M. C. King, M. L. Brittain, and Scroop Enlee, amounting to $744.88, for the payment of which an appropriation was made in House bill No. 4212, I have to say that an appropriation for the payment of these claims was inserted in the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Interior Department for the fiscal year 1877, approved August 15, 1876, and under instructions from the Department these claims were forwarded to the accounting officers of the Treasury for the settlement under said act, without any recommendation from this office; but no payment was made by the Treasury Department, the claims not being considered proper ones. The act of August 15, 1876, states these claims to be for expenses incurred by Silas H. Sweetland, special agent sent by the Indian Department to make per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokees in 1879, whereas the accounts show that the claims are for merchandise, &c., furnished a number of Indians in 1868, and have no connection whatever with expenses incurred by Special Agent Sweetland.

This office is also informed that after the refusal of the Treasury Department to pay the claims the parties brought suit in the Court of Claims for the amount claimed by them. In view of that fact, and of the additional one that the claims are not considered proper ones against the United States, I respectfully recommend that the canount appropriated for the payment of the same by House bill No. 4212 be not concurred in by the Senate.

Very respectfully,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE, Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK, United States Senate.

Mr. BECK. That is all the information we had on the subject.
Mr. VANCE. The reading of that letter a second time in the presence of the Senate compels me to make a few remarks.

Mr. EATON. The question is brought up the second time, and it is necessary to read the letter the second time.

Mr. BECK. There may be some Senators present who did not hear it before

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not hear it before.

Mr. VANCE. There may be some Senators present likewise who did not hear me, and I think it very likely. At the time this matter was under discussion in Committee of the Whole yesterday, it will was under discussion in Committee of the whole yesteray, it is be recollected that I announced that I had applied to the Department or certain information which had not been furnished. Since that time it has been furnished in part. There was an armful of papers which I examined this morning brought to me from the Department.

which I examined this morning brought to me from the Department. In the first place I desire to say that the very claims which are now recommended not to be paid by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were urged to be paid by his chief, the Secretary of the Interior, and I saw his letter on file urging the payment of these very claims. These claims, it will be recollected, were passed by the Congress of the United States and approved by the President of the United States and were approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and were vetoed by the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department, and now the proposition that I make is to pass them over the Auditor's veto if there is any power in Congress to do that. I believe under the Constitution, however, it will only require a majority vote to do that. to do that.

It is stated in this letter that these cases were taken out of the Department and brought before the Court of Claims. That is only true in part. Two of these claims are still pending before the Department, and they are likely to pend there until the Angel Gabriel shall sound the trumpet, provided it is in the power of any subordinate of this Government to thwart the action of the Congress of the United States and the President thereof.

In relation to the charge that these claims were not properly expenses incurred by one Silas H. Sweetland who went out there as a special agent, I have to say that the papers which have been industriously kept behind show the fact that these claims arose in this way: For ten years the Cherokees in North Carolina had been paid way: For ten years the Cherokees in North Carolina had been paid nothing, and soon after the war they were in a starving condition. The agriculture of the country and everything else was in a bad way, and gentlemen, farmers and merchants and others, advanced supplies to them to keep them from starving to death, and took orders upon that special agent who was to go out at a certain time and distribute their pro rata payments among them, and these are the very orders which kept those Indians alive, and which were afterward confirmed by the council of the Cherokee Nation and ordered to be confirmed by the council of the Cherokee Nation and ordered to be paid. But because in the other act it was erroneously stated that they were a part of the expenses of Sweetland, the agent, the Second Auditor of the Treasury Department took it upon himself to refuse payment in the face of the law and in the face of the opinion of the Attorney-General also, as I understand.

With that explanation I believe the Senate can pass upon the mat-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment

Mr. BECK. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire on what we are to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On striking out lines 1205 to 1220,

Mr. CONKLING. So that to vote "yea" on concurring in the amendment of the Committee on the Whole strikes out these lines?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.
Mr. CONKLING. And to vote "nay" reinstates them in the bill?
May I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky how much money does all this involve?

Mr. BECK. Only $744. Mr. McDONALD. And thirty-eight cents.

Mr. BECK. Here are cases that four years ago were passed by Congress because these men were represented to have been aiding an agent of the United States, and when they came to file their claims the fact was exactly the reverse of what they stated, and it was for merchan-dise they claimed to have furnished the Indians. When the proper accounting officers of the Treasury came to look into them, they found they were not for what they purported to be, and he rejected them because they were not just claims. The Secretary of the Interior sent them there, because he believed the law was mandatory. The accounting officers found it was not, and they sent them back. They are now before the Court of Claims, and all the men who have good claims are willing to go there and trust them before the court.

Why are they now sought to be taken out from the Court of Claims, when we want are straight of the they call inst ? Sim.

Why are they now songut to be taken out from the Court of Claims, where so many are struggling to get the claims they call just? Simply because these men have no faith that they can carry them through before any court in the country, and fear that the Court of Claims will reject them and that the Supreme Court will reject them. Hence they come to Congress and are put in in the House, as many things are, and are sought to be put in in the Senate, on account of the sympathy for individual men. If these men have good claims why do they not stand on their own merits and go before the Committee on Claims? on Claims?

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator is there any pretense anywhere that anything stands in the way of their being heard on their merits in the Court of Claims?

Mr. BECK. Nothing in the world except that they have no merit and Congress is expected to give them merit by passing them here. If they have merit they are there, and the court can decide them. Why take them from the court if they have merit? If they have merit these men will be paid; if they have not they will not be paid

Mr. VANCE. The Senator omits to observe the statement which I made that two of these claims are not before the court.

Mr. BECK. I did not know whether any of them were or not; but the Commissioner said this; and I do not know that the Senator from North Carolina spoke from his own knowledge:

This office is also informed that after the refusal of the Treasury Department to pay the claims the parties brought suit in the Court of Claims for the amount claimed by them. In view of that fact, and of the additional one that the claims are not considered proper ones against the United States, I respectfully recommend that the amount appropriated for the payment of the same by House bill No. 4212 be not concurred in by the Senate.

That is the official information that we have. If the Senator from North Carolina knows that not to be true-

Mr. VANCE. I have the same knowledge that the Senator has. One official of the Government has told him, to wit, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that these claims were before the Court of Claims. An officer this morning who visited my room with the papers from the Treasury Department told me that two of them were not before the Court of Claims; but if they were, is it any argument that the claims are not just because they have once been passed by Congress, and a subordinate officer refused to pay them, and the parties then tried to get their money from another tribunal? Is that a sign that Is it not rather a sign that the parties believe in they are unjust? Is it not rather a sign that the parties believe in the justice of their own claims when they try every tribunal?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask my colleague how these claims can go before the Court of Claims? They are against the Indians and not against the United States.

Mr. BECK. The moment a judgment is obtained in the Court of Claims against any trust fund held by the United States a provision of law requires that it shall be paid out of the Treasury

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I understand the Senator from North Carolina aright, these are claims for subsistence and supplies furnished the Indians. They are claims against the Indians and not against the United States, and they are therefore properly brought before

Mr. BECK. But the Government of the United States holds the money for the Indians and pays it out of the Treasury in accordance with the judgment of the court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. These are claims against the Indians themselves for supplies and materials furnished to them when they were foundin a state of starvation.

Mr. BECK. The provision of the House bill declares:

Provided, That the amounts due as above set forth be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees; and the proper accounting officer of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sums to the above-named persons.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Still that does not make it a claim against the United States

Mr. BECK. But it is a claim against a fund held by the United States in trust, and so expressly stated, for these Indians.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the claim of these parties is not against that fund. The Government has power to use that fund to reimburse itself, but this claim is against the Indians, and not against the Government.

Mr. BECK. It is a claim, as set forth in the bill passed by the House, against a fund held in trust for these Indians, and we are to pay it out of their money, and we are ordering it to be paid if this bill passes and the amendment is voted down.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask if it is not merely against the Indian tribe, and of which, therefore, the Court of Claims has not jurisdiction?

Mr. BECK. If the Senator from North Carolina or the Senator from Tennessee will put it on that ground, that these parties cannot gain their case in the Court of Claims because there is no legal right, then they might come here if they have no legal remedy in the Court of Claims?

Mr. BAILEY. May they not have a right to an equitable remedy, a moral remedy, which the Court of Claims cannot furnish?

Mr. RANSOM. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to say that the Senate ought to vote to pay no claim that can be carried through the Court of Claims? Is that the rule the Senator proposes to lay down for us, that inquiry here is to be made preliminary to any vote whether the case can be carried before the Court of Claims, and if it can be carried before the Court of Claims, then it must be voted against here? Mr. BECK. I mean to say that when claims have been passed through Congress purporting to be for one thing that are shown upon their face to be for another, and when the accounting officers of the Treasury reject them because they are not proper claims, and when Treasury reject them because they are not proper claims, and when the parties then go to the Court of Claims with their cases, it is a bad sign to see them leave the Court of Claims, where all justice can be done them, and seek to put them through Congress rather than finish their cases in the court, and seek to put them into an Indian appropriation bill, rather than go upon the individual merits of their cases to the Committee on Claims, where they can be examined separately. arately.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? Mr. BECK. Certainly.
Mr. BAILEY. Is it disputed that these supplies were furnished to these Indians?

Mr. BECK. Is it averred by anybody that these were supplies?
These claims were put through Congress before upon the ground that they were for expenses incurred by S. H. Sweetland, in making payments to the North Carolina Indians, but when presented they were found not to be for services rendered to Sweetland at all, but pur-ported to be for merchandise furnished to the Indians. Why did they abandon the original case they presented, and put it in in another

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to get information. I understand the Senator from North Carolina to say that this claim is for supplies furnished to the Indians at a time when they were reduced to extreme poverty.

Mr. VANCE. And supplies necessary for their subsistence.

Mr. BAILEY. The claim may have been presented to Congress as a claim against the Indian agent, or as a claim presented by the Indians; but the question at dian agent for supplies furnished to the Indians; but the question at last is not how the claim may have been presented, but whether it is a claim for supplies furnished to the Indians in their necessities. It may not furnish the foundation for an action in the Court of Claims, whose jurisdiction is limited, as against the Indian trust funds, nor if it were in a court of equity properly so called might it furnish the ground for an action against the fund; but at last Congress is the custodian of the fund, and I wish to know whether Congress itself may not furnish a remedy as well as the court, and whether if Congress itself furnish the remedy it is necessary to resort to the court. After all, the question is simply what do conscience and good morals require.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee is very plain. The act of August 15, 1876, provides for the payment of these claims in these words:

For payment of the expenses incurred by Silas H. Sweetland, special agent, sent by the Indian Department to make a per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokees in 1869, to the following-named persons—

Among them those we are now providing for. Congress passed it Among them those we are now providing for. Congress passed it upon the assumption that it was for that purpose. When the claims came to be filed they were not for that purpose at all. They were rejected by the accounting officer. It was not mandatory upon them; it was a matter submitted to the accounting officer to be "charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees." Congress assumed that it had that fund in the Treasury in trust, with power to make proper payments out of it for necessary expenses connected with it. It turns out that when the claims were presented they were not for that purpose at all, but for dealings with individual Indians and for merchandise furnished to

I.r. McDONALD. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if there is any controversy as to the fact that the parties whose names are here embraced furnished these supplies to the Indians to the amount named: J. D. Abbott, $175; M. C. King, $212.03; M. L. Brittain, $232; Seroop Enloe, $125.35, making a total of $744.38 \frac{3}{2}$ Mr. RANSOM. My colleague has twice stated to the Senator from Kentucky that these supplies were furnished by the parties named, as the Senator from Indiana has just read, and that they were for subsistence furnished the Indians when in distress.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not care about that. The Senator from North Carolina gets up to tell me that his colleague has twice asserted this, that, or the other. If we cannot discuss a legal question without personal issues we are hardly able to discuss them at all. I am only telling what the Commissioner said. I am not making any issue with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. RANSOM. And no one has stated that the Senator from Kentucky is making any such issue. I am rather surprised at the Senator from Kentucky. I see no occasion for the loss of his temper.

Mr. BECK. I am only seeking to show the Senator from North Carolina that he had better keep his. I think I am in the best humor possible.

Mr. RANSOM. If this is the good humor of the Senator, I am very sorry for his bad humor. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. That does not proceed with this case at all. If the Senator from North Carolina has any evidence to show that these are proper claims to be put on this bill let him produce it. The Committee on Approximations had no information produce to them while them tee on Appropriations had no information relative to them while they were acting on the bill nor have they yet.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator from Kentucky will allow me to go a little further in what I wanted to say. I have not any doubt from his reading of the act of 1876 that the accounting officers properly rejected these claims under that act, because that was an act to reimburse this agent for his expenses, whereas when the accounts were presented it seems they were accounts for supplies furnished by other parties to the Indians. But if the supplies have been furnished to the Indians, is there anything wrong in our directing the payment now and the deduction of the amount out of the Indian fund? That is the question I want answered.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. I do not wish to yield the floor.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Only a question. I want to know whether the Senator from North Carolina has not stated and whether it is not the fact that the Indian council approved all these accounts?

Mr. VANCE. It is. I hold in my hand a copy of one of the orders of the council, which I propose to read if I can get permission to do

Mr. BECK. There will be no difficulty about the Senator from North Carolina getting all the time he desires. I shall be through in a minute. I am answering questions as fast as I can.

The Committee on Appropriations found that the act upon which these gentlemen relied was an act passed for the purpose of pay-

Expenses incurred by Silas H. Sweetland, special agent, sent by the Indian Department to make a per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokees in 1869, to the following-named persons.

Among them those here named. We found by a letter sent to us by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that these gentlemen did not pretend when they filed their claims that they were for any such purpose. Therefore, that act availed them nothing. This is a bill making appropriations for Indians, in which these Cherokees are not mentioned or known—an Indian appropriation bill to carry out the existing laws and the existing treaties. These men took their case to the Court of Claims. They have no more to do with this Indian bill than any other claims of any other men for any other thing, for there is nothing to which it can properly be attached. There is not trust fund mentioned in this bill bearing upon the question. Of course, we could not make a question on what the House did, but it could not be offered here as an original proposition. The provision having been put on this bill, we were advised by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the letter just now read from the Clerk's desk, that the claims had been disapproved by the Treasury, that they were presented for things not in accordance with the act passed in 1876; that they were still pending in the Court of Claims, and therefore we that they were still pending in the Court of Claims, and therefore we reported to strike out the provision. There has been no suggestion made that the Court of Claims cannot render judgment to pay them if the claims shall be found to be good. Neither the Senator from North Carolina, nor any other Senator, has suggested that there is any difficulty there if the claims are just. Then for the double reason that they had been found improper by the accounting officers, having been passed in the act of 1876 for one thing and presented for another, and that they were pending in the Court of Claims where there is no obstacle in their way yet suggested, and also because no fact was laid before us to indicate that there was any difficulty in the way, or that there was any action by an Indian council or that the way, or that there was any action by an Indian council, or that there was any reason why these claims should stand on a different footing from the claims of any other men, and why they should be dragged into a bill that had nothing in it in connection with them or any fund out of which they were to be paid, the committee thought they were not proper claims to be in this bill.

The Senator from North Carolina may have obtained this morning, The Senator from North Carolina may have obtained this morning, as he says, the action of the Indian council and many other things that I know nothing of. I have been endeavoring to give fairly what this committee acted upon, the Commissioner's letter, the law, the difference between the claims presented and the claims provided for by the law of 1876, the fact that they were pending in the Court of Claims with no obstacle in their way, with an act of Congress for the payment of judgments there obtained. That was the reason we struck them out. If subsequent facts have been developed that will make it proper to put them in here to take them away from the Committee it proper to put them in here, to take them away from the Committee on Claims, to make them exceptional to all other cases of this character—if the Senate see fit to do it, I have no sort of desire to prevent the men from getting their money; but as I was intrusted by the committee with the charge of this bill I have had to make the explanation of the grounds on which we acted.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky an-other question for my own information. Does the Senator from Kentucky believe that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction over any case in which trust funds for Indians are involved?

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt that it can take cognizance and has taken cognizance of some of these cases and I hear no complaint about

Mr. McDONALD. Will the Senator from Kentucky read the act of 1876† I should like to hear it again.

Mr. BECK. The act of 1876 is in these words:

Mr. BECK. The act of 1876 is in these words:
For payment of the expenses incurred by Silas H. Sweetland, special agent, sent by the Indian Department to make a per capita payment to the North Carolina Cherokees in 1869, to the following-named persons, to wit:
Samuel W. Davidson, $213.30;
Henry Smith, $354.66;
Henry Smith, $354.60;
J. M. J. Smith, $100;
James W. Terrell, $60;
A. McCallum, $100;
John Gray Bynum, $867.50;
J. D. Abbott, $175;
M. C. King, $212.03;
M. L. Brittain, $232;
Scroop Enloe, $125.35; Provided, That the amounts due J. D. Abbott, M. C.
King, M. L. Brittain, and Scroop Enloe be charged to the fund held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the North Carolina Cherokees.

That is all there is of it.

That is all there is of it.

Mr. McDONALD. It seems that after that act was passed when the question came before the accounting officers and an examination of these claims was made, it was found that some of them were claims for supplies furnished to the Indians, and not for expenses incurred by this Indian agent, and therefore the accounting offi-cers rejected them. It seems now that the parties came back, and have presented their case to the House of Representatives, and the House has incorporated in this bill a specific appropriation for this particular purpose, meeting the exact case, and, of course, settling, so far as the House is concerned, that these supplies had been furnished to the Indians, and in that form it comes to us.

I understand now that the Committee on Appropriations have recommended that this be stricken out. There is no evidence offered in support of that motion that these supplies were not furnished. We have certainly very strong inferential testimony offered by the passage of the original bill and by the passage of this present bill through the House of Representatives with this specific appropriation in it, that there were such supplies furnished.

But it is objected that these parties have undertaken to seek a remedy in the Court of Claims. Well, if their claim presented in the Court of Claims is drawn up in accordance with the items that are contained here, it is very evident that they cannot recover there. They cannot sue the Cherokee tribe of Indians in the Court of Claims, and as they state their case they have no claim against the United States upon any contract, express or implied. So that the only relief they can have, so far as I can see, is by doing now what there was an attempt to do in 1876, but which failed because the appropriation, although designed for them, was to meet a class of expenses that this did not properly belong to. That is all there seems to me to be in it, and with that view I shall certainly vote to sustain the House sec-

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I can see no occasion for the heated opposition of the Senator from Kentucky to the appropriation asked for in the bill as it came from the House. These identical moneys were appropriated for these specific persons in 1876, and the solemn act of Congress was defeated by an understrapper in the Interior Department. Let this bill pass as it came from the House, and make the appropriation over again, and, if it is not satisfactory, secure the service of some hireling understrapper again, and once more defeat the will of Congress. It seems to me that, in view of what has been done already, there ought to be no objection to passing any appropriation because the means of nullifying it are at the disposal of anybody who does not see fit to want to pay it. Under the same theory of government, if some clerk in the Secretary of State's office should think that the ministry to England ought to be abolished, all he would have to do would be to say that in his judgment the appropriation was improvidently made.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me one word?
Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.
Mr. BECK. I am a good deal astonished to hear the Senator from Kansas speak of the "heated opposition of the Senator from Ken-

Mr. INGALLS. Of course I meant nothing personal; I meant the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I understand that; but I rose for the purpose of saying that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Ransom] said to me that he was astonished at the somewhat rude manner in which I had that he was astonished at the somewhat rude manner in which I had treated him. I assure him and assure the Senate that I have made no heated opposition; and if I have said one word offensive to the Senator from North Carolina, I apologize here before the Senate and the country. I had not the slightest idea of doing any such thing.

Mr. RANSOM. Oh, no, Mr. President; my friend from Kentucky will pardon me. I simply meant to say to him that in his unconscious heat he had permitted himself to say that he would not permit me to make an issuado heat we callege to the roby into the say to make the say to the say to mit me to make an issue between him and my colleague, thereby intimit me to make an issue between him and my colleague, thereby intimating that I was trying to make such an issue. I simply desired to say that that was not intended by me.

Mr. BECK. I had not the slightest idea of it. I have perhaps a somewhat blunt way of telling things. I was endeavoring to state what the Commissioner had said. If the Senate think these are good claims and can help any poor fellow in North Carolina, I will go as far as anybody else. I only wanted to state the case here as the organ of the committee and present the ground on which we acted. If I have gone outside of my duty in doing that, I have made a mistake; that is all

Mr. ALLISON. I only want to say one word in relation to this mat-ir. The real trouble with these claims is that the accounting officers of the Treasury, I suppose, find no law and no regulation authorizing or justifying this expenditure, and therefore when the cases came before the accounting officers they rejected them.

I take it for granted that the Senators from North Carolina, when I take it for granted that the Senators from North Carolina, when they state that these supplies were furnished, state what is true. I know that in my State several of the citizens have furnished Indian supplies year after year. I have had one particular instance pending here since 1869. When I was a member of the other House I endeavored to get through a proposition for a constituent of mine, where actual supplies had been furnished to starving Indians, and I was met all the time by the statement, "These accounts have not passed the accounting officers; these supplies have not been estimated for; and it is the business of Congress in this appropriation bill to appropriate money in pursuance of law."

Mr. INGALLS. Did Congress ever authorize them to be paid?

Mr. ALLISON. I find here three, four, or five claims. They may be perfectly just. I take it for granted they are. We are passing claims here every day, but they come through the Claims Committee We are passing they take their chance with that great range of people who expend money in an indirect form.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question, as I have some little interest if the Claims Committee is to deal with these matters, for I have had some very disagreeable work imposed on me in reference to matters before that committee. Is it not true that the interest on the Indian trust funds is appropriated by the Indian appropriation bill, and if that be true, does it not follow that the same appropriation bill and the same committee must deal with the question of paying out moneys to be charged to those funds and not the Committee on Claims?

Mr. ALLISON. That may be so or may not be so.
Mr. HOAR. That question touches the point which I understood the Senator to be making.
Mr. ALLISON. It may be so or it may not be so. If the expenditure is regular under the order and direction of the Interior Department or the President, no specific appropriation is necessary the expenditure is irregular, as I have no doubt it was in this case, although perhaps necessary, the accounting officers of the Treasury do not allow it.

Now what I object to particularly in this provision is that we undertake to direct the accounting officers of the Treasury what they shall or shall not do. We hold these accounting officers of the Treasnry responsible as independent officers of this Government. The First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury are just as independent of the Secretary of the Treasury even as is the Secretary of the Interior, or any member of this body. Each Comptroller decides upon the law and the facts as they appear before him on the face of claims, and if they are not in pursuance of law he rejects them; but we say now whether or not these accounting officers shall audit and pay these claims; whether they are just or unjust, whether the amount is as claimed in this bill or otherwise, they shall be paid. Suppose it turns out when these claims are examined that instead of $220 to one of these individuals there only appears to be $140 due? Yet here is a mandatory provision in the statute saying that the man shall have $220, and his account shall be audited at $220.

I am willing to extend the best aid I can wherever I can to the adjustment of these accounts as I am for other accounts, but the Committee on Appropriations believed it was a bad precedent to under-take here in an appropriation bill, where an account is so irregular that the accounting officers will not audit and pay it, to direct them absolutely to pay the money whether it is just or unjust. That is the objection to this provision.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator yield for a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. BECK. Let us get through with this bill. Mr. BUTLER. If we can have a vote, I will withdraw the motion; if not, I shall insist on the motion to go into executive session.

Mr. VANCE. Let us vote.

Several SENATORS. Vote! Vote! Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am anxious to vote, but yet I beg the Senate to bear with me for a moment for I want to say a word about this amendment. I have seen no special heat here although there has been some earnestness, and if I understand this proposition aright, really I think there should be a little earnestness in regard

One of the standing committees of the Senate has made a report that there ought not be in this bill a mandatory, inflexible command to the officers having the custody of money to this effect—

And the proper accounting officer of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sums to the above-named persons.

From that report of a committee it is proposed that the Senate shall dissent. Now, let us suppose that the proper committee has had charge of this; let us suppose that in the most proper way of form and ceremony the report comes here. That is the most advantageous mode that the friends of paying this money can choose to consider it.

And then how does the case stand? Can it be possible that a majority of the Senate, with a favorable and not unfavorable report from confessedly the proper committee, would adopt this as legislation if in truth the case is pending in the Court of Claims? Is it possible I say in any case, I care not how clear it may be, where claimants have gone into the Court of Claims and are now in act of litigating there, that the Senate, even on the favorable report of one of its committees, would interpose suddenly, arrest the proceedings in the court, clutch the claim and snatch it away and bring it here and direct in language which denies all discretion to the accounting officers, that absolutely, hit or miss, no matter what the facts might turn out to be, not only should the claim be paid, but paid with a certain prescribed beforehand measure of damages?

Mr. President, during the years it has been my fortune to serve in this body, I have seen a good many things done which would have seemed to me extraordinary had they not been done by the Senate; but unless my memory sadly fail me, I never saw done by the Senate the equivalent of such an act.

But now, take the case where one of years.

But now, take the case where one of your committees comes and re-ports adversely, reports that you ought not to oust the Court of Claims of its jurisdiction; then would a majority of the Senate upon any state of fact override the committee and by main force say nevertheless we will take from the Court of Claims its jurisdiction and proceed to act finally upon it in a moment now

Mr. President, the case as I have stated it is not exactly the case efore us. Why? Because a Senator says he is told that in fact the claim is not pending in the Court of Claims, and the Senator from Kentucky produces official evidence that it is. Now, without knowledge even of how that fact may be, upon a mere challenge of the statement that the Court of Claims has jurisdiction, will the Senate proceed to decide that question which it knows nothing about and to decide it past recall? Formerly the Court of Claims sat in this building, and at the moment I had forgotten that it was removed from here. We might have sent down and learned. Now it holds its sessions and its records are at the other end of the city, and there is no mode of ascertaining certainly how this is, and therefore I have as much right to assume and as much reason to assume that the case is pending in the court as I could have to assume that it is not. In ignorance of how that fact may be, is it possible that we are to proceed to overrule the committee and to adjudge these claims in the language which I have read?

Mr. President, one other word and I have done. I understand from the Senator from Kentucky, and I have heard nobody deny it—indeed I believe the Senator from Iowa made the same statement-that in a former year, namely, in 1876, these same claimants came into this very forum and made a statement on which their claims were classified as of a nature radically different from that found here, and being denominated as claims of that description they were allowed and put in a bill. When the accounting officer came to pass upon them, in place of doing as I understand what the Senator from Kansas has said, declaring arbitrarily that he would refuse to allow claims which he had been directed to consider, he found that the claims presented by these very claimants were unsupported, unsubstantiated as claims of that nature. Now, for the first time, so far as we have heard, come these same claimants with the same amount of money asked, not presented upon the same grounds or as claims of the same description, but presented as claims of a wholly different description, and they find their way through the House, whether under the previous question or not I have no right to know or no right to say here, and then my honorable friend from Indiana says, and the argument is not en-tirely original with him, that the fact that the House has allowed these claims to find their way into the bill is of itself a strong argument and a strong inducement and inferential evidence on which we ought to do it.

I once heard a distinguished citizen affirm that the fact that the President of the United States nominated a man for office was of itself evidence that he ought to be confirmed, and that when the Senate came to act upon the nomination it ought to rest very largely ate came to act upon the nomination it ought to rest very largely upon the fact that the President had made the nomination. Here is the companion picture of that argument. When the House sends us a piece of legislation, which it is our business to scrutinize and vote negatively upon if we do not believe in it, the Senator from Indiana says the fact that the bill is here being one of the bills which, though not by the Constitution yet by practice always originate in the House, the fact that we find something in that bill is of itself an inference, a presumption, an argument of some kind which it requires pretty strong evidence to overthrow. For one I do not agree to that. I think this stands precisely as it would if the bill had originated in the Senate. When a committee of the Senate has examined it and When a committee of the Senate has examined it and the Senate. has reported that it is unsafe legislation, it seems to me that the pre-sumption is pretty thoroughly rebutted. So I believe this matter ought to stand to take its place, if ever, in some other bill when the Senators who have investigated that can find out certainly whether the Court of Claims has jurisdiction, and whether there be any impediment in the way of that court proceeding.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word by way of correction of the Senator from New York.

In the first place, it has never been asserted on this floor that all these claims were not before the Court of Claims. I stated, in response to the Senator from Kentucky, that two of them were Court of Claims and two were not before the Court of Claims, and that information was derived precisely from the same source which the Senator from Kentucky had, to wit, the officials of the Departments, of the Treasury Department and the Interior Department.

The other correction I desire to make is that it is not true in fact that these parties attempted to practice a fraud on the Congress of the United States by putting in their claims as being of one class when in fact they were of another. I suppose that originated in a mistake of the draughtsman of the act, because the original claims were accompanied by the orders themselves, which set forth that they were for supplies furnished to the Cherokee Indians, and if any mistake was made it was made by the draughtsman. Every one of these claimants is known to me, and known to be an upright and respectable man.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the vote is taken I wish to state briefly my reasons for sustaining the committee to strike out these claims.

They belong to a class of claims which have always heretofore been investigated and determined by the Committee on Appropriations upon the sundry civil bill, where they take all such claims, examine the evidence upon which they rely to sustain them, and if found correct and the amounts are properly audited, allow them to be paid.

This committee has never on the general Indian appropriation bill undertaken to determine the claims of individuals. A large number of such claims were presented and referred to us. Several cases are of such claims were presented and referred to us. Several cases are now in my possession, probably aggregating, I will not undertake to say how many, but one hundred and fifty, I should judge. We refused to put any of them in this bill for that reason.

These claims have never been investigated as I understand; they certainly were not by our committee, and whether they were by the House committee or not I cannot say. I presume from the fact that they were incorporated in the bill, not on the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee of the House, but simply by motion, that a similar procedure was had there as is now proposed to be instituted

I want to call attention also to another fact. At the same session, 1876, when the appropriation was made for the payment of these claims, there were eleven claims presented and included in that appropriation bill, of which seven were paid and these four rejected upon the ground which has been set forth.

It seems to me that these reasons suffice to induce us to reject them from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one other reserved amendment, which will now be read.

The SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is in section 3, line 4, to strike out "six" before the word "weeks" and insert "three."

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three" and inserting "four."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The only point is whether the advertisements for supplies shall be published for three weeks or four weeks. It is a matter of very little consequence.

Mr. WITHERS. The effect of increasing the delay is to prevent obtaining supplies in season.

Mr. INGALLS. It increases competition.

Mr. WITHERS. We are informed that three weeks is the utmost possible limit that can be allowed. The object is to secure the delivery of supplies within the proper time. That is all I have to say about it.

The PRESIDING-OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment which I offered, but which was ruled out, would have made this amendment unnecessary. Now, I think if the Department would advertise for supplies, to be opened at the points where supplies are to be found, a large portion of the neces-sity for it would disappear; but latterly the policy has grown up of opening all bids in New York, and so the men who furnish beef and flour and the pork and wheat and harley and corn all have to condown flour and the pork and wheat and barley and corn all have to go down there in order to bid. If these bids were opened where these sup-plies which are to be furnished come from, in the West, and whence only they can be furnished, a week less time would answer the pur-

After the vote of the Senate to retain the ten advisory commissioners, a board who persist in doing this business, it seems to me that it will be very easy to open these bids in Chicago, Saint Louis, and Kansas City, having on hand one member of this commission at each place for the purpose. But it is now the theory of this Department that the bids are all to be opened at New York, notwithstauding the source of supply is a thousand or fifteen hundred miles from there in many cases. I think for the purpose of the protection of the Government, for the purpose of giving small dealers a chance to compete for the furnishing of these supplies, there ought to be at least four weeks' time given by advertisement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several Senators. Regular order.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We have another appropriation bill.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us get the regular order first. I call for the regular order, which is the election case, I believe.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the case of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Kellogg.] The question is on the passage of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Florting. Elections.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that as I do not wish to antagonize the Appropriations Committee, I agreed that the resolutions should be laid aside temporarily so that when the appropriation bills are through I may call them up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves that the resolutions be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir. One moment. The Senator from Delaware does not move that, because the rules do not permit him to move that. If the Senator from Connecticut or any Senator will ask unanimous consent that the regular order be laid aside temporarily subject to call I will not object.

Mr. EATON. For my part I am not calling for anything.

Mr. CONKLING. All I mean is that it cannot be done by a motion to lay aside temporarily.

Mr. EATON. I desire to get up one appropriation bill, which is ready. I also have a report from a committee of conference on another appropriation bill; but of course these can wait the convenience of gentlemen

Mr. ALLISON. I hope unanimous consent will be given to the Senator from Connecticut to present his report.

Mr. CONKLING. Undoubtedly it will, but let us understand ourselves

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. The Chair understood that the Senator from Delaware asked consent to lay aside the question of privilege informally in order to take up an appropriation bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I wish to say that I do not object to that if it means that when this appropriation bill is disposed of the Kellogg case is the regular order and subject to call all the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands, if con-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands, if consent is given.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The other day, when the Indian appropriation bill was called up, I stated that I did not wish the regular order displaced, and the Chair put the question distinctly if there was any objection to laying it aside temporarily subject to call. I should have so stated before if the Senator from Vermont had not himself called up the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. He having done that, I thought it necessary, as he had called the question up again, to make the same request which I did the other day when the Indian appropriation bill was taken up, that it should not lose its place but only be laid aside temporarily informally for any appropriation bill. appropriation bill.

That was the only object I had on this occasion, and I should not have made one reference to it had it not been called up by the Sen-have made one reference to it had it not been called up by the Senator from Vermont, because I had the ruling of the Chair the other day that it would be subject to my call whenever I saw proper to call it up, he having put the question then to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not called up anything. I have called for the regular order and the Chair has laid what he understands to be the regular order before the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. And it was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Andit was read. I have not even read anything. I merely called for the regular order in order to find out what the pending question before the Senate is. Now having found that out, if the Senator from Connecticut has an appropriation bill that he desires to proceed with, I am entirely willing to lay this aside temposires to proceed with, I am entirely willing to lay this aside temporarily to be taken up again as the regular order at the end of his appropriation bill, whether that end comes to-day or to-morrow. I only want it understood that this question of privilege shall be the regular order before the Senate to be called for when we finish the appropriation bill, whether it happens to be to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. EATON. I so understand, and I want unanimous consent to take up certain matters, not to set aside or lay aside the order. I want to see the end of that business as much as anybody else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, go ahead then with that understanding.
Mr. EATON. I first have a report of a conference committee to

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Senate can at any time take up any order a majority wish.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand what the Senator from Vermont is particularly talking about; but he is very anxious about the Kellogg case, and I wonder why he is so anxious to have it before the Senate. My friend from Delaware I believe has charge of it, but the Senate. My friend from Delaware 1 believe has charge of it, but the Senator from Vermont is apparently sharing it with him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon of the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Delaware both. I had the impression that when matters were before the Senate, it was perfectly lawful unless it was an inquiry into the Treasury, that any Senator even on this side of the Chamber might be allowed to know what the regular order was. I know that when it comes to an inquiry into the scratches on the books of the Treasury, that is a special and patented trade-mark privilege that belongs to my friend from West Virginia; but as to the general run of the business, I suppose that even a Senator in the minority may inquire and call for the regular order. Now, to dismiss that, I understand that this is laid aside informally and that it is a subject of call, whether an adjournment happens or not.

Am I right in that?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. EATON submitted the following report:

Mr. EATON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Honses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13 and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 11, and 17, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the sum proposed insert '$100,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the word "and," proposed to be inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 16, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:
"Strike out 'four' and insert 'three.'"
And the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. McMAHON,
T. R. COBB,
JAMES MONROE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to have this explained so that we can understand what the amendments are that have been thus disposed of.

Mr. EATON. I will state, that the Senate may fully understand the provisions of the bill now as compared with what it was before it went to the committee of conference, that the total of the bill as it passed the Senate was $8,620,087.82; the total of the bill as agreed to in the conference is $8,382,587.82, making a reduction of $237,500.

The amount of reduction is, first, on public printing, $50,000; next, for the State, War, and Navy Department building, $186,500; next, for extra clerk hire in the State Department, $1,000, making $237,500.

The first item where there was a difference of opinion between the Senate and the House was in line 11, page 1, where the bill as it came from the House appropriated for public printing, &c., $400,000. One hundred thousand dollars the Senate will remember was immediately appropriated in a special bill for that purpose, and therefore we struck out in the Senate the word "four" and inserted "three." so that it should read $300,000 instead of $400,000. Upon examination the House discovered that there had been also $50,000 appropriated in addition; and therefore the conference committee agreed that the amount shall be $250,000 instead of $400,000, as the House first passed the bill, or $300,000 as the Senate amended it.

The next item was an amendment of the Senate "for continuing the construction of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments building, $286,500." I ought to say that the Senate Committee on Appropriations, I believe unanimously—certainly the subcommittee were unanimous, and I was one of that sub-committee—thought that the full amount of $286,500 ought to be appropriated. That was three or four weeks ago when the matter first came before us. The lapse of time has made the full amount unnecessary to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator a question at this point?

I had supposed that the real necessity for this appropriation was in order to enable the purchase of material for going on with the work next season; that unless they made arrangements soon for the material which would be required for the construction of the building next year it would be too late to wait for the regular appropriation

Mr. EATON. It was not entirely that. My judgment was at the time that there should be a full appropriation; and one reason was that we were informed there could not be contracts entered into for iron, for instance, which formed a particular part and a very large part of the material entering into the construction of the building; that such was the condition of the iron interest of the country that unless they had all this long time to make their contracts they could not do it. Things have changed within the last three weeks very unless they had all this long time to make their contracts they could not do it. Things have changed within the last three weeks very much in that particular.

Mr. MORRILL. But much the most valuable and expensive part is the granite that is required, and unless time is given that cannot be quarried and worked into the proper shape for the building.

Mr. EATON. If my friend from Vermont will hear my explanation of this bill he will find that he and myself, whatever result we may arrive at, do not disagree particularly in regard to the principle of this matter. We came to an agreement in conference. The House were very desirous not to give a dollar. We were very desirous that there should be a large amount given. We have agreed to the sum of $100,000. I will not say that I am ashamed to make a report of this character; that is going a little further than I like to go; but I this character; that is going a little further than I like to go; but I regret that I have felt myself compelled to make an arrangement of this character. I should have preferred a larger sum, but on the whole, taking everything into consideration, the committee thought, all of us, that we had better accede to the $100,000 appropriation, and accordingly we have done so. I hope that the Department will be able to go on successfully with that amount at this late day. That is all that the committee have to report in regard to that matter.

The next item was amendment number 9:

To pay for illustrations for the Official Gazette, $3,299.22.

The House have receded and concur with the Senate in that amendment.

The next is amendments numbered 10 and 11:

For the expenses of the commission on the codification of existing laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, to be used for the completion of such codification, the sum of $15,000.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out the words "to be used" and insert the word "and." We have agreed to strike out both "to be used" and "and;" so that the clause will read:

For the expenses of the commission on the codification of existing laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, for the completion of such codification, the sum of $15,000.

The House also recede and concur with our amendment adding this-

Provided, That said commission shall complete the same and make their final report on or before February 1, 1881.

The next is number 13, in regard to the Money-Order Office. The item read:

For seven additional clerks for service in the Money-Order Office, namely, two of class 4, one of class 3, one of class 2, and three at $500 per annum, from the passage of this act.

The Senate struck out "from the passage of this act" and inserted "from April 1, 1880." We have receded from our amendment and placed back the language of the House bill, so that it will read "from the passage of this act." The House was right in that matter, and we concluded to accept their action.

The next is the sixteenth amendment, "for extra clerk hire and copying, $2,000," in the Department of State. The amendment was to insert "four" instead of "two." We have compromised on $3,000; so that it will read:

For extra clerk hire and copying, $3,000.

The two Houses differed with regard to the amount of payment which should be made to the gentleman who is revising the Consular Regulations. The recommendation of the State Department was $3,000. The Senate committee unanimously thought that that was a proper sum. The House inserted $2,000 originally, and we changed it to $3,000. The House concur with our action in allowing the $3,000. That is the last of the amendments which were the subject of differ-

The report was concurred in.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PENDLETON. I would ask the Senator from New York to withdraw the motion to adjourn in order that we may have an executive session for a moment. There are some nominations that had better be referred. If the Senate does not want to go on with other matters they at least can be referred this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withdraw the motion?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senate is ready to enter after five o'clock upon business, I think we ought to go on with the appropriation bill which the Senator from Connecticut has in charge. At the suggestion of a number of Senators, inasmuch as five o'clock has been reached, I thought it was a convenient time to adjourn. Therefore I have submitted the motion, and I will take the sense of the Senate. If the Senate does not want to adjourn, it will say so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate joint resolution No. 100, to print extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1879, Mr. WILson, Mr. Singleton of Mississippi, and Mr. HAYES.

APPOINTMENT TO COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also announced the appointment of Mr. Humphrey to serve as a member of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River in the place of Mr. Caswell.

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE SENATE. Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported joint resolution (H. R. No. 296) making appropriations for the contingent fund of the Senate; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, appropriates the sum of $15,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for contingent expenses of the Senate of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, to be credited to miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor.

Mr. ATKINS. I will remark on it, Mr. Speaker, that the warrants for the attendance of witnesses, &c., are being hawked on the streets of the District at a discount, and rather ruinous discount at that, and it is necessary to pass this resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLOMON MORRIS.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for the purpose of present consideration, a bill (S. No. 1100) for the relief of Solomon Morris.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Solomon Morris, of Company A, Thirty-eighth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from the 30th day of July, 1863, to the 7th day of February, A. D. 1865, deducting the pay he received as sergeant of infantry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ATKINS. Let the bill be again read; we did not hear it.
Mr. STEVENSON. I understand there was a unanimous report in the Senate.

the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. How much is involved?

Mr. STEVENSON. A small amount. It is really paying him for services actually rendered.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, that bill ought to go to a committee in this Hopes.

this House.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

That the bill for the relief of Solomon Morris, late sergeant Company A, Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, for pay and allowances as second lieutenant of said company and regiment, is based upon the facts as follows:

Your committee have carefully considered the evidence and find that the claims of said Solomon Morris, for pay and allowances from July 30, 1863, less the pay of a sergeant already received to the date of his muster out, March, 1865, is based upon equitable grounds, he having performed the duties of second lieutenant to the date of his capture at the battle of Chickamanga, September 20, 1863. He was not permitted to go to a mustering-officer on account of the Army being under orders. The failure to be mustered was not caused by any neglect or omission on his part. He is fairly and legally entitled to the relief sought by the bill, and therefore recommend its passage.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to ask whether that bill has been considered by any committee of this House?

Mr. STEVENSON. It has not; it was taken from the Speaker's table on my motion. It was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate, passed that body, and came to this House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope we are not going to pass Senate bills in this way without reference.

Mr. BREWER. Was this man ever commissioned as a second lieutenant?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not know I am able to state that fact. Mr. BREWER. Many men served as second lieutenants who were not commissioned.

Mr. STEVENSON. I presume from the statement and report that he was commissioned as second lieutenant. He did duty as second

Mr. BREWER. Many men did duty as second lieutenants who were not commissioned.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, that bill really is liable to the point of order; that making an appropriation it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill was read at length when the Chair asked for objection, and, there being no objection, the bill was read a third time, and the pending question is on its passage. If the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee had been raised in time it would have been a good one.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it in order to refer the bill to the Committee on Military Accions

Military Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.
Mr. BLOUNT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was read the third time, with a view to moving its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 44.
So (no further count being demanded) the motion was disagreed to.

The bill was passed.

Mr. STEVENSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRE-EMPTION SETTLERS IN DAKOTA TERRITORY.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3948) for the relief of certain preemption settlers in Dakota Territory, and that the same be considered at this time.

Mr. ATKINS. I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the bill to be read, after which he will ask for objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object to its present consideration.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I should like to inquire what the regular order is this morning

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the morning

Mr. COX. Then I demand the regular order.
Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to make a report this morning from the conference committee with reference to a bill which is of importance to pass at this time.

Mr. COX. I will withdraw the demand for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he must alternate in his recognition between the two sides of the House, and if the gentleman withdraws the demand for the regular order, the Chair must understand that the withdrawal is final and not with a view to the recognition of any withdrawal is final, and not with a view to the recognition of any other gentleman.

Mr. COX. Then I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a memorial of the Washington Monument Association, in relation to the completion of the Washington Monument. It was my intention to have asked on yesterday, if I had obtained the floor, that the same should be printed in the RECORD of this morning; but I see that it has been printed in the proceedings of the Senate of yesterday, and I shall therefore merely ask that the memorial be laid on the table, and that

2,000 copies be printed for the use of the House, 1,000 copies having been printed already for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Delaware that under the law the number of copies he asks to have printed would require the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I ask unanimous consent of the House for the printing of the number asked for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Delaware that under the law regulating public printing any matter which costs over $500 must go to the Committee on Printing. Nineteen hundred copies is the usual number printed, if the gentleman contents himself with that.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Then I ask that this memorial be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSELS.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report a substitute for House bill No. 4768 and ask that the same be taken up for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitute will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6023) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of vessels under certain circumstances.

name of vessels under certain circumstances.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to permit the owner or owners of any vessel duly enrolled and found seaworthy and free from debt, to change the name of the same, when, in his opinion, there shall be sufficient cause for so doing.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish such rules and regulations, and procure such evidence as to the age, condition, when built, and pecuniary liability of the vessel, as he may deem necessary to prevent injury to public or private interests; and when permission is granted by the Secretary he shall cause the order for the change of name to be published at least in four issues in some daily or weekly paper at the place of register. And the cost of procuring evidence and advertising the change of name to be paid by the person or persons desiring such change of name.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. COX. I hope that the bill will be passed without much debate.

It is a general bill, and it will enable us to get rid of all of these particular bills for this purpose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McMAHON. I rise to make a conference report on the immediate deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report. The Clerk read as follows:

The clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 49:4) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 13 and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 11, and 17, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, striking out the word "and" proposed to be inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out "four" and insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the accompanying statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

The effect of the foregoing report, if adopted, will be as follows:

1. The appropriation for the Public Printer's office will be $250,000. With the $100,000 heretofore appropriated, and the $50,000 on the star-route deficiency bill, (passed since the introduction of this bill.) the total deficiency allowed will be $400,000—the amount originally agreed upon by the House in this bill.

2. The sixth amendment of the Senate appropriating money to continue the construction of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Departments will be reduced from $286,500 to $100,000.

3. The ninth amendment of the Senate appropriating $3,299.22 for the Official Gazette issued by the Patent Office will be agreed to.

4. The money appropriated for the commission on the codification of the land laws will be confined to the completion of such codification; the final report to be made February 1, 1881, as amended in the Senate. (See Senate amendments Nos. 10 and 11.)

5. The Senate receding from amendments 13 and 14, the text of the bill will remain as passed by the House providing for seven additional clerks in the Money-Order Office. There was no substantial disagreement at any time.

6. The appropriation for extra clerk hire and copying in the State Department will be $3.000. The House allowed $2.000; the Senate increased it to $4.000. The Senate amendment is number 16.

7. By the receding of the House from its disagreement to the seventeenth amendment of the Senate, the Secretary of State will be authorized to pay A. B. Wood, Chief of the Consular Bureau, $3.000 for his Revised Consular Regulations. The House allowed $2.000; the Senate increased it to $3.000—the amount originally appropriated for the purpose.

ference was adopted.

Mr. McMAHON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTSMOUTH, OHIO, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the city of Portsmouth, in the State of Ohio, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery within the collection district of New Orleans, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; and all the privileges and facilities afforded by the act of Congress of the 2d of March, A. D. 1831, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Saint Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places," shall be extended to said port. MINING DÉBRIS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 5636) for the appointment of a commission to investigate the $d\delta bris$ question in the State of California be made a special order for Thursday next after the morning hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must insist that the appropriation bills shall not be interfered with.

Mr. BERRY. I do not ask that this shall take precedence of appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California makes the request that this bill be made a special order, subject to the rights of appropriation and revenue bills, for Thursday next, immediately after the morning hour.

Mr. BROWNE. I do not understand what the bill is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will give the gentleman

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will give the gentleman from Indiana an opportunity to understand whenever the House shall come to order. Gentlemen will be seated and conversation suspended.

Mr. BERRY. The object of this bill is to provide for the appointment of a commission to investigate what is known in the State of California as the mining débris question. By the washing down of our mountains in the process of gold mining the débris thereof is filling up our rivers and burying our lands. It is proposed that a commission of engineers shall be appointed by the War Department and by the Coast Survey Department to visit that State and see if there by the Coast Survey Department to visit that State and see if there can be any means devised by which that evil can be prevented, so that our navigable waters may be preserved. There has litigation sprung up in California out of this question, and there is an effort being made to enjoin the process of hydraulic mining. Mining is one of the great interests of that State, and this evil is becoming such that our rivers will be destroyed unless some remedy be provided. The bay of San Francisco itself eventually will be destroyed.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the gentleman in his request reserved the rights of appropriation and revenue bills?

Mr. BERRY. I have.

Mr. WARNER. This is an important matter, and the gentleman's

Mr. BERRY. Thursday, one week from to-day.
There being no objection, the bill was made a special order for Thursday next, after the morning hour, subject to the rights of revenue and appropriation bills.

WILLIAM DADDS.

Mr. HENKLE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1895) with the accompanying adverse report by the Committee on War Claims be taken from the table and placed on the Private Calendar. Mr. SIMONTON. What is the title of the bill f Mr. HENKLE. It is a bill for the relief of William Dadds, a citizen of Annapolis, Maryland. The Committee on War Claims made an adverse report. I was not present at the time that report was made. I ask that the bill and adverse report be taken from the table and placed on the Private Calendar. and placed on the Private Calendar.

The bill was read. It provides that the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army shall be suspended for the purpose of this act, and only so far as they affect Mark Walker, late first lieutenant United States Infantry; and that the President can, if he shall desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth United States Infantry, to the same grade and rank of first lieutenant held by him on May 30, 1878; and that the said Walker shall thereupon be placed upon the retired list of the Army, provided that the same shall be recommended by the retiring board; and provided further, that the acceptance of the provisions of this act shall be a waiver of all rights present and prospective under the pension laws of the United States.

Mr. O'NEILL. There is upon the Speaker's table a Senate bill, No. 2, on the same subject and in the same words. I ask that that bill be taken up for consideration in place of the House bill.

Mr. COX. Is this the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] asks unanimous consent that the House now proceed to consider Senate bill No. 2, for the relief of Mark Walker. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SIMONTON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. O'NEILL. This is entirely an unobjectionable bill, and is unanimously recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] Mr. MONEY. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] to withdraw his motion for the present, in order that I may move to take from the Speaker's table the bill of the House to establish postroutes, returned from the Senate with amendments. 7 The motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,
Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill. ceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC.11. That section 3330 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out the words "in quantities of not less than one thousand gallons," in the third line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "or packages." And by striking out after the word "manner," in the twenty-second line thereof, the following: "And for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps, ten cents for each package so stamped shall be paid to the collector on making the entry for such transportation," and insert in lieu thereof the words "as other stamps."

The Committee on Ways and Means recommended an amendment, to strike out the following:

And by striking out after the word "manner," in the twenty-second line thereof, the following: "And for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps, ten cents for each package so stamped shall be paid to the collector on making the entry for such transportation," and insert in lieu thereof the words "as other stamps."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read the following:

The Cierk read the following:

Sec. 12. That section 12 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by striking out after the word "liquors," in the sixth line thereof, the words "and no cask or other package, such as is hereinbefore mentioned, in which distilled spirits, wines, or malt liquors have been imported, shall be used to contain domestic distilled spirits, under penalty of the forfeiture of such reused cask or package and the contents thereof."

Sec. 13. That section 13 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by striking out after the word "sale," in the eighth line thereof, the following: "Or shall, for such purpose, manufacture, use, or have in possession any cask or package made in initation of, or intended to be in the similitude of, such imported casks or packages, with any imitation of such marks or bands thereon," and by striking out after the word "sold," in the fifteenth line thereof, the word "manufactured."

Mr. CONGER. There is a typographical error in the section 13 as read. In the clause "with any imitation of such marks or bands thereon" the word "bands" should be "brands."

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 14. That section 20 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879, be amended by striking out all after the number of said section and substituting therefor the following:

"That under such regulations and requirements as to stamps, bonds, and other security as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, any manufacturer of medicines, preparations, compositions, perfumeries, cosmetics, cordials, and other liquors, for export, manufacturing the same in a duly constituted manufacturing warehouse, shall be authorized to withdraw, in original packages, from any distillery warehouse, so much distilled spirits as he may require for the said purpose, without the payment of the internal-revenue tax thereon."

SEC. 15. That section 3433 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out the words "except distilled spirits," in the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh lines thereof.

The Committee on Ways and Means recommended that section 15 be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Ways and Means further recommend that the following be inserted as a new section:

Sec. 15. That where spirits are withdrawn from distillery warehouses for transfer to manufacturing warehouses, under the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful, under such rules and regulations and limitations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for an allowance to be made for leakage or loss by any unavoidable accident, and without any fraud or negligence of the distiller, owner, exporter, carrier, or their agents we employes, occurring during transportation from a distillery warehouse to a manufacturing warehouse.

Mr. CARLISLE. That amendment was prepared and sent to the Committee on Ways and Means by the Secretary of the Treasury from the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the following:

Mr. CARLISLE. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. MONEY. I now ask consent that House bill No. 5524, to establish post-routes, returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Senaker's table for consideration at this time. I will state that my object is to move a concurrence in the Senate amendments. They contain no legislation whatever; merely establish additional post-routes.

Mr. MONEY. I move that the amendments of the Senate be consurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

The Committee on Ways and Means recommended an amendment to the section, to add the following:

Provided, That all export stamps issued to collectors shall be charged to then as representing the value of ten cents for each stamp, and they shall collect the amount due for such stamps at the rate of ten cents for each stamp issued in such manner and at such time as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and the Commissioner may, in his discretion, make assessment therefor

Mr. CONGER. I desire to move to strike out this section. Mr. CARLISLE. Before the gentleman makes that motion, I ask that a vote be taken on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CONGER. That is right, to perfect the section before the question is taken on the motion to strike out. If the section is to stand, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment of the Committee on Ways and Means was agreed

Mr. CONGER. I now move to strike out the section as amended. I do not care to discuss the matter, but I offer the amendment in pursuance of what I said the other day; and if I can be allowed to have a vote on it in the House that is all I desire.

Mr. CARLISLE. I agreed with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] yesterday afternoon, when it was apparent that otherwise the point of order would be made that there was no quorum in the committee, that he should have an opportunity in the House to move and have votes upon three amendments which he indicated, and this is one of them. If the gentleman is content to have a vote on his amendment in committee to stand as rejecting the amendment, I am willing to allow him an opportunity in the House to offer the amendment and have a vote upon it.

Mr. CONGER. I am willing that my amendment shall be regarded as rejected with the understanding that I may offer the same amendment in the House and have a vote upon it.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is the understanding.

The amendment of Mr. CONGER was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Whenever the owner of any distilled spirits shall desire to withdraw the same from the distillery warehouse he may file with the collector a notice giving a description of the packages to be withdrawn, and request that the distilled spirits be reganged; and thereupon the collector shall direct the gauger to regange the same, and mark upon each package so reganged the number of gauge or wine gallons and proof-gallons therein contained. If upon such regauging it shall appear that there has been a loss of distilled spirits from any cask or package, without the fault or negligence of the distiller or owner thereof, taxes shall be collected only on the quantity of distilled spirits contained in each cask or package at the time of the withdrawal thereof from the distillery warehouse: Provided, Nowever, That the allowance which shall be made for such loss of spirits as aforesaid shall not exceed one gallon for two months, or part thereof, one and one-half gallons for there and four months, two gallons for five and six months, two and one-half gallons for seven and eight months, five gallons for nine and ten months, three and one-half gallons for eleven and twelve months, four gallons for thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen months, four and one-half gallons for twenty-five, twenty-we, twenty-three, and twenty-four months, six gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven months, six and one-half gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven gallons for thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three months, and seven and one-half gallons for thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three months, and seven and one-half gallons for thirty-four thirty-four, thirty-five, and thirty-three months, and seven and one-half gallons for thirty-four continuity. Provided, also, That the foregoing allowance of loss shall apply only to casks or packages of less capacity than forty gallons.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means to section 18 was read, as follows:

In line 12 strike out the word "each" and insert the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I desire to move to strike out this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The second amendment proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means to the section has not been read. These amendments designed to perfect the bill will be voted upon before the question is taken on striking out the section.

The second amendment proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means to section 18 was read, as follows.

Add to the section he following:

And provided further. That the proof of such distilled spirits shall not in any case be computed at the time of withdrawal at less than the proof at which said spirits were entered into the warehouse; and in case it shall appear upon such regauging that the proof of such spirits is less than when entered, no allowance or deduction shall be made, but the distiller or owner shall pay the tax upon the original quantity.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before the gentleman submits his motion to strike out the section, I desire that we may be allowed to perfect it. The amendment just read was recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means at my suggestion. Subsequent reflection, however, has satisfied me that it ought not to be adopted, and that in a good many cases, especially as regards high wines and alcohol manufactured in the Western States it would work injustice. The amendment as now pending absolutely excludes the manufacturers of spirits from any participation in the benefits of the proposed allowance, provided the proof of the spirits has been diminished to the least extent in the ware-house. Large quantities of spirits manufactured in the West are put into the warehouses at 65, 70, or 80 per cent. above proof. Now, if such spirits should be stored in a warehouse not entirely dry, my understanding from gentlemen engaged in the business is that there may be a small diminution in the proof when the spirits are withdrawn. Mr. CARLISLE. Before the gentleman submits his motion to strike

Hence, in quite a large number of cases the amendment might work injustice to the owners of that kind of spirits.

I have prepared a substitute for this amendment, which I think will accomplish the whole purpose that was intended by the original amendment, and at the same time will do no injustice to any class of distillers. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I propose as a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the proof of such distilled spirits shall not in any case be computed at the time of withdrawal at less than 100 per cent.; and in case it shall appear upon such regauging that the proof of such spirits is less than 100 per cent., the distiller or owner shall pay the tax upon the wine-gallons.

per cent, the distiller or owner shall pay the tax upon the wine-gallons.

Mr. CARLISLE. I think this will accomplish the purpose which the committee had in view and at the same time will, as I have said, avoid doing injustice to the manufacturers of these high wines and alcoholic spirits in the Western States. These spirits when put in a damp warehouse lose a small percentage of proof by reason of the fact that they absorb the moisture from the surrounding atmosphere.

Mr. CONGER. The theory upon which this amendment is offered, I presume, is to prevent the clandestine withdrawal of high-proof spirits and filling the barrels with an inferior proof. But under the amendment the distillers have as a range for fraud, if they desire to resort to it, the difference between 100 and 188, alcohol proof. I think the provision in this form is much worse than the other, which provided that there should be no allowance for reduction below the proof at which the liquor was gauged when put into the warehouse.

provided that there should be no allowance for reduction below the proof at which the liquor was gauged when put into the warehouse. It seems to me that the amendment of the gentleman gives opportunity for fraud which would not exist under the amendment of the committee. I think it is a very dangerous amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. There is no doubt that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is correct in supposing that if the distiller or owner of high-proof spirits or alcohols could clandestinely have access to the warehouse, abstract the spirits from the barrel and put in water he might accomplish a fraud much the Government, provided water, he might accomplish a fraud upon the Government, provided water, he might accomplish a traud upon the Government, provided he did not reduce the proof below 100 per cent. But I submit to the gentleman that under the operation of the present bill, if passed, the spirits will be gauged by a Government officer when placed in the bonded warehouse and gauged likewise when withdrawn. Now, if a case such as that suggested by the gentleman from Michigan should actually occur, any Government officer would instantly know that a fraud had been committed on the revenue, because he would know as a matter of absolute fact within his own experience that such a radical change in the composition of the spirits as that suggested by the gentleman could not occur by any natural process, and that there must have been a fraudulent manipulation of the spirits in the bonded warehouse.

Besides, it would be wholly impossible for the owner of the distillery to have access to the bonded warehouse for the purpose of at-tempting to commit this fraud on the revenue, without the actual knowledge and participation both of the Government storekeeper and the Government gauger.

Mr. CONGER. And if that collusion did exist it would be carried under this law to an unlimited extent.

Mr. CARLISLE. Not to an unlimited extent, because the bill prescribes a maximum allowance under all circumstances. But why may not frauds be committed under the present law?

Mr. CONGER. Not so much under the present law.

Mr. CARLISLE. Perhaps so much would not be gained under the present law as could be gained under this bill, if we assume that the Government officers are to be in collusion with the distiller or owner

Mr. CONGER. The present law does not allow leakage.
Mr. CARLISLE. No; the present law does not allow fer leakage or evaporation, and that is just what constitutes the temptation to commit fraud under the present law, as I think I could show very clearly, and will perhaps endeavor to show if we have discussion on the main provision of this section.

The points I wish to submit to the committee are these: that, in the first place, a fraud cannot be committed on the spirits in the bonded warehouse without the knowledge and actual participation of the Government officers, who at all times carry the keys to the buildings and absolutely exclude the owner even from examination of his property except in their presence; and, in the second place, that if there should be collusion by which such a process could be conducted, as the gentleman from Michigan supposes, the fraud would be patent on the face of the spirits the moment they were withdrawn from the warehouse, because every man engaged in the business and every Government officer who might see the spirits would certainly know that no such result could have been produced except by artificial I care nothing about the matter so far as the manufacturers of spirits in Kentucky are concerned; it is a matter of no consequence of spirits in Kentucky are concerned; it is a matter of no consequence to them, for they are entirely willing to take the first provision as reported by the committee; but after conversation with gentlemen who represent this interest in other States the impression was made upon my mind that the operation of this amendment might be injurious and unjust to them, and in order to avoid doing injustice to anybody, as far as possible, I prepared that substitute, which I think will provide a remedy against fraud and at the same time injure no one.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not say much about the amendment and perhaps I ought not to speak on this subject at all, as I never made any whisky, never stored any, and never drank any. [Laughter and cries of "That's too thin!"] I cannot therefore claim to be an expert or one having knowledge whereof he speaks. Forming my opinion from frequent declarations of my republican friends, I had concluded, before the commencement of the discussion which has been had upon this bill, that the subject of whisky was peculiarly under the charge of the democratic party, that they alone possessed any information concerning it, that the other they alone possessed any information concerning it, that the other side held it in such abhorrence they could scarcely bring themselves to even mention the unclean thing. But it must be admitted, I think, that republican gentlemen have in the discussion evinced an acquaintance with the subject so thorough and intimate that it could hardly have been acquired otherwise than by the closest relations and most frequent actual contact. [Laughter and applause.] Either this or our American politicians and representatives are the most remarkable to be found in any country in the world, for their marvelous versatility of talent extent, and diversity of information upon all substitute of the country of the country in the world, and it is not all substituted in the country in the world, for their marvelous versatility of talent extent and diversity of information upon all substitutes. satility of talent, extent, and diversity of information upon all subjects and their aptitude for its sudden requirement.

The big-brained and accomplished orator from Ohio [Mr. Gar-

The big-brained and accomplished orator from Onlo [Mr. GAR-FIELD] never discussed a ponderous question of statecraft or measure of party policy with more ease and fluency than he did the tax on whisky, [laughter,] displaying a thorough acquaintance with all the different varieties of the article, the methods of their manufacture different varieties of the article, the methods of their manufacture and means of improvement. [Laughter.] While the veteran statesman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] never spoke more eloquently and exhaustibly upon his favorite themes of protection and finance than he has upon the matter of whisky distillation and the proper method of subjecting it to Government taxation. [Laughter.] And my good-natured friend, the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] manifested the same erudition and good feeling which he displays in the discussion of all other questions. [Laughter.]

The only fault I find with his treatment of the question is that he does not seem to appreciate the importance of improving whiskies either by age or the mechanical agencies so familiar to the gentleman does not seem to appreciate the importance of improving whiskies either by age or the mechanical agencies so familiar to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Garfield.] In fact he manifests a total indifference as to whether the whisky is good or bad; but perhaps the quality of the Michigan article may have something to do with this. [Laughter.] Learned as all these gentlemen are upon the subject it is only natural that very wide differences of opinion should exist between them in respect to it, for it would scarcely be possible for so much whisky learning to flow smoothly in the same channel. [Laughter.] I am in favor of this bill and anxious for its passage, because I believe that its provisions are just and fair, both to the Government and every class of dealers. It is an important interest in the city where every class of dealers. It is an important interest in the city where I live, and many of my most reputable and respectable constituents have invested large capital in the business. I am not surprised, however, that it should meet with opposition from various quarters and upon various grounds, but the blow dealt it by my junior colleague [Mr. Simonton] is the cruelest and unkindest of all. He says he wants the consumers to pay the tax. That certainly is in the main the proper method of apportioning taxation. But does not my friend know if it were done in this case, at his suggestion, he would be imposing a most oppressive burden upon his own people? Does he not know that there is less tax paid and more whisky drank in his district to the square mile than in any other similar-sized territory in the United States? [Laughter.] At least no other locality having these characteristics in an equal degree can be found upon any standard map with which I am acquainted. [Laughter.]

Now, I dislike to tell it, but I believe it is susceptible of proof that a large majority of my colleague's constituents have not allowed an hour of daylight to pass since they were three years old without testing the quality of some character of exhilarating liquid, [great laughter,] and that they never had a drink of good whisky except when they came to Memphis to be tried for violation of the revenue law or upon some other business. [Laughter.] I protest, therefore, against this onslaught made by my colleague upon a large and profitable business in which so many of my constituents are engaged, as the only particular interest which his district has in the subject is the amount of whisky which his constituents drink, and the quantity manufactured in a few moonshine distilleries. [Laughter.] I hope, therefore, my colleague will change his mind and support the bill so that we may make good whisky, by keeping it in store for a while, out of the moonshine product of his district.

[Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, I am in favor of this bill because I believe it is as fair and just a one as can be devised to protect the interest of the Government as well as of that of those who are engaged in whisky manufacture, whisky selling, and whisky drink-are engaged in whisky manufacture, whisky selling, and whisky drinking. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I hardly know without giving offense to the democracy—and I am always scrupulously careful about saying anything that will give them offense, as is well known, [laughter]—how to say what I desire to say about the gentleman's charge that I seem to be particularly familiar, without being a democrat, with the subject of whisky. Now, sir, I have but this apology for what knowledge I have, and that is that for a great many years I have been in direct personal contact with the democracy as one of their hand-to-hand opponents their hand-to-hand opponents-[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan the balance of what time I may have left.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. I say that being a hand-to-hand opponent of the democracy, I have been in such close connection with them in my opposition that if I have not been able to feel their influence I have certainly smelt their breath. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, another point the gentleman speaks of. I cannot tell whether the whisky of Memphis has made that, above all other places whether the whisky of Memphis has made that, above all other places in the United States, the most dangerous place to live in and the most dangerous place in the world. I say I do not know whether it is the bad whisky of Memphis that has done this, or whether it is the bad whisky of Memphis that compels my friend to come up into the wholesome region of Michigan to spend his summers. If it is, he might be able to take some good advice from the gentleman from Ohio, or from myself, in order that he might better the whisky of Memphis.

Memphis.

But, sir, he says that he is in favor of this bill. The gentlemen who advocate this bill from either side of the House, and this last section especially, ask Congress to pass a law relieving the Treasury of $1,750,000 a year, according to the last year's estimate; and according to the average of seven months of this year, and the amount of whisky manufactured and stored, relieving the whisky-makers of a tax of $2,000,000. To take that by one act of Congress out of the Treasury and give it to the whisky-makers and whisky-drinkers of this country is the object of this section of the bill.

I gave notice that I should move to strike out this section from the bill if it had not been amended to remedy this. I have a report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in which he says:

I have gone over that subject-

Of this reduction, this leakage-carefully, and I think that the annual allowance for leakage would be equivalent to $1,750,000.

You will find that on page 28 of the report reciting the statement of Mr. Raum before the committee on this subject.

I speak now of this general section, as we are under the five-minute rule and as I have the opportunity, because I desire to know whether this committee or the House, in addition to granting all the whether this committee or the House, in addition to granting all the other claims which the manufacturers of spirits have asked for within the last year or two of this Congress and this House—whether they shall now strike out of the Treasury by one short section one million and three-quarters of dollars. Not only what may hereafter be put into the warehouses and all that, but the whole amount which has been leaking in these warehouses for the last three years.

If the democratic party can stand that reduction of the revenue in favor of their natural beverage, [laughter,] I hope they will have an opportunity of recording their names to that effect in a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. ARMFIELD. I desire to ask if it be in order now to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. ARMFIELD. I desire, if it be proper, to offer an amendment to come in at the close of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the substitute now pending is as far as the committee can go in the reception of amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. FORT. I renew it.

As this section is now under debate I suppose it might just as well be considered, and whatever is to be said for or against the section might as well be said here and now, as upon a motion to strike it out when it comes hereafter. Therefore, by consent of the gentleman from Kentucky and the House, I wish to state first, that I know but very little about whisky in any form. I know scarcely anything about distilling, but I appear before you as a representative of democrats and republicans alike who are engaged in this manufacture, and who ask that this section should be stricken out. I believe every distiller in the city of Peoria but one, and every distiller in the city of Pekin but one, ask that this section should be stricken out; and within a few moments past I have received a dispatch from Woolner Bros., in a few moments past I have received a dispatch from Woolner Bros., of Peoria, the largest distillers in the world, stating that they represent the entire distillers of that place, and ask the House to strike out this section. Now, why † That is for us to consider. Peoria and Pekin, Illinois, make perhaps more whisky and high wines than any other place in the United States. I know they do, a great deal more, more perhaps than is made everywhere else in the United States. They think that this section is not friendly to their business. Why † Because under it those who are engaged in the manufacture of whisky to drink, sour-mash whisky, if you please, are, under the law as it now exists, entitled to place it in bond and let it lie there three years: and then when it comes out of the warehouse the sour-three years; and then when it comes out of the warehouse the sourmash makers only pay tax upon what it gauges out; while the high-wine makers are compelled to pay tax on all that it measures. Thus this section gives, as I understand it, an advantage to the sour-mash distillers of all that the whisky will evaporate in three years' time, which is a very considerable item, and amounts to over a million and a half of dollars.

A MEMBER. A million and three quarters.

Mr. FORT. Now, it seems that we have given to the sour-mash makers an advantage of three years within which they are not compelled to pay that tax. They may wait that long.

Mr. HOUSE. I wish to ask the gentleman, are the high wines not readily sold the moment they are made?

Mr. FORT. Certainly. They are sold the moment they are made. They pay tax upon the whisky as it is made. The sour-mash distillers, having three years, ask that they shall have the benefit of evaporation for three years, and pay tax then on what whisky they shall then measure out. then measure out

Mr. MORRISON. Don't they both pay taxes when they sell?

Mr. FORT. Certainly; they pay tax on all they measure out and all they measure in. That is not the point. I want to call the attention of the committee right to the point. This is a discrimination in favor of the sour-mash distillers.

Mr. MORRISON. You state a discrimination that does not exist. Mr. CARLISLE rose.

Mr. FORT. I come here representing a very large interest and I think I should be permitted to occupy my five minutes, which certainly are not long enough for the discussion of such a question as

Mr. CARLISLE. I wish my friend from Illinois [Mr. Fort] to have all the time he desires. I rose because I thought his time was

Mr. FORT. I do not often trouble the House, and think I should be permitted to proceed.

There is another point to which I desire to advert. We know that There is another point to which I desire to advert. We know that fraudulent manufacturers are all the time watching the Treasury officers, ready to take advantage of everything they can. Under the law as it now is they must pay the tax when they make the whisky. Under this section you allow them to keep the whisky three years longer. It gives fraud three years longer in which to succeed than the high-wine makers have; because they manufacture the whisky today; they measure it to-day; to-morrow they sell it and it is gone.

Mr. WILLIS. Have they not the right to keep it three years if they desire?

Mr. FORT. Certainly they have; but they are engaged in making high wines. My friend's constituents are engaged in making sourmash whisky to drink.

Mr. WILLIS. All my constituents, rectifiers and all, are in favor of this bill. The petition is signed by some of the largest rectifiers in the State of Kentucky.

Mr. FORT. Every distiller in my district is opposed to it.

Mr. WILLIS. I think you are mistaken in that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ARMFIELD. Is an amendment to the amendment now in

The CHAIRMAN. It is.
Mr. ARMFIELD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment as follows:

The tax on spirits distilled from corn, wheat, rye, barley, or other grain, or from any mixture of corn, wheat, rye, barley, or other grain, with other substances, after the 1st day of January, A. D., 1881, shall be fifty cents per gallon; and all laws imposing any tax on spirits distilled exclusively from apples, peaches, pears, grapes, or other fruits, are hereby repealed.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of order on that amendment that it changes existing law and is not in the line of retrenchment.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not a general appropriation bill, and the point of order does not lie.

Mr. PRICE. This is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. But it is not a general appropriation bill. The Clerk will read clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill, &c.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. ARMFIELD. I desire to say a word in advocacy of the amendment I have offered. I fully recognize the duty of Congress to raise by taxation a sufficient sum of money to pay the public debt, both principal and interest, and run the Government. It is not my design in offering this amendment to cripple the Government in its revenue; but it seems to me that the time has now arrived, when we are paying off the public debt at the rate of nearly ten millions a month, when we may reduce the tax upon whisky.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a question of order. Has the Chair ruled upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled upon the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. Will the Chair permit me to make another point of order f

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is on the the point of order when my colleague [Mr. ARMFIELD] is proceeding with his remarks.

Mr. PRICE. Is he discussing the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was overruled.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to make another.

Mr. CABELL. The point of order of the gentleman from Iowa was overruled, and it is not competent for him to take the gentleman from North Carolina when speaking to his amendment off the floor by making another point of order.

ing another point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I desire if that point of order has been overruled to make another point of order. It is that the same subject is in an-make another point of order. It is that the same subject is in another bill being considered now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is too late in making the point of order. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ARM-FIELD] is on the floor, and will proceed.

Mr. ARM-FIELD. In collecting the revenues necessary to run the Government we should be careful not only to collect them in the manner least oppressive but the manner least violative of the views manner least oppressive but the manner least violative of the views and even of the prejudices of the people. In a country like this, where public opinion is stronger than the law itself, it becomes the legislator to regard even the prejudices of the people.

In a large portion of the country that I represent, the mountains of North Carolina, the people have not the conveniences of railroad transportation or navigable waters, and it is impossible for them to transport their grain to market without the expense of transportation eating up a great portion of the value of the grain. The people are therefore compelled in that country in order to market their tion eating up a great portion of the value of the grain. The people are, therefore, compelled in that country, in order to market their grain, to first convert it into whisky.

The present high taxes upon the manufacturer of distilled spirits have had the effect of crushing out all the small distilleries and giving the large distilleries the monopoly of the business. I propose to reduce this tax to fifty cents upon the gallon. That will be such a tax as the people will approve of, and it will stop all efforts on their part to evade the revenue law.

In regard to that portion of my amendment proposing to repeal the tax on brandy made from fruit, grapes, &c., I desire to say that I do not believe there is the same reason for imposing a tax upon brandy as there is upon whisky, because the manufacturer of brandy does not in any way interfere with the supply of breadstuffs for the country.

Then, also, in a country like that which I have described, far from railroads and means of transportation to market, the fruit in the orchards is often left to rot on the ground. I have myself seen thousands of bushels of apples rotting in the orchards of the farmers because they could find no market for the apples, and they could not convert them into brandy on account of the oppressive internal-rev-convert them into brandy on account of the oppressive internal-revenue laws. For this reason I have offered this amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course it is impossible to discuss the whole subject covered by section 17 of this bill within the short period of five minutes. I desire, however, to say a few words in reply to what was said by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Fort.] That gentleman seemed to be laboring under the impression that the passage of this bill words are incapable to be presented to the manufacturers of high said by the gentleman from linnois, [Afr. FORT.] That gentleman seemed to be laboring under the impression that the passage of this bill would work some inequality between the manufacturers of high wines and the manufacturers of what are known as fine whiskies. The gentleman very correctly stated that as a general thing manufacturers of high wines pay their tax immediately upon the production of the article. That is true, for the reason that, as a general thing, they sell the spirits immediately after they are produced. It is not true that under the present law, or under this bill if it shall become law, the high-wine makers will be required to pay the tax upon a single drop of spirits not manufactured and sold. At present there is a gross inequality in the law between the manufacturers of the finer whiskies and the manufacturers of high wines, for the very reason that high wines are ready for the market the moment they come from the still, and as a general thing are sold immediately after they, come from the still, and the tax is then paid upon it. The manufacturer of high wines pays, therefore, no tax until he actually sells the article, when he immediately gets his tax back from the purchaser. He does not pay the tax upon a single drop of spirits not sold by him.

How is it with the manufacturer of the other grades of spirits? His product when it comes from the still is not ready for the market, but it is immediately drawn into packages, gauged, marked, and branded for tayation. Afterward when it is withdrawn from the weaponse.

it is immediately drawn into packages, gauged, marked, and branded for taxation. Afterward when it is withdrawn from the warehouse and put on the market for sale, although there may be a loss of ten gallons on each package, he is required to pay tax at the rate of ninety cents per gallon upon the whole quantity which went into the warehouse. He is thus compelled to pay tax on a large quantity of spirits which he does not sell, which in fact has no existence, but which has evaporated into the air, while the manufacturer of high wines, as I have already said, does not pay tax upon a drop of spirits that he does

There is still another class of distillers known in the law as continuous distillers; that is, men who not only distill the spirits but who rectify, refine, or purify them before they leave their own establishments. Under the present law these continuous distillers receive an exemption to the extent of about 5 per cent. upon the whole product of their distilleries.

floor.

Mr. PRICE. Is he discussing the point of order?

Mr. SCALES. It is too late for the gentleman from Iowa to make of the gentlemen who appeared before the Committee on Ways and I can show from the official surveyed capacity of his distillery on file in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that one Means in opposition to this bill, and who is himself a continuous distiller, receives an allowance, upon which he pays no tax to the Government, amounting to 172,800 gallons of spirits every three years, equivalent to $155,520 of tax. And if time would permit me I can demonstrate to this committee the process by which this result is reached.

No wonder that this class of distillers should be opposed to this bill, because if passed it would put other manufacturers of distilled spirits upon the same footing with themselves, and allow to them the privilege of paying tax only upon their products which they actually sell in the market, giving to them a reasonable allowance for the evaporation and leakage which take place during the natural process of

The ordinary distiller is required by the law to pay a tax upon the full quantity of spirits which comes from the receiving cistern of the distillery, no matter how much may be lost afterward by evaporation or leakage before the spirits go upon the market. But the continuous distiller is allowed to take the product of the still from the receiving cistern into other tubs and vessels and there subject it to a certain process for refining and rectifying it, and after that process, which fits it for the market, which gives it a higher value, and by which it loses from 4 to 5 per cent. in quantity, the article is for the first time gauged, marked, and branded for taxation. So that the certificate the process is a supplied to the continuous distiller was to worm the refined the particle of the certification. continuous distiller pays tax upon the refined, the purified, the rectified article, ready for market, enhanced in value by the process to which he subjects it; while the other distiller pays the tax upon the crude product as it first comes from the still without any allowance crude product as it first comes from the still without any anowance whatever for waste, absorption, evaporation, or leakage.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PRICE. I suggest that there has been but one speech on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, the speech made by himself. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] has an endment of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] has spoken upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Now I claim the floor to take the negative side upon the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot control the line of remark which may be pursued by gentlemen obtaining the floor.

Mr. PRICE. The Chair is very well aware that what I have said a sweatly served.

is exactly correct

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] did not speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] should have raised the point of order at the time.

Mr. PRICE. I am not raising a point of order. I rise, as is my right, to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

The amendment of Mr. ARMFIELD was again read.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to amend by striking out the word spirits" wherever it occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is now in order.
Mr. SIMONTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—whether the amendment just reported is an amendment to the pending amendment or an amendment to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle,] who proposes a substi-tute for the amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Armfield, there were—ayes 41, noes 72; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Armfield and Mr. Conger were

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 84.

So the amendment of Mr. Armfield was not agreed to. Mr. LOWE. Is there any chance to get the yeas and nays on this proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. None.

Mr. SCALES. I move as an amendment to the amendment the

That all brandies hereafter made by the owner or lessee on his own farm, from apples, peaches, and grapes which are the products of said farm, be, and are hereby, exempted from taxation.

Those who have heard this amendment will see—
Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill. The amendment undertakes to regulate the tax on spirits, while the pending bill does not in any manner attempt to regulate the taxes on any of the subjects under consideration.

Mr. CARLISLE. The bill before the House does not touch upon brandies in any way whatever.

Mr. CONGER. It does not attempt to regulate the taxation on spirits at all.

Mr. SCALES. I rise to discuss the point of order. I submit that the bill before the House—

Mr. PRICE. I want to give notice that if the decision of the Chair should be adverse to the pending point of order, I have a point of order to submit; and I will try to make it in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the point of order of the gentleman from Iowa in due season.

Mr. SCALES.

Mr. SCALES. I understand that this bill (though I am not very familiar with its provisions) makes a very considerable change in the revenue laws of the country; and by this change, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] himself admits, there will be a reduction of taxation to the amount of one or two million dollars. This amendment is germane to the revenue laws; it is offered as part of the revenue laws. Those laws being under consideration in this bill, they are clearly amendable by the adoption of such a proposition as I submit.

I do not see, Mr. Chairman, that it makes any difference whether the proposed reduction of tax relates to tobacco or whisky or brandy. I propose a reduction of taxation under the revenue laws. The amendment is in order, because the bill to which it is offered is a modifica-tion of the revenue laws. My amendment only proposes a still further modification.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan. This is a bill affecting the revenue laws; and the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina has relation to the same subject-matter.

Mr. PRICE. I make the further point of order that the same matter embraced in this amendment is now before the House in a sepa-

Mr. SCALES. What bill, I ask the gentleman?
Mr. PRICE. I have not the bill before me, but my friend will not dispute the fact.

Mr. SCALES. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa is that this amendment is in substance the same as a bill which is pending before the House.

is pending before the House.

Mr. PRICE. The same question is exactly in another bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The same in substance?

Mr. SCALES. Allow me a moment on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. SCALES. I suppose the gentleman from Iowa refers to a bill introduced by me early in the extra session, but that is a general bill reducing the tax on brandies made from grapes, apples, and peaches.

This is not a general bill, but is a provision simply to reduce tax on brandy made by small farmers in the country, made by themselves on their own farms, and has no reference to brandy made by anybody else or at any place.

on their own farms, and has no reference to brandy made by any body else or at any place.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me to ask him whether there is not a bill now pending before the Ways and Means Committee to effect the same thing this amendment

Mr. SCALES. No, sir; there is a bill which does more than this, but there is no bill, so far as I know, which does this and does no more.

Mr. CARLISLE. I did not hear the reading of the amendment dis-

Mr. CARLISTE. I did not hear the reading of the tinetly.

Mr. SCALES. I will state to the gentleman that my amendment applies distinctly and only to brandy made by farmers from fruit which is the product of their farms, and extends no further.

The amendment to the amendment was again read.
